An Able English Jest.

Saturn is the most unfortunate planet in existence, for though it has several rings it is unable to pawn any one of them.—London Telegraph.

A Georgia pastor, who resigned because he couldn't collect his salary, said in his farewell sermon: "I have little else to add, dear brethren, save this: You were all in favor of free salvation, and the manner in which you have treated me is proof that you got it!"

RECKLESS LORD LAWRENCE.

He Carried the Kohinoor in His Vest Pocket and Forgot About It.

The Kohinoor, Queen Victoria's most famous jewel, and one of the biggest and most celebrated diamonds in the world, has been much written about, and its adventures among Eastern potentates and thieves traced with much research, but one of the queerest things supposed to it befel after it came into English hands and is very little known.

The Punjaub was annexed in 1849, and the East India Company took possession of the Lahore treasury, as the Lahore government was deep in their debt.

The Kohinoor was the greatest treasure of the treasury, and it was stipulated in the agreements signed by both parties that it should be presented to Queen Victoria. At a meeting of the East India board the "mountain of light" was given into the care of John, afterward Lord Lawrence.

Mr. Lawrence must have been in a singular frame of mind at the time, for he put the gem in his waistcoat pocket, and, in his own phrase, "thought no more about it."

This is unaccountable but true, for he went home, changed his clothes for dinner and did not wear nor handle that waistcoat for a day or two. Then came a message from Lord Dalhousie to the board, asking for the diamond, that it might be forwarded to the queen.

"Well," said John Lawrence to his brother Henry, "send it at once."

"Why, you have it," said Henry.

Lord Lawrence all his life would tell of the terror that then seized him.

"This is the worst trouble I ever got into," he said to himself, as the cold sweat started on his forehead.

But when he got out his discarded waistcoat there unfortunately was the great Kohinoor that Turk and Persian and Hindoo conquerors had shed rivers of blood to possess.—Golden Days.

MATCHES IN MEXICO.

The People There Do Not Like Those Manufactured at Home.

An inquiry in regard to the possibility of profitably establishing an American match factory in or near Mexico City has elicited the fact that there are no phosphorous matches in use in Mexico, or any with wooden sticks. The small quantity of matches made of wax, about 1 inch in length, and practically odorless. The heads are very similar to those used on the parlor matches in the United States, and while they can be ignited otherwise, they light best on a small strip of sandpaper which is put for the purpose on one side of the box. In lighting these matches, a newcomer invariably holds them head down, as he would a wooden match; but he soon finds out that Adonis watched him until he saw him they burn better the other way. They are sold in small boxes, for 10, 25 and 50 silver per box. Travelers in Mexico who have bought strawberries at the railway stations, or even in the markets, have reason to recognize the cleverness of the contents of the pretty boxes in boxes which appear to hold a great deal more than they actually do. The same experience holds good in the matter of buying matches. The boxes look to be of fair size, and appear to hold a considerable number; but examination on examination they are found to have raised bottoms and stuffed sides, and their contents are decidedly slim. Practically, no matches are imported into Mexico, as the people do not like either the wooden match or the bile-odor of the phosphorous matches, and the other kind can be made there more cheaply than they can be imported. For this reason, it is doubtful whether a successful American factory for match production could be started in Mexico, at all events at present.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Railroad Passes Made of Silver.

Most people are quite pleased to have a railroad pass of common pasteboard, with the general passenger agent's signature scrawled in one corner, in the ink of sickly hue usually found in railroad offices. But would you like to have a pass, good for your whole life, on solid silver, and engraved at a famous silversmith's?

President Thomson, of the Pennsylvania lines, has issued a silver pass to Mr. Edgar Thomson, Mrs. Thomas Scott and Mrs. John B. Roberts, widows of former presidents of the road. The silver transportation cards are good on any train or car of the whole system of the road. They are just a little larger than a ladies' visiting card, and can be carried conveniently in the card case.

President Thomson is fond of making his passes valuable souvenirs. He has presented the members of the board of directors with a silver pass, which also takes the shape of a silver dollar.—New York Journal.

Not Against High Rate.

The Bohemians in Austria have made up their minds that a tail hat is a badge of decency, and it is as much as a man's life is worth to appear in Czech town wearing a "stovepipe." The cowboy of the West used to shoot the hat for fun, but never killed the wearer, except by accident, but the Czechs are more bitter. A high hat on a Czech has the same effect as a red flag on a bull; if he does not kill the offender, it is because he can't. The other day at a railway station a large crowd assembled to bid farewell to a well-known burgher, and the train arrived. Doctor Jindrich, a judicial functionary, traveling on official business, stepped out, and he wore a high hat. Instantly it was knocked off, and he had to run for his life. This feat landed a dozen of the men in jail, but the Czechs are still on the warpath.—Golden Days.

PICTURES BY WIRE.

Transmitted as Easily as a Message—No Limit as to Distance.

Ernest A. Hummel, of St. Paul, Minn., is the inventor of a device by which photographs can be sent from place to place by telegraph quite as easily as any ordinary message.

There is no limit to the distance over which pictures can be sent any more than the limit to which electricity can carry an ordinary message. Mr. Hummel's experiments have proved the success of his device were made over a wire 320 miles long.

Mr. Hummel is a young manufacturing jeweller in St. Paul, and his invention is the result of numerous experiments thought out and carried out during all his spare moments for the last two years. He believes the instrument will be especially valuable in helping to catch criminals fleeing from justice by scattering their photographs over the country with the speed of electricity instead of with the comparatively slow medium of the mails. This, however, is only an incidental use for the invention. Scores of ways the device can be put to practical use.

The Hummel invention takes up about the same space as a typewriter and its table, or a sewing machine. Its principal features, of course, are the transmitter and receiver. Each of these is operated by a diminutive electric motor, hardly as large as the case of a gentleman's watch. It has also a rather complicated system of clockwork which controls the movements as part of the machine.

The transmitter and receiver each has a moving carriage, operated by the electric motor. In these carriages are fixed the pencils with which used in copying the pictures to be sent. The carriage of the transmitter has a projecting arm with a vulcanized rubber extremity, in which is fitted a sharp platinum point.

By an ingenious device the clock work moves this platinum point at very minute distance from the line in which it moved before. A screw and triple series of ratchets are provided by which the width between the lines can be regulated.

When a picture is to be sent over the wire it is first traced through a carbon paper upon a metal plate. Then the lines on the plate are brought out by a solution of shellac, which is a non-conductor of electricity.

After this machine is connected with the electric circuit so the platinum point is set in motion each time it encounters a strip of shellac the circuit is broken. This break in the circuit throws down against the receiving paper in the complementary part of the machine a little ink-ball which attaches into the surfaces a line corresponding to the course taken by the platinum point while on the shellac insulation. When the platinum point has passed over the shellac and the circuit is again closed the needle point is lifted.

It goes without saying that the harmonious working of the delicate instruments require the most careful adjustment of the clockwork which controls the movements. This adjustment Mr. Hummel reaches by several whirling fans, somewhat like the governors of a steam engine, but with discs instead of spheres.—New York Herald.

"OLD COMPARISON."

The Subriquet Most Fittingly Applied to the Old Man.

The people around the little mountain town called him "Old Comparison."

One day an acquaintance was passing his house and he was sitting on the steps of the little vine-clad porch in front.

"Good morning," said the gentleman. "It's a lovely day."

"Fine," said the old man responded. "How are you this morning?"

"Friskier'n a colt."

"How's your wife?"

"Purtier'n a pink."

"The weather is very hot and dry for this season, don't you think?"

"Hotter'n a run horse and drier'n a clean shirt."

"I suppose you went to the wedding last night in the meeting-house? A pretty bride, I thought."

"Putier'n a speckled dog."

"The young man is rich, I hear."

"Richer'n fertiliser a foot thick."

"By the way, are you willing to sell me those newlyn Brown couldn't take off your hands?"

"Willliser'n a girl to get spliced."

"When can I see them?"

"Quicker'n a lamb can shake his tail."

And the old man pushed his hat and stick and led the way to the river, offering no remark, but answering all inquiries as usual.—Takima, Wash., Herald.

Mark Twain's Yell.

Mark Twain, when starting on a tour round the world, told an interviewer at Winnipeg how he often felt a desire to "cut loose" from civilization and to get away by himself where he could run and yell to his heart's content. In this connection there is a story about the humorist and Canon Kingsley. Walking along the streets one day Mark felt the impulse to yell coming on him with resistible force, and said to Kingsley: "I want to yell; I must yell!" The Canon said: "All right, yell away; I don't mind." "And with that," said Mark, "I stepped back a few steps, and, throwing my arms above my head, let out a roar whoop that could be heard for miles, and in less time than you could count ten Canon Kingsley and myself were surrounded by a multitude of anxious citizens who wanted to know what was the matter. I told them nothing was the matter; I just wanted to yell, and had yelled."—Nashville Banner.

ANECDOTES OF MACREADY.

He Played Better When in a Genuine Passion Before Going on the Stage.

Mr. Sala charged Macready with having habitually used foul and blasphemous language behind the scenes. An apologist hints that Mr. Sala may have been led astray by the fact that in the last act of "Macbeth" Macready invariably lashed himself into a sort of fever, which he aggravated by using all sorts of strong expressions. When Mr. Phelps played Macduff to him for the first time, he was not a little amazed during the fight at the close of the last act, to hear Macready call him a beast, a scoundrel, t hell-born villain, a base-born cur and a devil. Full of resentment, Phelps hurled back the epithets with energy, and heaped foul names upon Macready. At the close Macready said:—

"Thank you, Mr. Phelps, thank you; I've never been so well supported."

In another play, where it was necessary to enter in a passion fury, full of rage, exhibiting the gasping exhaustion of mad passion. Macready used to have a hired "super" whom he would grapple and shake and curse at, off the stage, so that he could enter naturally. One night the supply "super" sent a substitute who did not quite understand the business. He resented Macready's rough treatment, which delighted the tragedian, who went at his man with increased vigor. The substitute presently "got his back up" in earnest, grasping. The struggle was all take place in the hall at 8 o'clock in the evening.

On Thursday will be alumnae day. At 10 o'clock a meeting for organization will be held in the music hall. The Rev. Joseph Stenger of Charleston, the first chaplain of the Mount, will deliver an address. A banquet will follow in the evening.

At the request of the sisters the following ladies constituted themselves a committee to look after the arrangements for the meeting to be held for the purpose of organizing an alumnae association: Mrs. Howard Simpson, Mrs. Platoff Zane, Mrs. Martha Whitaker, Mrs. Jacob Grubb, Misses Della Carr, Augusta Handlan, Tillie Riley, Martha Medill, Anna Reymann, Helen Devries, Emma Johnson and Amy Nash. Any one who has been for a year a pupil of the Visitation academy while located in Wheeling or at Mount de Chantal will be eligible to membership in the association.

Every day letters are received expressing delight at the hope of again visiting Mount de Chantal. Pupils of 1848 and 1887 write that they feel young and girlish again at the very thought of renewing the associations of their childhood and again meeting the sisters whom they all love so dearly. Meetings are being held in several cities.—Wheeling Register.

Chaplain Childwick's Gold Chalice.

The gold chalice of Chaplain Childwick was recently recovered from the wreck of the Maine, to the delight of that good man. It was presented to him by the crew of the Maine, who revered him as a priest and admired him as a man. The chalice was studded with diamonds and was valuable. Although the chaplain valued the gift highly he had never asked any one to search for it, fearing to delay the work of recovering the dead imprisoned beneath the wreck.—Boston Herald.

NOTES OF THE CATHOLICS.

There are 250 Roman Catholic orphan asylums in the United States.

During the nine years of its existence the Catholic University of America at Washington has educated over 200 priests.

It is stated that the French Roman Catholics in Budda, west of Lake Victoria, in Africa, estimate their proselytes at 20,000.

A month's mind requiem mass for the repose of the souls of the sisters of the Catholic Mission was recently celebrated at St. Francis Xavier's church, New York city.

Father Rene, prefect apostolic of Alaska, has gone to Paris to obtain funds for the furtherance of mission work among the miners. He requires ten more missionaries.

The Jesuits have a church, hospital and school in Dawson City. At last accounts the hospital had 26 patients, nursed by miners, the regular nurses not having arrived from Montreal.

The pope, though not able to sleep more than two hours in a night, often spends all the waking hours in his secretary, or for diversion composes verses in Latin. His mind is said to be perfectly clear.

The kindly feeling between the Roman Catholics and Protestants of Andover was shown several years ago when the Catholic church was burned. Every parish in town offered the use of its church to the burned out congregation.

A little volume by Laura Bride Powers recently published in San Francisco makes an earnest plea for the preservation of buildings of the California mission establishments, the lonely and ruined of the early Catholic fathers on the Pacific slope.

The Society For the Propagation of the Faith of New York city was recently incorporated, the object being to perform missionary work for the Catholic church. The trustees are Archbishop Corrigan, Bishop John Farley, Very Rev. Joseph F. Mooney and other noted Catholic divines.

MOUNT DE CHANTAL.

PLANS FOR THE ACADEMY'S GOLDEN JUBILEE CELEBRATION.

It Will Last Three Days—Noted Catholic Clergymen Will Be Present—Former Pupils Intend to Attend the Exercises and Will Form an Alumnae Association.

Preparations are being made on an elaborate scale for the celebration of the golden jubilee of Mount de Chantal, the famous institution of learning near Wheeling, which will take place on June 7, 8 and 9. At the academy everything shows activity. Preparations are being made for further illuminating the grounds. Arc lights are to be attached to the dynamo now in use at the academy, which will give a fine effect to the already well lighted grounds.

The celebration will not only attract all the former pupils who can be present, but there will be an assemblage of distinguished Catholic clergymen, several of whom will make addresses. His excellency the Most Rev. Sebastian Martinelli, D. D., has accepted an invitation to be present at the jubilee.

On Tuesday, the first day, the exercises will open with a solemn pontifical mass of thanksgiving in the chapel, with the Right Rev. P. J. Donahue, D. D., as celebrant. The sermon will be preached by the Most Rev. John J. Kain, D. D., archbishop of St. Louis. In the evening there will be a dramatic entertainment by the present pupils of the academy in the hall.

At 10 o'clock Wednesday morning solemn pontifical requiem mass will be celebrated in the chapel for the late lamented Right Rev. R. V. Whelan, first bishop of Wheeling. The sermon will be preached by Rev. F. T. McCarthy, a prominent Jesuit. The distinguished commencement exercises will take place in the hall at 8 o'clock in the evening.

On Thursday will be alumnae day. At 10 o'clock a meeting for organization will be held in the music hall. The Rev. Joseph Stenger of Charleston, the first chaplain of the Mount, will deliver an address. A banquet will follow in the evening.

At the request of the sisters the following ladies constituted themselves a committee to look after the arrangements for the meeting to be held for the purpose of organizing an alumnae association: Mrs. Howard Simpson, Mrs. Platoff Zane, Mrs. Martha Whitaker, Mrs. Jacob Grubb, Misses Della Carr, Augusta Handlan, Tillie Riley, Martha Medill, Anna Reymann, Helen Devries, Emma Johnson and Amy Nash. AN ABSENT-MINDED MAN.

The Clubman Believed in Obeying Orders to the Letter.

"When I was younger than I will ever be again," said the professor with a three-story head and eyeglasses of telescopic power, "I was the victim of such intense mental abstraction that I removed myself entirely from the world of practical affairs. I was in the boundless realms of thought and paid but fleeting attention to the active field of human activity. It is necessary to notify me when I should attend my classes, eat my meals and even when I should retire.

"I was at one time requested to lecture in a western village, and agreed to do so. The theme was one that had received my best thoughts, and the mere prospect of delivering it was a physical pleasure. When I arrived at the depot my thoughts were concentrated upon the proposed address. I realized that my train was an hour late and that I must hurry, but beyond the mere fact of hurrying I did not grasp it at all.

"'Drive fast!' I shouted to the driver of a dingy-looking vehicle as I sprang in and handed him a five dollar bill. 'Spare neither horse nor whip.

"On my way we went with a plunge. The carriage rolled like a ship in the trough of the sea. Street lights seemed a torchlight procession moving rapidly the other way. Constables shouted, dogs barked, small boys chased us and telephone poles that people might stand on the sidewalk sprang up. Up one street and down another we dashed madly. We took corners on two wheels, grazed telegraph poles and knocked over such provables as ash barrels and dry goods boxes.

"After a ride that was the bewilderling experience, I stuck my head from the window and shouted: 'Are we nearly there?'

"'Where did yez want to go, sor?' came the edifying answer."—Detroit Free Press.

MAKING $2,000 EASILY.

A John Which Enriched Its Author Beyond Expectation.

A certain speculator had need of a large sum of money for his operations, and found himself with a very small balance in that bank. He consulted a friend as to how he could get over the emergency. The friend suggested that he should draw on somebody in another city. The operator said he knew no *one that owed him, and the friend in*sisted on it that he would make no difference if the draft did not return too soon.

The operator reflected a time and then wrote out a draft on the Sultan of Turkey for £2,000 and deposited it in the bank. The draft came into the hands of the Rothschilds, who forwarded it to Constantinople, and it was duly presented to the Sultan's chamberlain.

"Who is this man?" asked the chamberlain of the Sultan's treasurer.

"Don't know him," replied the treasurer.

"Do we owe him anything?" asked the chamberlain.

"No," replied the other.

"Then do not pay it," decided the chamberlain.

"But if I might advise," said the crafty treasurer, "this draft comes through the Rothschilds with whom we are negotiating a loan. Would it not, under the circumstances, to dishonor it?"

"Pay it," said the Sultan's chamberlain, and so the speculator was £2,000 richer than he knew, to his own great astonishment.—London Telegraph.

NATIVE HAWAIIAN WOMEN.

Those of the Mixed Blood Prouder of the Kanaka Than of the Anglo-Saxon Part.

Hawaiian women have a wonderful charm of manner, and their smiling faces, dark, lustrous eyes and soft voices have a fascination about them that cannot be easily defined. They carry themselves with a grace and dignity peculiarly their own—even the flower women, with their pretty lei customs—though their feet may be bare, have a queenly air that is rarely seen except in the Anglo-Saxon of the upper class.

Hawaiian women are proud of their blood, those of mixed blood prouder of the dark strain, which often comes by ancestry of chiefs. It is one of the strong characteristics of both men and women—even those of mixed blood, who are of more pensive and intense nature —that where white blood predominates their first loyalty and pride is in the Hawaiian blood.—Chicago Times Herald.

The Lesson of the Prodigal.

The lesson was from the Prodigal Son, and the teacher was dwelling on the character of the elder brother.

"But amid-all the rejoicing," he said, "there was one to whom the preparation of the feast brought no joy, to whom the prodigal's return gave no pleasure, but only bitterness; one who did not approve of the feast being held, and who had no wish to attend it. Now can any of you tell me who this was?"

There was a pause, then a small boy, followed by a vigorous cracking of thumbs, and then from a dozen sympathetic little geniuses came the chorus:

"Please sir, it was the fatted calf!"—Aberdeen Journal.

PEARLS AND PEARL SHELLS.

Treasures That Are Taken from the Indian Ocean and Persian Gulf.

In St. Nicholas Capt. H. D. Smith of the United States revenue cutter service tells of his experiences, "Hunting for Shells," from the Island of Ceylon to the Dry Tortugas. Capt. Smith says:

Pearl shells are valuable, and fine specimens are hard to obtain. They are found in the Treasmotee, Gambier and Tribual groups of islands. The choicest come from Nacassar; these are the white-edged shells, worth $300 a ton, and from these the finest pearl buttons are manufactured.

The most valuable pearl fisheries lie near the coast of Ceylon, the Persian Gulf and in the waters of Java and Sumatra. The Australian coast in the neighborhood of Shark's bay and at Roebuck bay furnishes some very large shells, some of them weighing from two to three pounds each. The fisheries of Baja, Gulf of California, are very rich. France controlling the gems procured there. The most of the pearl oyster is readily bought by the Japanese, who dry the leathery little bivalves or seal them up in cans and ship them to their countrymen in San Francisco. The pearl shells readily sell upon the spot at from $1.50 to $5 per pound.

Pearls are of various colors, and in India the red pearls were highly prized by the Buddhists, who used them in adorning their temples. Pearls are formed to protect the shell fish. They are due to a secretion of a shelly substance around some irritating particle, and itself competition is the same as that of mother-of-pearl.

A FISH STORY.

It Was Homesick for Old Friends and Moped Without Them.

Among a lot of golden trout from Sunapee Lake received at the New York Aquarium in December last, there was one fine big brook trout taken from the same water. At the Aquarium the golden trout were placed in a tank by themselves; the brook trout was put into a tank of lake trout from the interior of New York state.

The golden trout from Sunapee thrived; the brook trout that came with them, now in with the lake trout, did not. It held aloof from the other fish in the tank, and never fed well, and was not interested in anything.

Two or three weeks ago the tank that the brook trout was in was needed for something else, and the fish in it were shifted. The brook trout from Sunapee was put into the tank with the golden trout with which it had been reared. From that day it was another fish. It no longer moped away the time off in some corner by itself, but it lined up with the golden trout, and slashed around the tank with them, and pranced around on its own account quite at home. It fed well, and was as chipper as a fish could be, and has been so ever since.

A New Subscriber.

"Say, kernel," he said, as he walked into the editor's office and stamped about in the mud-pards off of his boots against the legs of the stove, "I sorter thought I'd take your paper or you'd do the square thing."

"Why, of course; we are always glad to accommodate our subscribers."

"Well, here's a little obituary of Aunt Kaline—hit's jest ten pages o' foolscap, an' won't make much, I reckon."

"We'll print it."

"An' you'll send forty copies of the paper to this 'ere list o' relatives, won't you?"

"Yes."

"An' next week my daughter Serfily is goin' to get married. I reckon you'll print a hull lot about that."

"Of course; that's news."

"An' say, I've got one of the finest young shotes you ever have saw. I want you to come out some day and write up hit."

"I shall be glad to do so."

"You hain't got a dozen or two old magazines what you'd done read layin' around handy, hev you?"

"Yes; here's three or four."

"Thanky. Jes' put me down for three months, an' I'll hand you the quarter 'long this fall some time."

Oriental Pile Driving.

In Japan and China, women drive piles for houses and bridges. Their method is interesting. Attached to the hammer block are twenty-seven ropes, carried up to the top of the frame and on the outside looking very much like the old-fashioned May-pole. Twenty-seven women hold the ends of the ropes, and with a sing-song all together pull down; up travels the hammer until at a scream, all let go, and down it comes on top of the pile, which is unprotected by a band or ring. This May-pole driver is in general use throughout Japan and China.

Equal to the Occasion.

An old lawyer in Paris had instructed his client to weep every time he struck the desk with his hand, but forgot and struck the desk at the wrong moment. She promptly fell to sobbing and cried:

"What is the matter with you?" asked the judge.

"Well, he told me to cry as often as he struck the table."

"Gentlemen of the jury," cried the unabashed lawyer, "let me ask you how you can reconcile the idea of crime in connection with such candor and simplicity?"—L'Illustration.

A FASCINATING ISLAND.

Where It Is True for Forgetting Everything to Its Languorous Delight.

"Of all fascinating places under the sun," said a gentleman who has traveled much, "the island of Tahiti, one of the Society islands, is the most fascinating. In that country a little earth lost in a vast ocean, nature has done everything to make indolent souls happy. The climate is temperate and even all the year round, the vegetation is luxuriant, the women beautiful, and the nights, full of perfume and mystical light, stir the most practical mind to love of meditation and dreaming. The influence of this dreamy, lazy life is very insidious. It is not necessary to work, for the island furnishes food without the labor of tillage. I know a number of Americans and French who have gone there for a visit, and have become so enraptured with the languorous existence that, like the Hindoos of Bengal, they lie down and forget friends, home, ambition and everything. I remember how I used to feel the influence steal upon me. Many a time I wished earnestly to cast my lot with those languorous people. I can look back now and see myself as I lay on night against a cocoanut tree in a sort of ecstacy of meditation. Overhead was a sky bright with a million stars. Sounds came to me in a strange fashion, blending into a murmur. A short distance away a group of natives, girls and men, were shouting the rhythmic chant of the spoon dance. I thought of myself on this little isle, with ocean on every side and New Orleans so many miles distant. Nothing seemed real to me but that spot in which one could hear indistinctly the chant of the singers and the subbing of the waves; a mysterious charm possessed me."—Mexican Herald.

HOW THEY RAILROAD IN CHINIA.

Some of the Difficulties Under Which the Roads Are Conducted.

A missionary writing from China to a friend in this city recently described the difficulties under which the newly completed railroads are conducted in that country.

Passengers in the first-class coaches, he said, exhibited so strong a desire to carry off various articles from the cars as souvenirs of their visit that the coaches were speedily stripped of these things that contribute to the comfort of the passenger. They took away with them hat and bundle racks, mirrors, lamp brackets, hooks, small tables, and even doors. They were constantly stealing the whole car frame and wheels. And the purloiners were government officials and people belonging to the wealthy classes.

The stations along the railroad over which the writer traveled were rude sheds, very unclean, and without a chair or bench. Here, too, they were very dirty. While this was especially true of the second-class coaches, which were often times crowded with half-naked, unwashed people, the first-class coaches also became very unclean in a short time. It was, therefore necessary to take out all the upholstery and replace it by plain seats.

When the railroads were being built reports were spread that the foreign contractors were stealing Chinese children and burying them in the roadbed so as to propitiate the god who rules over railroads. These reports greatly excited the people, and in one instance a mob attacked two missionaries near Pekin, and would have killed them had not a detachment of soldiers rescued them. Under guise of these reports children were really kidnapped and taken into the cities for immoral purposes.—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

A RAFFLE FOR SOULS.

A Peculiar Notice in a Catholic Church in Mexico.

The Rev. Francis S. Borton, a missionary in Pueblo, Mex., says, in the Christian Endeavor World, that he recently saw the following notice in a Roman Catholic church in Mexico:

"Raffle for Souls—At the last Raffle for Souls the following numbers obtained the prize, and by lucky lot may be assured that their loved ones are forever released from the flames of purgatory:

"Ticket 841—The soul of the lawyer James Vasquez is released from purgatory and ushered into heavenly joys.

"Ticket 41—The soul of Mme. Calderon is made happy forever.

"Ticket 762—The soul of the aged widow Francisca de Parras is forever released from the flames of purgatory.

"Another raffle for souls will be held at this same blessed Church of the Redeemer on January 31, at which four bleeding and tortured souls will be released from purgatory to heaven, according to the four highest tickets in this most holy lottery. Tickets, $1. To be had of the father in charge. Will you, for the poor sum of $1, leave your loved ones to burn in purgatory for ages?"

Considerate Arab Widow.

When an Arab woman is tired of widowhood and desires to marry again, she goes the night before the wedding to her husband's tomb and prays him not to be offended. To make quite sure of his forgiveness, she brings with her two large goatskins, filled with water, and with these she waters the grave, that the refreshing liquid may soak down to the dead man's husband's bones. Having thus done all she can to propitiate his spirit, she goes off with a good courage to start life again as a wife.

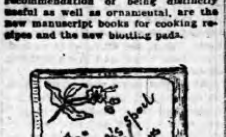
Inclined to Fret.

It is a great misfortune to have a fretful disposition. It takes the fragrance out of one's life. The habit of fretting is one that grows rapidly, unless it be sternly repressed.

DECORATIVE NEEDLE WORK A FAD.

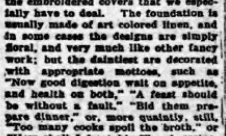
Some Useful and Pretty Novelties in the Shape of Home Made Books.

It is always pleasant to find a new object upon which decorative needlework can be displayed, and during the warm weather particularly, fancy work of all kind appears to occupy all women's fingers. The novelties which have the additional recommendation of being distinctly useful as well as ornamental, are the new manuscript books for cooking recipes and the new blotting pads.



The former are nice, firm little books, about the size of an ordinary blotting case, and good, lined paper pages, and thick enough to hold a generous supply of recipes; but it is with the embroidered covers that we especially have to deal. The foundation is usually made of art colored linen, and in some cases the designs are simply floral, and very much like other fancy work; but the daintiest are decorated with appropriate mottoes, such as "Now good digestion wait on appetite, and health on both," "A feast should be without a fuss," "Eat thou and prare dinner," or, more quaintly, still, "Too many cooks spoil the broth," or "How shall I feast him?" A recipe-book with the latter inscription upon it would be a most acceptable wedding present for a young housekeeper.

The corners and sides of these covers are filled in principally with arabesques or quaint devices. One of the latter, which had three conventional roses very cleverly worked in shades of pearly-blue flax, to represent the scales, was particularly attractive and pretty.



The ordinary blotting pad is a useful article, but when not in actual use and lying with the soiled blotting paper upwards, it certainly is not an ornament to a dainty writing table. Therefore a good plan is to have a pretty case into which the blotting pads can be easily slipped, and to decorate the back of it with artistic embroidery.

No scheme of "colors" is given to the serviceable blotting-pad by this cover, but by simply placing it face downwards upon the table, the embroidered back comes fully into view, and instead of a blemish, it becomes an additional beauty.

For the decoration of these covers, the favorite motto embroidery is again very much in evidence, such sentences as "Thoughts that breathe and words that burn," "With this conversing I forget all time," and "The pen is mightier than the sword," being particularly appropriate.

The Headdress Popular.

The headdress has apparently come to stay. It is the rarest thing nowadays to see a coiffure unaccompanied by its forest of feathers, not to speak of big bows of ribbon, flowers and buckles. A pompon of tulle, with a small paste ornament and one uprising plume in the centre, is among the latest novelties in head adornment. A erect triple spire of roses rising from a bow of satin is another popular decoration, as is also a gracefully arranged aigrette of orchids and violets. Black velvet mingled with white ostrich plumes are suitable for elderly women, though they are worn by the youthful likewise. Flowers are the newest, though, and of flowers, scarlet geranium and white lilac are the acme of smartness. Certain pinks of the gayest colors are in high favor, such as cerise, purple and scarlet. Feathers spangled with diamonds and frosted leaves show the tendency to combine different novelties.

Spring Shades.

The spring shades of blue are Roman, hyacinth, silver, Napoleon, and barbeau, or blue-bottle. The greens are in many tints with fanciful titles that have clear emerald tints, and also the deep Russian green, becoming to so many women; willow, the golden green tint and leaf in three different shades. Gismonda again appears, the purple slightly deeper than that of Parma violet, and much like the amethyst are plum shades that have been a favorite in costume cloths and millinery this winter.

A Daughter of the Revolution.

Marion Gibbs was a girl thirteen years old, living on a plantation near Charlestown, during the Revolution, when Tarleton's red-coated troopers were raiding that region. Her father, who had been in the American army, was crippled from his wounds, and Marion, delighted to be useful, was busily engaged in preparing a meal for the family, when a negro slave rushed into the room where Marion was spinning, and in great excitement begged her to flee to the swamp, for the troopers had already set the barns on fire and shot down some of the negroes.

Hastily summoning the servants, Marion had her father and the children conveyed to a hiding place in the neighboring swamp, and directed the negro nurse to get the baby, a boy two years old, and join them, while she would get together a few needed articles. At the first red coats of the soldiers were observed approaching through the orchard, Marion slipped out of the rear door and sped away to her friends.

Upon joining the frightened group, our little heroine discovered that the baby was not with the nurse, and, flying toward her, and wringing her hands in agony, came Aunt Dinah, who sobbed out: "Honey, honey! is you got de baby? Aunt Dinah jes stop one minute ter go to de washhouse fo' de baby's clothes, an' when she go back de house all on fire! Oh, tell me, honey, is you got de baby?"

The next moment a little form flashed between the ranks of dragoons and disappeared within the structure, from which greedy tongues of smoke and flame were spirting through out of doors and windows. Before the startled soldiers had finished their cries of consternation, Marion reappeared, bearing in her burnt, brave little arms a white bundle, from which a child's frightened cry was heard as the heroic girl once more rushed away in the direction of the swamp. Instead of impeding her flight, the English soldiers swung their hats and cheered her until the dark forest hid her from their view.

Lettuce Soup.

Ingredients.—Three-quarters of a pound of lettuce, a bunch of herbs, one ounce and a half of butter, one pint and a half of white stock (from mutton or veal trimmings), two yolks of eggs, a quarter of a pint of cream, two spring onions (chopped), a little green coloring, a little grated lemon rind, a few drops of lemon juice.

Method.—Put the butter into a stew pan, and when melted add the shredded lettuce, lemon rind, onions and herbs; cook these gently in the butter for about fifteen minutes, and then add the stock and let everything boil for half an hour. Pass through a hair sieve, reheat the soup and add the lemon juice; beat up the yolks of the eggs and add the cream. Pour upon this the hot soup, whisking briskly all the time to prevent the eggs curdling. Return the soup to the saucepan and whisk until the soup is thickened and the eggs cooked. It must on no account boil; add a little coloring if necessary; serve with croutons of fried bread.

Treatment of Goldfish.

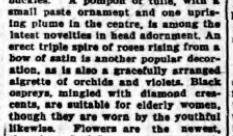
In cases where goldfish are kept in vessels in rooms, etc., they should be kept in spring water. The water will require to be changed according to the size of the bowl or the number of fish kept, but it is not well to change the water too often. In a vessel or bowl that will hold a common size pail of water, two fish may be kept by changing the water about once a week and so on in proportion. If any food is supplied them it should be a few crumbs of bread dropped in the water two or three times a week, and occasionally a few ant's eggs. The bread must not remain in the water, or it will become sour.

Wash for the Hands.

The care of the hands should always occupy a special attention. The following recipe will keep them soft and white: Take equal parts of rose-water and glycerine, mix while warm and keep firmly corked. The bottle should be shaken before using. If the hands are very rough, it is best to put two-thirds of glycerine to one of rose-water. Rub well over the hands after washing, and also apply last thing at night. To sleep in loose suede gloves is also a good practice.

An Odd Skirt.

A new and rather extraordinary skirt-model has a tunic back and front of a different material from the underskirt. If the tunic is of lace and the underskirt of satin, the style is at its best. Another very unusual skirt has three overlapping skirts shaped in handkerchief points, and made of white glace silk mounted in cerise silk. The effect is very striking.



A hair-dresser says that an old silk handkerchief is much better to use in stroking the hair night and morning than a brush.

Clara Tschudi, Gold Medalist.

Clara Tschudi, who has just been awarded with the gold medal for excellence in literature by the King of Sweden, is one of the most remarkable characters of the century. She was born in 1856 at Tonesberg, Norway, and when in her teens, imagined herself destined for the operatic stage.

She studied under the great German masters and actually made her appearance in some of the principal cities of Sweden and Germany, achieving a great success. Within a year after her first appearance she began the study of literature and published a life of Empress Eugenie of France and later a monograph on Marie Antoinette.

These efforts placed her in the first ranks of women writers of the century. Since then she has written continuously and classes among the most prominent leaders in the woman's movement on the continent. Her latest production and the one that earned her the gold medal is a book entitled "The Emancipation Question, It's Development and Its Present Status." This has been translated into English, German, Russian, French and Italian, and is considered the most complete history of the woman's movement for emancipation that has yet been published.

At present Miss Tschudi is working on "A Cycle of Biographies," which is to contain a sketch of every famous woman of the century.

Serviceable Waist for Cycling.

A comfortable waist for cycling or for ordinary wear, is a cream wash silk or pongee, lined with fine muslin. The lining is tight fitting and buttons down the front. The silk is gathered, and fastened to the lining at the back. The front hangs separately from the lining, and fastens with three large smoke pearl buttons; it is kept down at the waist by an elastic band under a waistband of folded ribbon, finished by a bow at the side. The revers, turn over collar and cuffs are made of silk or white canvas and are ornamented with fancy stitch in white or colored silk.

Experiments with Liquid Air.

Some curious experiments with liquid air were recently made by Professor Barker, at the University of Pennsylvania, a couple of gallons of the substance having been dispatched from New York to him in milk-cans. The method of manufacturing the liquid air is described as the compressing of ordinary air to 2,000lb. per square inch, and cooling it in a coil and allowing it to expand, thus producing a temperature of 312 degrees, at which temperature air is a liquid at atmospheric pressure. The experiments included making the liquid boil by dropping a frozen egg in it; the substance also boiled when bits of tin, platinum, copper, and rubber were introduced. When tested, the tin and rubber were found to be as brittle as glass, but the other metals were not in the least way affected.

Indoor Exercise.

Those who are most confined indoors often suffer ill-health from want of exercise. Nature demands exercise and health cannot exist without it. In place of the monotonous dumb-bell exercise one could easily substitute the well-known game of battledore and shuttlecock. This may be looked upon as childish by some women, but surely by the objection is a very foolish one. Then again, women who are not above performing their own household affairs—who look upon the polishing of a mahogany table or the sweeping of a carpet as necessary but pleasant aids to the preservation of health —need not have recourse either to dumb-bells or childish games. Dancing is also a very healthy exercise when not carried to excess.

To keep cutlery free from rust, it should be placed in boxes lined with zinc.

Pinafore for Child.

There can never be too many aprons included in a little girl's wardrobe, for besides being a great protection to the dress, they give a clean and dainty appearance. Fine nainsook is the best material to use for a smart pinafore, as it washes and wears well. For useful wear holland or fine linen is more serviceable.

A pretty white apron of white nainsook has the bodice made with a pointed yoke of embroidery. It is gathered on a waistband over which is worn a sash of plaid ribbon, tied in the back. The frill over the shoulders and around the hem are of embroidery.

Proverbs.

We must not always speak all that we know—that were folly; but what a man says should be what he thinks, otherwise it is knavery.

Reading furnishes the mind only with materials of knowledge; it is thinking which makes what we read ours.

INVENTOR OF LEAD PIPE.

First Suggested by Robert Seydell of Pennsylvania in 1830.

There was born in Milton, Pa., in 1800 a man of wonderful genius, it is said. His name was Robert Seydell and he died in 1847.

Mr. Seydell was a coppersmith and was almost continuously working out some device connected with the machinery in his factory. To him, it is related by some of the oldest citizens of that place, belongs the discovery of the process of making lead pipe, and like many other inventors, the idea of making the same was stolen from him and further developed to its present form of manufacture.

It was in the latter part of the thirties that the idea suggested itself to him, and the following is the way he wrought it out: He first took a stug or casting of lead, placing it on a mandrel, or rod of steel, about sixteen feet long and one inch in diameter; the mandrel was then polished, and upon this he drew, or rolled out, the lead to the full length of the rod, thus giving him an inch bore, and the material was rolled, it is said, to one-fourth inch, making a total diameter one and one-half inches for the pipe. After completing several sections of the length of the mandrel, he soldered them together, making the pipe of whatever length he desired.

He put it to practical use by fastening it to pump heads, and also running it to a number of watering troughs and spring houses in the country round about here. Being greatly pleased with his discovery, and receiving the most flattering of comments from his friends and neighbors in this section, he proceeded to make his invention more widely known, and hence made a visit to Philadelphia, taking his device with him.

At the Franklin Institute in that city he gave his first exhibition to quite a number of inventors, artisans and mechanics. As it is stated, every one who witnessed it was more than delighted, and so expressed themselves in his immediate presence. It was not long that he was allowed to remain in a condition of supreme happiness over his invention, for a short time after he made a disclosure of his discovery, and while yet in Philadelphia, he found out that by the persons to whom he had given an exhibition of the process of making lead pipe his idea had been used and improved upon.

CHURCH OF THE HOLY SEPULCHRE.

The Place Where Christ Laid He Longer a Rough-Hewn Cave.

It has been built over and lined with marble and hung with lamps, etc., till it is no longer a rough-hewn cave; but on entering it (a task of considerable difficulty through the narrow, low arch roughly hewn in the rock wall) and seeing the rocky slab on which lay the body of our Lord, you feel it is the true site, for it conveys the impression that it is just the sort of a cave that would be used for sepulchre purposes and these stone, and not sandstone built to accommodate the thousands of pilgrims who flock there annually. Within it the slab of rough-hewn rock lies altar-wise against the side of the cave, and is about the width and length that would be filled by a dead body; the top of it is now covered with a marble slab to protect it from the kisses of the pilgrims, which would long ere this have worn away the stone. There is just room in front of the slab for about four persons to kneel; all the sides of the caves are hung with lights, jewaled icons, and pictures.

To attempt to describe the feelings evoked in the Christian soul when adoring at such a spot would be beyond human pen. The Russian pilgrims have a touching habit of bringing their bundle of grave clothes and laying them on this holy slab in order to bless them for their future use. Of course there is always a Greek ecclesiastic present within the holy shrine, to watch over it. Just outside the cave is a small alabaster ornament marking the traditional spot where the angels stood as they announced "He is not here, but He is risen."—Pall Mall Magazine.

PARENT'S TITLES.

A Family of Children That Dropped Papa and Mamma for Father and Mother.

"I was brought up," said a fond father, "to say father and mother. I never dreamed of saying papa and mamma when I was a child, and I should have made awkward work of it if I had tried. Somehow, until lately save always said papa and mamma. I don't know how they got started that way, but at the outset and for a long time they never thought of saying anything else. Then the older ones took to saying father and mother. They liked these titles better, and they thought they were better form, too, and they taught the younger children also to say father and mother, and now they all say father and mother.

"The change has been accustomed themselves to the change; the younger children were a little shy over it at first, but they soon got pretty well used to it, and now we rarely hear in my house papa and mamma; it is father and mother.

"And I must say I like it better. And I don't think it is because that is the way I was brought up, though these titles certainly do have to me an old and familiar and affectionate sound that is very pleasant; but I think I like father and mother better anyway."

PRAISE FOR THE ASS.

Virtues of the Meekish Moke Have Been Sadly Overlooked.

To be called an ass is a great compliment. Humility, patience, charity and industry have been recognized as great virtues ever since mankind has been introspective; but the world has failed to think of that the ass, which is the brunt of the jests of all nations, possesses these qualities more fully than any other animal or any human being, except the proverbial one in a million.

The ass is to be found in every part of the world, always melancholy and slow, nobly doing his work, whether in the Andes, the Himalayas, the Rockies, or in the place of his nativity, the Orient. Wherever he is, his dominant characteristics are the same. Wherever he is, he is generally abused; perhaps because he puts up with abuse so meekly.

Always he is the friend of the poor. In countries where horses cannot be afforded he is the sole means of transport. All day long he will go over a hot plain or up a rocky mountainside, more than twice more than any horse could bear, though his weight is only half that of the average horse, while if a horse were limited to the food he subsists on the horse would fall down in its tracks and die, though it had no load. With the load it would fall down anyway.

That the ass can be cured of his only two vices of braying and kicking is proved by the superior conduct of the London moke, who is about a third cousin of the Biblical ass of myth, folk and Biblical story. The moke, who is about the size of a big Newfoundland dog, draws the barrels of the costermongers who vend fruits and vegetables from door to door in all parts of the city.

Nothing is so good plaything for children than a moke. When his fuzzy fur is washed it is soft, fluffy and pretty. A youngster may crawl all over him and under him, and pound and pull him in every part of his anatomy, and he will only smile the contented smile of the moke who is living in the moke heaven of curry combs and good rations.

The ass is not stupid is proved by his equal cleverness with the horse in learning tricks, by his plucking his master from a bored canoe so, by his calmness under conditions that make a horse uncontrollably fretful. But he seems homely and out of proportion, unless you look at him closely; and the world too often goes by appearances. Describing the sheepish foolishness of the ass, and you will find those qualities which make a face educational and perhaps even beautiful.—New Orleans Picayune.

SHE WAS CAUGHT BY A GIRL.

The Benevolent Old Lady Proved to be a Notorious Character.

The Philadelphia Press says that the female store detective is one of the features of department store development, and no first city has more of the large department stores in the country it is but natural that many of the store detectives should become exceptionally shrewd. An illustration of the peculiar shrewdness required was furnished by the detection the other day of a notorious shoplifter by her confederate by a young woman who is employed solely to prevent thievery. The young person suspected a benevolent-looking old lady because the old lady's skirts seemed to be abnormally heavy. She followed her to the street, and, as the old lady's skirts did not flap in the strong wind that was blowing, she had her arrested. It turned out that the old lady was "Queen Liz," one of the most notorious female robbers in the country. Her confederate, who was called "Morgan," was as "Big Kid," Morgan. The strange part of it all is that a pair of rogues whose wits should have been sharpened by several successive terms in jail should have been run to earth by a "slip of a girl" whose horizon has been the walls of a department store.

Not Quite Up on Technical Terms.

The Detroit Free Press tells of a Toledo woman, who hasn't had much experience with high diplomatic folks and that kind of functionaries on her native heath, and who went to Washington last winter for a month to thoroughly familiarize herself with the usages of the best society. During the course of her giddy whirl she struck the annual charity ball—dedicate $2.50 per—which took place, and of the ladies dancing attracted her especially.

"Who is that lady over there in the corner now with the low-necked dress on?" she inquired of her chaperon.

"It is the wife of one of the Ministers here," her friend explained.

"You don't say!" was the surprised response.

"Yes; there's nothing unusual in that."

"Well, well," said the visitor curiously, "it's a mighty queer place for a preacher's wife, now isn't it?"

He Manner Didn't Suit the Bishop.

A pompous bishop was having his portrait painted, and after sitting for an hour in silence he thought he would break the monotony. "How are you getting along?" he inquired. To his astonishment the artist, absorbed in his work, replied: "Move your head a little to the right, and shut your mouth." Not being accustomed to such a form of address, the bishop bowed low. "I ask a boy you address me in that manner?" The artist, still absorbed in his work—"I want to take off a little of your cheek."—Tit-Bits.

The Constitutionalist.

A DEMOCRATIC WEEKLY.

PUBLISHED AT

PLAINFIELD, N. J.

Terms—$2.00 per year.

A. L. Force, Editor and Proprietor

It Was a Duty.

Though in certain quarters their motives have been impugned and their practices criticised, the Mayor and Councilmen of North Plainfield have resolutely gone forward in the work of straightening out the books and accounts of the former collector of the municipality until the matter has been settled satisfactorily.

The officials who have prosecuted this duty faithfully, notwithstanding the influences that have been brought to bear on them and in face of charges that they were needessly attacking the honesty and character of a once standing high in the estimation of the community, deserve the unsullied praise and commendation of good citizens. It was not a pleasant proceeding for anyone of the officials concerned in the investigation, but it was a duty that devolved upon them when they assumed the oath of office.

Unquestionably the borough has been benefited in more ways than one by reason of the investigation. Not only the treasury been replenished with funds to the amount of several thousand dollars that were previously accounted as worthless, but the accounts of the collector have been put on a business like basis, thus preventing in the future any more such discrepancies.

The Martin Act.

The decision of Vice Chancellor Pitney in reference to the constitutionality of the Martin Act, as printed in the news columns of today's paper, will be read with great interest by a large number of Plainfield property owners who just now are undergoing an attempted application of its provisions to their properties.

The point with which the Vice Chancellor dealt is not the same as has been raised in Plainfield in objection to certain adjustments made by the commissioners working under the law. But since the constitutionality of the law to a large degree hinged upon the contention, it assures the Plainfielders that they will not be able to escape the findings of the commissioners by any faulty construction of the law itself.

How little marine enterprise the people of the middle ages had is shown by the fact that the Cape Verde Islands, distant only 320 miles from the westernmost point of Africa, were not discovered till the middle of the fifteenth century, not many years before America. The Portuguese were the greatest navigators of those days, and they first sighted these dots of land in the sea and took possession of them in the name of their government. The Cape Verde islands have belonged to the country that discovered them, Portugal, ever since her navigators found them, being one of the few tracts of land that have not changed hands in modern times.

Spain was only able to buy two Atlantic liners to be converted into cruisers, the Normannia and the Columbia of the Hamburg-American line. After the sale had been completed the German government expressed in strong terms its displeasure at the transaction. Germany had the like claim on these two vessels that the United States government had on the four steamers of the American line, the St. Paul, St. Louis, New York and Paris, and there was an implied understanding that they should be taken and converted into armed cruisers for the service of the empire, if they were ever to be needed for such purpose.

American merchant ships in Spanish ports have until May 21 to get out in safety. After that they will be subject to seizure. The same courtesy shown to Spanish merchantmen in our ports will enable both American and Spanish trading vessels to get safe out upon the high seas, beyond the three mile limit which has been adjudged to belong to a country as her coast line.

The usual method when a naval nation proclaim neutrality is to inform the fighting countries that they will be required to take their warships out of the said nation's ports on a notice of 24 hours. The neutral nation may, however, hold back for a considerable time the notice to the ships to quit.

The sultan of Turkey has built at Mecca a huge shelter house, capable of holding 6,000 pilgrims at once. The sultan of Turkey is very much like those rich Americans who think they will atone for their sins by giving money to construct big churches and pay preachers.

And After?

It was not to maintain the Monroe doctrine that the war with Spain was begun. It was from considerations of philanthropy and the American pocket. American citizens and American trade alike suffered by the war, while nobody with a human heart could stand by and refuse to lift a finger to stop the starvation and cruelty in Cuba. Starvation as a military policy does not meet the approval of the majority of the American people, while there are some among us who were honestly opposed to a war with Spain. They said, for instance, France would have exactly the same right to cross the channel and make war on England because she had misused Ireland.

But these opponents were in the minority, and the war began. All indications point toward sweeping victories for the United States. By times she will change entirely her attitude to the nations. She will show she is by sea as she has already proved herself on land, in peace and in war—one of the earth's very greatest nations. We shall have an illustrious prestige among all peoples.

After the war has closed, what then will be our policy? Suppose we have on our hands Spain's islands in the eastern and western hemispheres—Cuba, Porto Rico, the Philippines and possibly the Canaries? What shall we do with them? Shall we take possession of them and annex them, thus having in all parts of the oceans stations where our ships may coal and put in for repairs and obtain necessary supplies of all kinds? Such a course in every part of the globe will be necessary if we follow up our advantages and decide to become one of the world's sea powers. If we do not thus maintain our prestige as a great naval power, shall we sell our ships for old iron, leave the islands we have taken for some European power to grab and retire into our shell of former isolation till some other war forces us out and compels us again at an extravagant expense to hurry together a navy, man it with seamen and fit it out with supplies all in three weeks? This is the age of sea wars, not land fights. If we only take Cuba and the Philippines in order to let some other great power seize them, what was the good of our taking them from Spain?

These are questions we as a nation shall be called on to answer sooner or later. They are questions that concern more intimately than any other the future of the United States of America.

Those naval officers who insisted on tacking to the appropriation bill in congress a clause that they should receive separate compensation when the government accepted and used inventions they had made showed very poor taste. If they were patriots pure and simple, they would gladly lay at the feet of the country their inventions, if they could devise to help us to victory. If their inventions are really worth much, it will be time enough to talk of compensation when this war is over. The United States government educated them free and immediately put them into good places, besides insuring a permanent living to them and a pension to their widows after them. What more could be asked of a generous and appreciative government? These officers recall the story of that skinflint who attended a celebration of victory at the close of the Revolutionary war, shouting, "Beef, beef!" because the government owed him a small sum for meat supplied to soldiers.

Portsmouth, good old Portsmouth, N. H., has been a dead town ever since the decline of the great fisheries that used to keep her wharfs lively looking. The historic frigate Constitution, lying in her harbor, seemed scarcely more a thing of the past than the quaint and interesting city itself. New life has come to the place from this war. Her navy yard buzzes with activity, her ancient guns are being refitted and privateers make flying visits to her harbor on their way north and south along the New England coast.

The fact that at this moment, with a fleet actively engaged in war on the east side of Asia, the United States has absolutely no spot where that fleet can obtain coal and supplies nearer than San Francisco, 5,000 miles away, and that it will take over two weeks for assistance from that point to reach Commodore Dewey at the Philippines, is respectfully commended to the attention of the American people.

The public baths of Philadelphia go to sustain the charge of a certain disgruntled Englishman that men are cleaner than women because men bathe oftener, as proved by the use of public baths. Philadelphia has provided one-third fewer baths for women than for men in the establishments where for a very small fee anybody may wash and be clean.

Strong people do not talk much. They are silent, but when the hour comes they strike with all their force. They do not waste their powers on gab. There is no surer proof of the weakness and degeneracy of the Spaniards than their impotent scolding and abuse of the United States.

It was very odd that the first heavy fighting of the war between Spain and the United States on account of Cuba should have taken place in Cuba.

Poultry In Politics.

There are numerous old hens in political office in the United States, which nobody can deny. They cackle and gather up the public pickings as they go, and we are used to them.

It has been reserved to Pennsylvania, however, to unearth a nestful of scandals in connection with the poultry bulletin, and the whole state is cackling over it. In that department of the great commonwealth which furnishes free information to ruralists there was published some time since a hen bulletin. It dealt in a poetic and picturesque way with the diseases of poultry, giving learned names to gapes, chicken cholera, swell neck, hen eating her feathers, etc. So far 'twas well. But the hen bulletin gave out as to its supply. Then the legislature authorized a new and enlarged edition, "with such additional matter and changes as the authors may deem necessary to explain this important subject." In the last clause was the open door. "The authors" set to work and raked the archives of the past, present and future for material to put out the chicken book.

The original modest pamphlet had cost, plates and all, $500. The enlarged poultry bulletin cost $50,000. The authors had crammed in a quantity of material concerning hats, deer and fish, illustrated with fancy colored plates. How they reconciled it with their conscience to tack these upon a bulletin on the gapes we know not, but they did. The book would have gone through its beautiful shape and somebody, never bodied, would have made a lot of money out of it, but Governor Hastings heard of it, and with adamantine heartlessness sat upon the whole delectable scheme. He told the state librarian not to accept a copy of it and the auditor to draw no warrant to pay for it. Now the authors can have their beautiful book on the connection of bats with hen cholera to admire all to themselves.

Ocean Telegraph Stations.

No doubt during the days of uncertainty in regard to the fate of the American liner Paris and her chances of being captured or destroyed en route by a Spanish war vessel the thought occurred to many that there ought to be some way of establishing one or more cable telegraph stations in midocean.

Wherever there is a break in the ocean cable, as there has been from time to time ever since submarine telegraphs were laid, it is comparatively easy to find the ragged ends of the line and splice them. What is to hinder, therefore, the anchoring of a ship in midocean somewhere along the line of the cable and making of it a telegraph station? Lighthouse ships are maintained permanently in parts of the sea more perilous so far as danger from storm and hurricane goes than the open ocean.

The cable ship, close to the lanes of ocean travel, powerfully built, held fast by great anchors to her place and connected by strong insulated wires with the submarine telegraph, would be able to give notice to both Europe and America of the passing of every vessel that came within range night or day. Indeed improved methods of telegraphing may make the establishment of a midocean cable station easily practicable.

It is best to err on the side of courtesy and strict interpretation of the rights of neutral vessels, as President McKinley did in his proclamation permitting the enemy's merchant vessels until May 21 to get out of American ports, rather than to be too previous in such matters. Spanish ships, sailing from foreign lands to our country and starting previous to May 21, may also come into our ports and discharge their cargoes unmolested, provided they do not contain goods contraband of war. These goods mean anything which will feed, clothe, give means of defense or in any way sustain the enemy while making war on us. Under strict interpretation of the terms of the proclamation several of the first Spanish prizes taken by our navy will be surrendered, after the courts of inquiry decide the matter. Notably this is true of the first ship taken, the Buena Ventura. We venture to say, however, that no Spanish merchant will ever get back his $60 crates of life chickens that were captured by the American squadron while being conveyed to Havana on one of the prize ships. Some things are uncertain; this is not one of them.

This time Uncle Sam knew his own hopeful sons' little ways and headed off the game some of them would undoubtedly try to put up on him by raising the price of meat supplies for the army. Weeks before the war began the old gentleman in the striped trousers visited the great rangemen of the west and secured an option on enough beef to feed 100,000 men a year. The bargains have been made direct with the cattle raisers and thus not even the heavy beef packers can corner the market in "salt horse" and other army meat supplies.

It is given to few West Point graduates to step from school direct into active service, as the class of 1898 has already done. They were hurried through the mill and received their diplomas two months ahead of time, that they might help their country at once.

There are two things the American cruiser and battleship crews will have in plenty, grit and coal.

DELICATE POINT OF LAW

MANSHANDA'S EARLY PLEA MAY MAKE HIM A STATE'S WITNESS.

While Manshanda was Being Held as a Witness He Gave Valuable Information, and It May Perhaps Save His Life

The action of Judge Van Syckel on Monday in declining to set a day for the trial of George Manshanda, charged with the murder of James C. Pitts, came as a surprise to most of the court habitues.

It was believed from the charge of Judge Van Syckel in the Boesel trial, Manshanda would be immediately placed on trial for murder. The difficulty arises from the peculiar circumstances in reference to Manshanda's case.

It appears that while Manshanda was being held as a witness, and before the indictments for murder were found, he was taken before the grand jury, and in the Boesel trial he gave important testimony for the State The precedents are that pleas have been accepted from criminals who have become State's evidence.

Independent, however, of any service Manshanda has given to the prosecutor, the State's motion was to place him on trial for murder.

The decision of the Supreme court will be awaited with much public interest.

PASSING COMMENT.

Things that Are Not Exactly News, but Just as Interesting.

Many people who live in North Plainfield, but who are taxpayers on the city side also, are not aware of the privileges which they are entitled to at the Public Library. Persons so situated have the right to use the library in the same manner as though they resided in the city.

The patriotic feeling expressed on all sides just at present is bringing to light all kinds of war flags and relics. John B. MacIntyre, of the Frank L. G. Martin Cycle Company, has a ship design which saw the surrender of New Orleans during the Civil War. The flag is a regulation navy flag, and was carried by the gun boat "Cananha," in the fleet commanded by Farragut. It was presented to Mr. MacIntyre soon after the close of the war by the executive officer of the Cananha.

A man living not many miles from Plainfield received severe punishment a few days ago at the hands of his better half for a little outing which he took. Together with some friends, he went off for a good time and did not return until early the next morning. The man in question was feeling a little out of sorts, but he had no idea of meeting his wife before the next morning, when he expected to be in condition to meet her. Things were different, however, and when he returned his wife was at the door waiting to receive him. She gave him little warning of what was to follow, but before he could realize what was going on, he came to a partial sense of the fact that his whiskers were being pulled out by the roots. A few good pulls was sufficient, and the husband begged for mercy, promising never to do so again. After the effects of the outing had passed off the husband took a look at himself in the glass, and discovered his terrible loss. He called on a barber, a friend, and immediately had all of the remaining adornment shaven. His friends hardly recognize him now, but he avows that he will stay home next time.

THEATRICAL.

Current Dramatic Attractions That Plainfielders Can Witness.

For the opening bill of the Acme Comedy and Vaudeville Company, there will be presented the laughable three act comedy, "A Bachelor's Divorce," to be followed by an olio comprising a number of refined vaudeville acts, among which may be mentioned the Bornings tons, Alice and Charles, in an original sketch entitled "The Trou blesome Servants." Miss Nettie La-Salle, the singing and dancing comedienne. Miss Oulda Rivers, the phenomenal contralto, in operatic selections. J. Frank Addison, the black-face comedian and monologue artist Ely and Landen, the coon song illustrators, introducing all of the latest negro melodies. Also views of the Maine, President McKinley, Major General Lee, Captain Sampson, Admiral Dewey, etc. A feature of this organization is the prices charged. The admission will be 10 cents to all parts of the house and 20 cents for reserved seats, which may be secured through the day. The engagement is for four nights and matinee Saturday.

PELTERING RAIN FELL

HEAVY DOWNFALL DID SOME DAMAGE ABOUT THE CITY.

Sewers Were Stopped up and Unable to Carry Off the Fierce Couple of Tons Blown Over by the Wind.

The rain storm which visited this city Saturday night and Sunday was one of the heaviest of the season. The rain fell in torrents, and at the same time the wind blew a gale. The streets seemed to be running with water and every thing was thoroughly washed, but looked bright and fresh next day as a result.

While the storm was at its height Saturday night, Street Commissioner Gavett sent two of his "white wings" out with shovels and hoes, with instructions to clear all the culverts and gutters. No serious interference with the easy disposal of the water was reported, except on the corner of Putnam and Carleton avenues where one culvert filled up. It is keeping the men busy today to clean it out.

Two trees were blown over. One was a large apple tree standing in a yard on Church street between Front and Second streets, and the other at was a fine maple that was blown across Arlington avenue near Sixth street. Both trees were blown over during Saturday night, and kept the Street Commissioner's men busy a good part of Sunday clearing away the debris.

No serious damage to telephone or electric light wires was reported.

A Vicious Dog.

Sunday afternoon while the six-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Howe, of Chestnut street, Prideville, was going home from school, she was attacked by a dog owned by Charles Pope, of Steiner place. The dog bit the girl in the right leg and drew blood The girl was frightened and hastened home to tell her parents. Mrs. Howe treated the injury as best she could and used preparations of salve as an application. Mr. Howe notified Mr. Pope last evening that he must keep his dog tied or he would have the animal shot by the police authorities.

All Over a Dog.

James R. Lines, of Manning avenue, lost a little yellow dog named "Gip" a week ago, and accused Henry Mier, a neighbor, with having taken him. Mier admitted that he had the dog, but that he had owned it for two years. Suit was therefore brought in Justice Thomas court for $20 damages. The case was tried Monday afternoon, and a verdict was rendered for the plaintiff for $10 and costs. William G. DeMeza represented the plaintiff.

Orator Baker Entertained.

At the meeting of Plainfield Council, No. 711, Royal Arcanum, held last Monday, one person was initiated and one application for membership was received. Orator S. C. Baker entertained the members during the evening in a pleasant manner.

WILL HOLD A RECEPTION

ALUMNI OF BOROUGH SCHOOL TO ENTERTAIN GRADUATES.

Considerable Opposition to the Event Was Offered—Officers for the Alumni Association Were Elected Monday Night.

The alumni of the North Plainfield Public School will give its regular commencement reception this year as usual. The alumni association of the school held its semi-annual meeting in the school building Monday. One faction, led by Paul Loiseaux, attempted to do away with the reception. They met with a lively opposition from the present officers of the association, who were determined that the reception should be held as usual. There was a lively debate and a large majority of the alumni voted in favor of the reception. The date was left to the discretion of the executive committee, which is composed of officers of the association.

The election of officers was held and resulted as follows: President, Harry L. McGee; first vice-president, John G. MacLaughlin; second vice-president, Miss Lenora Williams; secretary, Henry B. Drake; treasurer, Francis J. Blatz.

The reception will be held in the school building the evening following commencement or in the next week. The reception will consist of a formal reception to the graduates, followed by a dance. There will be no business meeting or programme for the evening.

Flagpole is Here.

The flag pole recently purchased by the city has arrived and is now stationed near Scott's Press Works. It will be painted and arrangements will be made to erect it at an early date.

MAKING LIFE EASIER AT THE STATE CAMP.

Good Work Which the Y. M. C. A. is Engaged In.

APPEAL FOR THE SOLDIERS.

BRANCH TENTS ESTABLISHED AT CAMP VOORHEES.

Beyond the Bare Necessities of Life Nothing is Provided for the Convenience of the Soldiers and it is the Intention of the Y. M. C. A. to Furnish Them With a few of the Pleasant Things of Life, and Lighten the Burdens Which They Have to Bear to Hold Up the Honor of the Nation.

The accounts which have been published make it very plain that the men who have been called into the army are having a hard time at the State Camps. Besides the bare necessaries of life, nothing is provided for them In its efforts to meet this lack and to minister to the comfort of these soldiers, the New Jersey Young Men's Christian Associations, through their state committee, are now establishing several tents at the State camp at Sea Girt, and the international committee is beginning a similar work at the National encampments.

In each tent writing material is furnished, daily and weekly papers, as well as the magazines, are on file, and games of different kinds, including several baseball outfits, are provided for the use of the men. Two experienced secretaries are in charge at Sea Girt, who will strive in every way to help the soldiers. An organ is to be put in each tent and song services will be held whenever convenient. Sundays the usual association gospel services will be held.

The committee aims also to be a distributing agency, and should anyone desire to send anything to any of the soldiers it can be left at the Y. M. C. A. building, and upon payment of express charges it will be promptly forwarded.

It will be seen that this work is entirely distinct from that of the Red Cross Society, which aims to care for the sick and wounded soldiers, and the two in no way conflict. No charge is made to the soldiers and therefore the cost of maintaining the association tents must be met by voluntary subscriptions.

The Plainfield association has appointed a committee, such as will be appointed in all association towns, to take charge of this work, and subscriptions of any amount may be sent to any of them or to the general secretary at the association building Should the Sea Girt camp be abandoned any remaining funds will be turned over to the International Y. M. C. A. for work in national camps.

The committee appointed is E. L. Bonny, A. B. Beers, W. D. Murray.

Slipped and Sprained Her Foot.

Monday forenoon while Mrs. M. C. Dobbins, of Elmwood place, was calling on a friend on New street she met with an accident that will detain her at home for several days She was leaving the house of her friend when her foot slipped on a short step and she was thrown backward on her head. At first it was thought that she was seriously injured, but in a few minutes it was learned that her only injury was a sprained foot. She was assisted back into the house and later on friends helped her to reach her home, where she is now confined. She will be unable to walk for sometime.

AN OLD MERCHANT DEAD

LEBBEUS L. MARTIN PASSED AWAY AFTER A BRIEF ILLNESS.

Was Born in Plainfield in 1821 and Was Engaged in the Clothing Business on Front Street for Many Years.

One of Plainfield's oldest citizens and business men has closed a long and honorable career Lebbeus L. Martin died at the home of his son, Fred E. Martin, of 6 3 West Front street, Monday evening.

Mr. Martin was born in this city January 2 d, 1821. Here he passed his youth and received his education He was in the clothing business for many years on West Front street He also invested in real estate and owned a considerable amount at the time of his death. He retired from an active business life some years ago. Two years ago he moved to Catskill, N Y., where he has resided until four months ago when he came to this city to visit his son.

A week ago, Mr. Martin complained of ill health and took to his bed. Friday he was out again for the day. While the family realized that he was very weak, they had no idea that the end was so near. Death was caused by a complication of diseases and old age.

While in this city, Mr. Martin was an attendant of the Crescent Avenue church. He leaves a widow and two children, Fred H. Martin, of this city, and Mrs. E. M. Butler, of Catskill.

VICIOUS DOG'S ATTACK.

Letter-Carrier Reville's Exciting Encounter Monday.

Patrick Reville, one of the letter carriers of this city, was attacked by a savage Newfoundland dog, owned by John Kiely at Netherwood, Monday. Reville's clothes were torn, and the dog's fangs broke through the skin on the man's leg.

Reville, who says he has had several unpleasant experiences with this dog and several others owned by Kiely, was driving across the lots back of St. Mary's cemetery near Jackson street, when Kiely lives.

Reville was busy looking over a package of letters in his hand, and did not notice the approach of the dog until the beast sprang up into the cart and seized him by the leg.

Reville picked up the whip and gave the dog several hard blows with it over the head. This made doggy lose his grip and fall back The dog sprang to the attack a second time, and took hold of the folded blanket upon which Reville was seated By this time Reville was 500 yards away from the house so the dog gave up the fight and went home.

Reville says that he has been troubled with savage dogs in that locality for some time.

Two Deaths in the Borough.

The death of Mrs. Anna Teeple, wife of Alexander Teeple, of 106 Somerset street, occurred on Saturday last after a short illness. A husband and son survives her. The funeral services were held from the late residence Tuesday forenoon at 11 o'clock. Interment was in Evergreen Cemetery, Plainfield avenue

The death of Jeremiah Rowe, aged 49 years, three months and 27 days, occurred last Saturday after an illness lasting some time. The funeral were held from the late residence, 214 Grove street, Tuesday afternoon at 1:30, and at Warren chapel at 2 o'clock. The interment was in Evergreen Cemetery, Plainfield avenue

Position Didn't Materialize.

Charles M. Flint returned to his home in Rochester, N Y., Saturday afternoon. He came here a week ago to assist at the New Jersey Military Academy when it was supposed that the Academy would be continued under the supervision of Percy Robert Colwell. When Mr. Colwell learned of the heavy indebtedness of the absent superintendent, he gave up all plans of running the school.

Mr. Packer Bruised.

Garret Q. Packer, of East Front street, met with an accident Monday while riding his wheel in the borough. Mr. Packer was rounding the corner of Prospect place and Grove street, when, to avoid running into a boy, he kept straight ahead and was thrown off his wheel. Mr. Packer's nose was bruised, his face cut, and his knee was scratched.

Died of Consumption.

George Killoran, aged 22 years, only son of Mr. and Mrs. James Killoran, of East Third street, died Sunday morning at 8:40 after an illness of four months with consumption. He was well known in this city where he had a host of friends. He was a plumber by trade. The funeral services were held at St. Mary's church Tuesday afternoon.

MARTIN ACT UPHELD BY VICE CHANCELLOR

Back Taxes Can be Collected After or Prior to the Passage.

INTEREST IN PLAINFIELD.

DECISION RENDERED IN THE CASE OF NEWARK PROPERTY.

It Was the First Actual Test of the Constitutionality of the Martin Act, and the Decision is Regarded as Highly Important by Lawyers, as There Have Been Doubts Entertained About Its Validity—Strong Opinion Rendered on the Contention by Vice Chancellor Pitney in the Decision Just Filed.

A decision which, while it does not apply directly to Plainfield, will be read with great interest in this city, has just been filed by Vice-Chancellor Pitney in a case involving the constitutionality of the Martin act. The decision holds the measure to be valid in every respect, not only with reference to application to assessments levied since its enactment, but also to prior assessments. The decision is regarded as highly important by all lawyers, inasmuch as there has been doubts entertained ever since its enactment that it was not constitutional.

The case was that of Seraphine Fountain against the Mayor and Common Council of Newark, and it attracted considerable interest, inasmuch as it was the first actual test of the constitutionality of the Martin Act.

The property levied was assessed in 1873 for certain street improvements, and John Fountain, who was then the owner of the property, refused to pay the assessment. Because of that failure the property was sold under the old law and bought in by the city for a period of forty nine years. The owner contested the right of the city under the then existing law to sell his property for the unpaid assessment and brought suit in Chancery to have the sale set aside. A decree was rendered in his favor January 29, 1878.

From the time of that decision until the passage of the Martin Act no further action was taken by the city. Then the claim against the Fountain property and numerous similar claims were adjusted by the Martin Act Commission, and where the claims were not paid the property was sold. The Fountain tract was among the latter number, and it was bought in by the city for the amount of the claim and costs. Seraphine Fountain, who had become owner of the land, began suit in Chancery to have the second sale set aside.

In the bill filed, attacking the constitutionality of the Martin Act, the decree of the Court in the case of the first sale in 1878 was quoted and urged as a bar to the second sale by the complainants. The Vice Chancellor did not agree with the latter contention, and held that the decree did not or could not operate as a bar to subsequent valid legislation as embodied in the Martin Act, and in rendering judgment in favor of the city he quotes similar decisions by the late Chief Justice Beasely and Justice Garrison The significance of this preference by the Court of Chancery to the finding of the Supreme Court lies in the fact that with both the law and equity courts holding similar opinions, the Court of Errors, to which the case might be appealed, will hardly reverse the judgment

Didn't Have a License.

Peter Robinson, colored, was arrested and locked up Monday afternoon by Boundsman Predrickson on a charge of carrying garbage without a license. The complaint was made by Health Inspector Addis, who claims to have caught Robinson on Watchung avenue with a can of kitchen garbage in his wagon, beside several barrels of decayed fruit and vegetables. Robinson pleaded not guilty when arraigned before City Judge De Meza in the evening, and retained Counsellor W. S. Augleman to represent him. The trial was set down for a week from Saturday.

Deafness Cannot be Cured

by local application, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflammed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflammed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free

OPPOSE COUNTY TROLLEY

THE UNION COUNTY LEAGUE FORMALLY ORGANIZED.

Crawford Citizens Intend to Protect the Property of Its Members From What They Say is "Corporate Aggression."

The Union County League, an organization formed primarily for the purpose of opposing the construction of a county boulevard on the line of West field avenue, in Union county, held as meeting at the house of William Dryadale Saturday night, and adopted a constitution and by-laws.

The objects of the league as set forth in the constitution, are the protection of the property of its members against corporate aggression. The following officers were elected: President, William Dryadale; vice president, Wright Babcock; record ing secretary, John H. Thompson; corresponding secretary, Charles R. Williams; treasurer, Louis Mathey; directors, Spencer C. Blake, Lucius Bradley and Wright Babcock.

In the event of the Board of Chosen Freeholders proceeding under the authority of the county boulevard law, to widen Westfield avenue, an injunction will be applied for by the league, and counsel will be employed to test the validity of the law in the courts.

TO CHANGE THEIR QUARTERS.

Young Women's Club to Have More Conveniences.

The Young Women's Club now having quarters on the corner of Watchung avenue and East Fifth street, are about to move to 122 Madison avenue, in the frame house in the rear of the Jackson building. They will move in a few days, and several changes will be made in the arrangements of the club. The parlor and reading room will be on the first floor, as well as the classrooms and the kitchen. On the second floor are six rooms, which will be fitted up as bedrooms as soon as possible.

As the club will have the whole house, donations in the way of housefurnishings and carpets will be thankfully received. Beginning yesterday the classes are arranged as follows: Monday, dressmaking; Tuesday, millinery; Wednesday, dressmaking; Thursday, singing; and Friday, educational branches.

There are now 35 club members, and May 18th the social committee of the club will give a sociable to the members and their friends.

N. Y. & N. J. Telephone Company Buy a Building for Permanent Exchange.

The New York and New Jersey Telephone Company has still new plans for the perfection of its system in this city. It has now provided for a new and modern exchange which will include all the advantages of recent inventions. The company has just consummated the purchase of the one-story building in Park avenue, now occupied by the F. L. C. Martin Cycle Company, from L. E. Hart. The purchase is subject to the present lease which expires the first of next May.

The exchange will then all be located on one floor which will be of great convenience in handling the battery rooms and other details.

POOR WAY TO CELEBRATE.

Charles Frey Beat His Wife and was Then Arrested.

Charles Frey has a strange way of celebrating his birthday. Sunday he got intoxicated. Then he went to the house where his wife lives, and beat her and Mrs. Bridget Bent, the woman with whom she lives, until frightened away by the approach of neighbors.

When Frey was arraigned in court Monday morning he said that Sunday was his birthday and that he celebrated it by drinking too much. He professed entire ignorance of what had occurred at his wife's home. He was given $20 and sixty days.

Frey was arrested Monday morning at Netherwood.

Last Indoor Gathering.

Last Sunday in the Sangerbund Hall on Somerset street the members of the Germania and Turn Verein held their last indoor gathering for the season. Only the members of the society were present and a very impromptu programme consisting of recitations, vocal and instrumental music and speeches, was presented by the members. Refreshments were served by the committee in charge and a general good time was enjoyed throughout the evening. The attendance of members was very large. The affair was under the direction of the president, Henry Baurand.

Boys' Club Annual Exhibition.

Members of the Boys' Club Association and those interested in the question of industrial training, together with the public at large, are invited to attend the annual exhibition of the work of the boys for the past year in the lines of industrial instruction taught at the club, Saturday evening, May 14th, at 8 o'clock p. m., in the clubhouse on Sycamore street. The managers hope the friends and supporters of the club will evince their interest in its work by being present.

SPRY AND READY THE CRANFORD GIRLS ARE.

But They Couldn't Defeat Plainfield's Fair Athletes.

BASKET BALL WAS THE GAME

THE CONTEST PLAYED WITH GREAT VIGOR BY THE GIRLS.

The Visiting Team Mixed up With the High School Girls Regardless of the Consequences, But There Was No Spite in Their Tactics—Home Team Were the Move Expert Players Though, and They Rad-y Won a Victory—Game Witnessed by 300 People in the Whittier School Gymnasium Saturday.

The fair basket ball players of Cranford were overwhelmingly defeated by the girls of the Senior class of the Plainfield High School Saturday afternoon by a score of 26 to 0 On unfamiliar grounds, before a crowd of spectators for the first time, and with a deplorable lack of coaching, the Cranford girls were sadly handicapped. They made a spirited fight, however, and although the final result was soon evident, they contested every point with a vigor that made the game decidedly exciting despite its one-sidedness.

The game was to have been played a week ago but was postponed at the request of the Cranford team. Owing to a misunderstanding, the game was advertised to be played at the Y. M. C. A. gymnasium. Instead it was played in the gymnasium of the Girls' Athletic Association of the High School in the second story of the Whittier building. The game was witnessed by an audience numbering nearly two hundred.

The final score, 26 to 0, in favor of the Plainfield team, was the result of their excellent team work. The Misses Pruden, Loizeaux and Patton worked the zig zag to perfection and carried the ball up to the goal time after time. Had their goal throwing been more accurate, the score might have been nearly doubled. There was a lack of team play on the part of the visitors for which even the most brilliant of individual playing can not make up.

At the start, it was apparent that the Cranford girls had been trained to entirely different tactics from those of their opponents. They showed an ability to dodge and duck that delighted the audience. As a result there were a series of scrimmages that sent the enthusiasm up to fever-heat. Then the Cranford girls followed the ball with a seeming disregard for consequences. The dived into the audience after the ball as it crossed the boundary line, fell on it if it happened to come their way, and sprang up again with an agility that showed considerable athletic prowess.

Miss Bradley, of the visiting team, was probably the most aggressive player and she made things decidedly lively for several of her opponents at the same time. She was a very athletic young woman and played her best.

Now, in the games among the Plainfield girls there has been an absence of rumbles that has been noticeable. Saturday, however, there was an abundance of them. The Cranford girls played a far more aggressive game than their opponents but the team play, quick but quiet, was the principal factor in the result.

Within a minute of play, the first goal was scored by Miss Pruden by a pretty throw from the field. Other goals followed in the first half until the score stood 12 to 0 when time was called. In the second half, several of the visitors lost heart, while the Plainfield team became more confident as the score continued to roll up.

There was little attempt at a uniform fit the costumes of either side, although several of the local team wore red sweaters with the initials "G. A. A." in white on the front. Both teams wore the short bicycle skirts customary in the game.

Although at times the play did seem rather fierce, there was little roughness on either side and the best of feeling seemed to prevail among the players. The audience was impartial in its applause.

The low ceiling of the room can probably account for the fact that the Cranford girls were unable to score at all. They were accustomed to try for goals at some distance from the basket which the low ceiling did not permit. These, too, they were unable to send the ball any distance as in passing it they sent it against the ceiling.

There were no changes in the Plainfield team during the game. In the second half, Miss Plummer and Miss Crane, of the Cranford team, changed places. The substitute was the Cranford team, changed places. The substitute on the Cranford team were Miss Edna Teller, and Miss Florence Plummer.

The teams lined up as follows:

SEVENTEEN YEARS OF WORTHY CHURCH HELP

Anniversary of a Trinity Church Auxiliary.

GOOD ACTS ACCOMPLISHED.

SAVED SOULS AND HELPED THE POOR AND MISSIONS.

Ladies' Christian Work Society Celebrated an Auspicious Event Last Night—Much Credit is Due the Various Members for Their Assistance in Remodeling the Church Edifice—Rev. Mr. Schenck Paid a Glowing and Deserved Tribute for Their Help—Creditable Annual Treasurer's Report.

That most worthy and helpful auxiliary to the Trinity Reformed church, the Ladies' Christian Work Society, celebrated its seventeenth anniversary Monday evening in a fitting and appropriate manner. The progress of the society is marked and is best told by the reports of the secretary, Mrs. Harry W. Marshall, and the treasurer, Mrs. O. W. Dunham. A portion of the secretary's report, as read by her, is as follows:

"The seventeenth anniversary of the Ladies' Christian Work Society finds us with a membership of sixty active and six honorary members. We have added to our flock ten new members during the year, and three have resigned, and the good Lord has thought best to take two of our members from us. Our meetings have been well attended and the work accomplished is far beyond that done in preceding years. Much credit is due each member for faithful service in helping to convert what was formerly called our basement into a magnificent lecture room and parlor.

"The following committees have been engaged in doing the work of the society: Missionary committee has collected during the year from the five cent a month plan, $75.88; also, a special contribution of $10 for the Arabian and Indian missions. The Young Women's Mission Band of the church contributed $29.70 toward the upholstering and the purchase of a table for the parlor. A box was sent to the Rev. Schaffer in Dakota, valued at $115. A special service was held and the collection was given toward the expense of sending a missionary to Japan. The poor committee has provided for families in need of help. The sewing committee held nine meetings and made articles for the missionary box. The visiting committee has been engaged in looking after the sick, while the social committee realized $22.25 from the tea given in November at the home of Mrs. J. H. Tier. The sum of $180.96 was realized from the annual supper given in January, and $46.50 from the dollar social given in February. The temperance committee donated $5 to the W. C. T. U. and the Christian Endeavor Society donated $5 toward decorating the church on special occasions, which work was attended to by the flower committee.

"The carpet committee had a great responsibility upon them. The carpet for the church and pulpit cost $478.78; for the study and stairs $9.95, and the upholstering cost $568. We have had a blessing sent to us in the form of two checks for $100 each. The parlor committee gave an entertainment and realized $65.40. A silver water pitcher was donated by J. W. Johnson for the parlor. We feel that a great work has been accomplished during the year, and we extend to the retiring officers a vote of thanks."

The pastor, Rev. Cornelius Schenck, Ph. D., made a few congratulatory remarks recognizing the efficiency and help of the society in the church. He said that while no doubt the members would like to hear the voice of a stranger, there was no one that appreciated the work of the society more than himself. When any thinks, he said, of the $1,500 and over, received and collected by the members, of the labor, thought involved and plans executed, a slight idea can be obtained of what has been done. The name of the society has been properly taken, the Ladies's Christian Work Society, as the lines are numerous and broad. The chief object of the society is to save souls, to look to the condition of the poor, to send boxes to missionaries and to look after the social interests of the church. He congratulated and commended the members and said that no slight was intended on the other societies of the church, for all have worked zealously.

Mr. Schenck also spoke of the society being almost as old as the church and of the very great work accomplished during its existence. He then read the very excellent report of the treasurer which is as follows:

After the reading of the report Mr. Schenck delivered an interesting discourse on Mary, of Bethany, taking for his subject, "A Woman's Best Renown." During the evening Miss Etta Krymer rendered a very pretty soprano solo entitled "Consider the Lilies." The pulpit platform was tastefully decorated with flowers of the season by the flower committee of the church.

The Graduates of '96 and '97 Have Not Taken Any Steps to Arrange for a Meeting to Tax Year's Class.

Unless some action is taken at once, it is probable that there will be no alumni reception at commencement time at the Plainfield High School this year. It has been the custom for many years that the two classes graduating last should take charge of the reception which is tendered to the graduates.

This year, the presidents of the classes of '96 and '97 are out of town and will not return until late in June. If then, a preliminary meeting is usually called at the Easter vacation to start the preparations and the reception is usually placed in the hands of a committee which takes complete charge. There has been no preliminary meeting as yet and there is no prospects of one.

The members of the graduating class are very anxious about the matter as they have always considered the commencement reception as part of the graduating ceremonies. There was been talk among the members of the older classes of organizing an alumni association to take charge, but nothing has yet been done in the matter.

It is understood that the Board of Education would have no objection to allowing the reception to be held in the gymnasium in the Whittier building which would considerably reduce the expenses.

There is still considerable work to be done before arranging where the reception shall be held and none of the members of the classes of '96 and '97 have shown any willingness to take the matter in hand.

"Paper Missions."

The address of Mrs. F. S. Bussing, of New York, Friday afternoon, before the Young Women's Mission Band of Trinity Reformed church, was greatly enjoyed by the large number in attendance. She was introduced by the president of the Band, Mrs. F. E. Woodruff. Mrs. Bussing is a consecrated, enthusiastic, enter taining person and her remarks were principally on the "paper missions," a subject she is thoroughly conversant with. Her suggestions, if carried out, will be very helpful not only to the members of the Band, but to those to whom the members of the Band send their old papers, books, etc.

Editor Runyon to Build.

Frank W. Runyon, editor of the News, has decided to build a residence on Madison avenue. It will cost about $4,000. Mr. Runyon will occupy the house when it is completed.

THE BOROUGH COUNCIL.

REGULAR MONTHLY MEETING HELD FRIDAY EVENING.

The Matter of Putting a Permanent Pavement on Somerset Street was Discussed by Councilmen and Mayor—Other Matters.

The regular May meeting of the Borough Council was held Friday evening and all the members were present but Mr. Carey. The rooms of the Council, since the last meeting, have been newly carpeted, and new furniture has replaced most of the old, thereby presenting a very attractive place. The business considered during the evening was mostly along routine lines. The only item of great importance was the report of the special committee having in charge the accounts of former Collector Spencer. In another column their report appears. The other business of the evening transacted will be found below.

The report of Clerk Arnold was as follows: Borough balance, $1,772.47; lights, $1,134.39; roads, $1,369.86; fire department, $1,136.74; board of health, 55 cents; Watchung avenue account, $256.59; poor account, deficit, $389.96; paid county and State, $3,547.50; cash balance, $1,827.14. Fines, license fees, etc., to the amount of $199, was reported as being collected. The sum of $3,548.58 was reported as having been received from former Collector H. N Spencer.

Collector Brown reported collections to the amount of $5,190 59, disbursements $3,034.24, leaving a balance of $2,158.35.

The officers elect of the West End Hose Company and Warren Engine Company were submitted to the Council for confirmation. The name of Thomas Melcher was dropped from the roll of Warren Engine Company, and the following firemen applied for exemption papers, as they have served seven years: David Bodine, Dr Cooley, Henry Brokaw, Thomas McGann and W. T. Newman.

The G. A. R. memorial detail asked the Council to make the usual appropriation of $25 for Decoration Day use, and the same was granted.

A communication was received from the Board of Freeholders, notifying the Council that in order to open Union avenue, in Bound Brook, and Mountain avenue, in North Plainfield, for any purpose whatever, permission must first be obtained from the Board.

Residents of Rockview avenue, in a communication, agreed to pay one-half the cost for macadamizing that avenue to have the work done. The matter was referred to the street committee.

Mrs. Ellen Carney, of No. 27 Lincoln place, in a communication stated that she was entitled to $300 exemption, being a widow of a veteran of the late war, and she asked the Council to grant her the exemption.

Mr. Woolston, of the street committee, stated that during the past month, $437.45 was expended on street work, and that $11,800 had been expended thus far this year. The cost of macadamizing Somerset street was reported to be $388.90. Regarding the macadamizing of Rockview avenue, Mr. Woolston offered a resolution that the street committee be authorized to macadamize and grade Rockview avenue from Rockview terrace to West End avenue, at a depth of seven in ches and a width of sixteen feet, and that the property owners pay an amount equal to 30 cents a running foot, and that in case it cost more the property-owners are to pay their proportionate share.

Mayor Wilson appointed John Stein, as pound keeper, and George Gunther, as special marshal, and the appointments were confirmed.

Mr. Burtis offered a resolution that warrants for special school tax, $73 20, and special Board of Health tax, $3 45, be drawn in favor of Collector Brown.

The question of locating a permanent pavement in front of the schoolhouse, on Somerset street, was introduced by Mr. Woolston, and he said that there was a car-load of vitrified brick in Plainfield, and he thought it would be well to place it at that point. The cost of such work would be about $2,200, and one-third of the amount would be paid by the street railway.

Mr. Reed stated that asphalt can now be purchased for $1.85 a foot and guaranteed for ten years.

Mayor Wilson thought it would be well to investigate the matter more fully and report at a future meeting. The matter was, therefore, temporarily suspended.

A resolution was offered by Mr. Valiant which provides that a bill of $31 presented by Augustus Van-Deventer be investigated as to the charges on certain taxable property.

Mr. Burtis called up the tax ordinance on the third reading and it was adopted as a whole. The ordinance will take effect May 20th.

Mr. Rogers offered a resolution that copies of the new ordinance on the collection and assessment of taxes be sent to the assessor, collector and commissioners of appeal. Mr. Valiant stirred the patriotism of every member when he suggested that the borough secure an American flag and pole, and that the borough show its patriotism. He asked the Mayor to take hold of the matter and see if such a display cannot be made. He cited the recent action of the Plainfield Council, and he expressed the opinion that the borough could do just as much.

A short executive session was taken at this time, and when Council reconvened Mr. Rogers offered a resolution confirming the election of W. W Mills as a member of the West End Hose Company, and Mr. MacLaughlin offered a resolution authorizing the drafting of a warrant for $160 in favor of G. W. Rowley for services rendered as delinquent tax collector. This concluded the business and the meeting adjourned.

STICKS UP FOR SPENCER

FRIEND OF THE FORMER COLLECTOR TALKS ABOUT HIS TROUBLE.

Says That Mr. Spencer Was Not Given an Opportunity to Adjust the Difficulties as He Would Have Liked To.

A citizen of the borough, who is well posted on the matter of the Collector's accounts, states that he thinks that the treatment of Mr. Spencer has been, under the circumstances, rather unfair. He said to a reporter Saturday morning:

"In the first place, the officials of the borough after having the experts spend several months on the book and compiling a voluminous report, only furnished Mr. Spencer with a synopsis of it, from which he was unable to ascertain the particular items with which he was charged as being short, and his vouchers being in the hands of the Council, it was impossible for him to go over the accounts in a satisfactory manner.

"The committee only gave Mr. Spencer an opportunity to meet with them two or three evenings, when they had the report with them and evidently expected him to go over the entire matter, when it had taken the experts months to compile it in that limited time.

"As a matter of fact, Mr. Spencer found an error of over $1,000 license fees with which he had been charged, and found that it had been paid by him, which amount has been deducted by the committee.

"Another item of license fees and interests of over $1,100, which is included in the amount that Mr. Spencer paid, has without doubt been paid by him before, and he has evidence to that effect.

"These are evidently other items that can be accounted for as soon as Mr. Spencer has an opportunity to investigate the accountants' report more thoroughly, which the committee undoubtedly had in mind when they offered the resolution, which was passed last night, to the effect that, if it is shown by him that he is entitled to any credits which he has not received, the amount of such credits shall be refunded to him.

"It is natural to suppose that, during a term of twelve years as Collector and handling as he did considerably over half a million dollars, that he should have made a number of mistakes, but from my knowledge of Mr Spencer's character I know that he was just as anxious to have his accounts properly adjusted as were the borough officials, and the fact that he has paid this amount, while knowing that part of it at least will come back to him, signifies his willingness to act fairly in this matter.

"I have had business relations with Mr. Spencer extending over a long term of years and have found him straight forward and strictly honest in all his dealings, and am fully assured that the differences are owing to the antiquated methods of bookkeeping provided by the borough, and to errors made by him without intent on his part to wrong anyone."

Patriotic Decorations.

The show windows of two local merchants are now decorated, with war relics. In the window of J. Hervey Doane, the Park avenue jeweler, is the full dress coat worn by Rear Admiral Morton when he was a midshipman. There is also the battle flag of the Third Vermont volunteers, carried at the battle of Cedar Creek. Then there is a group of other war relics.

A little bivouac has been arranged in the show window of Edward White, the West Front street merchant. About it are grouped part of the equipment carried by E. C. Morse, of the borough, while in the Civil War. There are other appropriate decorations. A small electric fan keeps the stars and stripes and the Cuban colors in a constant flutter.

A Committe Camp Fire.

Something entirely new and novel will be held in the lecture room of Trinity Reformed church Friday evening. The idea is to have a meeting of all the committees of the Christian Endeavor Society and to enthuse more life and activity into each member. The first thing to be considered, on assembling, will be a bountiful supper, after which the open confer ence will be held. A pleasant and profitable evening is assured to all who attend and it is hoped every member of the different committees of the society will be present.

NETHERWOOD STARTLED

H. C. TALMADGE'S GAS-MAKING APPARATUS EXPLODED.

The Accident Occurred at 2 o'Clock Saturday Morning and Made a Loud Report—Fire Department Called Out.

The aristocratic residents of Netherwood were startled out of their slumbers at 2 o'clock Saturday by a loud explosion. Visions of warring armies of Americans and Spaniards meeting on the Heights, and discharging awful carnage into the ranks of each other were suggested to the minds of the peaceably inclined. Some may have stuffed the bed clothes into their ears to keep out the din of the battle, but those who were brave enough to get up and investigate noticed a glaring sheet of flames leaping up from a small building near the house of H. C. Talmadge on Belvidere avenue.

Patrolman Langer was at the Netherwood station at the time of the loud report, and he was considerably startled by the terrific noise. Looking towards the Talmadge home he saw the flames leaping up into the air. He hurried to Box 29 and sent in a fire alarm. The general gong failed to sound, but the gongs in the fire houses worked all right and in a few minutes the department was on the scene.

It was found that the trouble had been caused by the explosion of the apparatus with which Mr. Talmadge manufactures illuminating gas from gasoline for his residence. For some unaccountable reason the volatile fluid became ignited and exploded with a loud report, and enveloped the small house in which it is kept in flames.

The family of Mr. Talmadge was frightened over the explosion, but when they saw what it was they felt that there was not much serious danger in prospect.

The firemen turned on a stream from the chemical engine and in a few minutes had subdued the fire that had been raging. The loss will probably be about $100 to the building, but Mr. Talmadge will suffer considerable loss by reason of the destruction of the illuminating system for his residence.

This was the second time that the gas house had exploded and startled Netherwood residents.

SUNDAY SELLING CASE APPEALED.

Evidence Taken in City Court to Be Reviewed by Supreme Court.

Councilman Walter L. Hetfield, attorney for Jose Carbone, the North avenue fruit dealer, tried before City Judge Dellicker several weeks ago on a charge of selling cigars, tobacco and chewing gum Sundays, has succeeded in obtaining a writ of certiorari from Justice VanSickle, of the Supreme Court. The writ is returnable at Trenton June 7th, when the summer term of the Supreme Court opens.

Carbone was found guilty of violating the ordinance after the jury had been out only a short time. Carbone's defense was that he observed the seventh day of the week, Saturday, as his Sunday, and therefore had a right to keep his store open on the first day of the week.

The case is a test case, and on the result hang the half-dozen similar cases which were tried in turn afterwards.

The writ orders the City Judge to have before the Supreme Court all the proceedings in the case, which will be reviewed by the Court, and a decision rendered upon the legality and constitutionality of the verdict.

HOSE HOUSE FOR WEST END.

Councilman Runyon Has Plans for the Building.

It is the intention of the fire and building committee of the Council to place a new hose wagon in the new hose to be erected in the west end. At the next meeting of the Council Mr. Runyon, of the committee, expects to present to the Council plans and specifications for a new hose house in the west end. It has not yet been decided just where the house will been located. The committee deem it wise that a new carriage be purchased, as they think that three hose carriages should be in the central portion of the city all of the time

On the Way to the Klondike.

Walter Gordon Williams, the young Plainfield lawyer who left here several months ago, is now located at Seattle, Washington. He is working with the Seattle and Lake Washington Waterway Company, for whom he soon will strike out into the gold fields of Alaska where he will locate several claims for the company. He has written to Plainfield friends telling of his success there, and is very anxious that some of them should enjoy some of the advantages there with him.

Cut His Face Badly.

Thomas Nankin, a young boy living at 823 Richmond street, was running across a field in the borough belonging to Josiah Brown, when he struck a wire which was stretched across the lot. The wire caught the boy in the face and cut him severely. It was necessary for a physician to take eight stitches in the cut. The boy's face and lip is very sore and he suffers great pain.

MR. SPENCER SETTLES WITH THE BOROUGH

Final Report Made by the Special Committee.

THE COMMITTEE THANKED.

MAYOR WILSON SAID THEY SHOULD BE COMMENDED.

The Sum of $2,548.58 was Accepted by the Borough Council in Settlement of the Shortage in His Account, the Right Being Retained to Give Him the Benefit of Any of the Errors That Might be Cleared Away in the Future—Borough Has Secured Nearly $20,000 by the Investigation.

At Friday night's Borough Council meeting Councilman Burtis offered a resolution to the effect that the Council accept the settlement offered by former Collector Spencer, and still another resolution that if any errors are found in favor of Mr. Spencer that the latter receive full credit for the same. Both resolutions were unanimously adopted.

Mayor Wilson in discharging the special committee having the matter of Mr. Spencer's accounts in charge, thanked the committee for the very complete and satisfactory work accomplished.

The final report was as follows:

To the Mayor and Council of the Borough of North Plainfield:

About months ago a report was submitted to the Mayor and Council by Expert Accountants employed to audit and systematize the Borough Accounts. That report showed differences existing between the Collector's books and the amount due the Borough under the detailed statement as computed by the Expert Accountants. That report, which was submitted to your committee, has been adjusted in the following manner, to wit:—

As has already been reported by your committee the Collector made good, during the time the experts were examining his accounts, $4,000 of the money collected which he had omitted to report to the Council at the time of its collection.

Between the date of the experts report which came down to January 1st, 1898, and the retirement of Mr. Spencer from office he reported an additional sum of $1,412.25 more than he collected during that period, as appears from the supplemental report of the experts covering that time, which your committee found it necessary to employ the experts to bring its accounts and books, to be turned over to the new Collector, upon a proper basis.

During this supplemental examination your committee has found that an additional sum of $888 for Liquor license fees had been received by the Collector during various years which he had omitted to report upon and which it was the duty of the Collector to report, and which the experts, there being no record of it except at Somerville.

This amount together with the balances shown by the experts report to be due from the Collector for cash collected by him during various years from other sources and for which he had not accounted, makes up a total of $2,722.45 still remaining due from the Collector upon his retirement from office, exclusive of interest on any item and of any claims he may have.

Your committee considered that it was right to charge interest at the ordinary rate, 6 per cent., upon amounts which the Collector had collected and failed to account for, from the date of such collection. This item of interest amounted to $226.08, making a total balance of $2,948.53 due from the Collector for cash actually received by him. Of this amount as stated for which he had failed to account. In addition to this there remains the item of interest on delinquent taxes in cases where the original amount of the tax bill only had been accounted for by the Collector, while interest should have been collected amounting to $2,702.24.

Your committee had several meetings with Mr. Spencer and submitted to him and to an accountant chosen by him all the facts and figures in the possession of your committee, and after a full hearing and taking and accounts Mr. Spencer admitted his inability to find errors therein and showed a disposition to settle with the borough that amount which appeared to be justly due from him. He finally offered to pay the borough the balance of $2,548.58, shown by the accounts to be due, provided the Council would release him from liability for the $400 which he claimed on delinquent taxes above mentioned, and for deductions from assessed valuations made by him without due authority. Your committee would respectfully recommend that the Mayor and Council accept from Mr. Spencer the said sum of $2,548.58 as and for any claim against him for interest on delinquent taxes and for deductions from assessed valuations made by him without authority, upon the understanding that if he should be able to show within a reasonable time that he is entitled to any credit that he has not been allowed, then such amount shall be adjusted with him by the borough. On the other hand Mr. Spencer to retain benefit of any further accounts which it may hereafter be discovered he has received and which have not yet appeared by the books to have been paid to him. Your committee considers that the borough will be benefited in settling with Mr. Spencer in this way, by which he will account for only the money which he has actually received; and which will be more satisfactory to the borough under all circumstances.

Finally, if the settlement, as recommended is made, the borough will have received nearly $20,000 as the result of the examination begun in November last.

Your committee realizes that the lesson is hereby taught that the most systematic and thorough business methods are always necessary in public as well as private affairs.

Undoubtedly some of the discrepancies in the collector's accounts were the result of carelessness. With the modern system, now adopted in our borough, it is hoped such a condition cannot occur again.

Mrs. C. C. Park Dead.

Mrs. Charlotte C. Park, widow of the late Marcellus Park, died at her home on East Front street Monday Mrs. Park has been ill for some *time and her death was not wholly un*expected. The funeral services will be held from her late residence, 529 West Front street, Thursday afternoon at 2:30.

PRIZED RELICS FOR OLD FIRE FIGHTERS.

Presentation Made at the Meeting of Exempts.

A PATRIOTIC RESOLUTION.

MEMBERS WHO ENLIST WILL RECEIVE BENEFITS.

The Resolutions Unanimously Adopted—A Brass Cannon to Decorate the House, as Well as a Piece of Cannon That Exploded in 1861 and Killed a Man—Officers Elected for the Ensuing Year—Old Hand Engine Now Used at Scotch Plains Given to the Exempts—Will be Preserved by Them.

The members of the Exempt Firemen's Association held a lively and patriotic meeting May 4th, at which timethere were several presentations, election of officers and a patriotic declaration on behalf of the members who may enlist in the present war. The resolution adopted by the members will explain itself. It is as follows:

Whereas, War exists between these United States and Spain, and,

Whereas, Said war is carried on by the United States in the cause of humanity for a downtrodden, persecuted and starved people, and the destruction of the Battleship Maine and the loss of 266 lives; therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Exempt Firemen's Association, of the city of Plainfield, will and hereby do agree to pay from the general fund the dues and assessments of any of its members who may volunteer and serve in said war during the time said members are enrolled in the army or navy of the State of New Jersey or that of the United States.

The above resolutions were adopted unanimously and with three cheers for the United States.

During the evening there were three presentations to the Association. One was a brass cannon owned by Thomas McDonald, of the borough. The gift was accepted and will be put in ornamental condition to be placed in the rooms. It weighs nearly five hundred pounds. The other two gifts were from Gazelle Engine Company, No. 1. One was a relic of the cannon that burst when discharged in front of the North Avenue station in 1861. The explosion killed a man named Jennings. The other presentation was that of the old hand fire engine now used by the Scotch Plains department. Action on the latter presentation was taken at the meeting of the company last Monday evening, when it was decided to give the old engine to the Exempts. The provisions are that it is not to be disposed of in any way without the consent of the donors, and that the recipients are to keep it while the association is a collective body.

The election of officers resulted as follows: President, Auguste Saltzman; vice-president, Alex. Titsworth; recording secretary, G. Thorn; financial secretary, C. W. Clark; treasurer, J. Laing; trustees, D. W. Littell, E. M. Laing, W. A. Woodruff, J. A. Hubbard, E. A. Vermeule; representatives to Relief Association, Auguste Saltzman, G Thorn; representatives to State Association, W A. Woodruff, E M. Laing, J. E. Flannery, E A. Vermeule, E. M. Mosher; representative to visiting committee, G. W. Clark

Removal of Lehigh Valley Railroad Traffic Department.

On and after Monday, May 9th, the traffic department of the Lehigh Valley Railroad will be located at No. 26 Cortlandt street, New York.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

What does A stand for? When some friend suggests that your blood needs A sarsaparilla treatment, remember that A stands for AYER'S. The first letter in the alphabet stands for the first of sarsaparillas; first in origin, first in record, first in the favor of the family. For nearly half a century has been curing all forms of blood diseases—scrofula, eczema, tetter, rheumatism, erysipelas, blood poisoning, etc. There's a book about these cures—"Ayer's Curebook, a story of cures told by the cured,"—which is sent free on request, by Dr. J. C. Ayer, Lowell, Mass. The book will interest you if you are sick or weak, because it tells not what it is claimed the remedy will do, but what your neighbors and fellows testify that it has done. Will it cure you? It has cured thousands like you. Why not you?

MR. WHITE ENTERTAINED

MUSIC AND COMEDY HEARD IN A DRY GOODS STORE.

A Thousand People Visited the Mercantile Centre to Enjoy the Programme Arranged for their Pleasure.

All roads led to Edward White's big store on West Front street last Thursday. Despite the rain and dampness the people turned out en masse to attend the opening of his new stores. The opening lasted from 7:30 to 9:30 o'clock, and during that time there must have been over 1,000 men, women and children that passed in and out of the store. The arrangement of the two new stores that have now been thrown in with Mr. White's former establishment has already been noted in these columns.

A platform had been erected in one of the new stores close to the stairway. The Queen City Band was present and occupied the platform for part of the time. They played patriotic and other selections and did exceedingly well. Then there was a cornet solo by Prof. Bartow, of Bound Brook.

The feature of the evening's entertainment, however, was the appearance of the two famous leaders of minstrelsy, George Thatcher and his old friend, Edward Marble. They had a new string of jokes and gags already for the occasion, and they kept their hearers in a perfect roar of delight. They rattled off funny stories for twenty minutes, and then said good evening amid a grand burst of applause.

The store was decorated with tri-colored bunting and American and Cuban flags. The various commodities are also arranged about the counters in a tasteful display.

A RICH PRIZE.

Very Valuable Jersey Comes From Hood Farm to Plainfield.

L. V. F. Randolph, of East Front street, has purchased from Hood Farm, Lowell, Mass., Brown Bessie's Conqueror, one of the most promising Jersey bulls ever sent out from that famous establishment. He is by Brown Bessie's Son out of Tormentor's Fancy Wax. Brown Bessie's Son is at the head of the Hood Farm herd. He now has six daughters in the 14 lb. list and there are many more to follow. As his name indicates he is a son of the great Brown Bessie, owned at Hood Farm, and the winner of the 20 and 30 days butter tests at the World's Fair, Chicago, 1893. She made more butter in a day, a week, a month and throughout the entire period of the test than any other cow and averaged over 40 pounds per day for the twenty months she was in Chicago. Brown Bessie's Son traces three times to all Combination and has 50 per cent of the blood. Combination is the grandaire of Brown Bessie and also of the other great Hood Farm cow, Merry Maiden. These two cows were the greatest winners in the tests at the World's Fair and they were the only Jerseys that proved themselves superior to all other breeds in all three tests.

Tormentor's Fancy Wax, the dam of Brown Bessie's conqueror, has never been beaten in the show ring, neither has her dam. She carries one of the largest and finest udders imaginable, and her teats are long and well placed. She has a butter record of 15 pounds, 4½ ounces, which does not represent her full capacity. One of her sons is at the head of one of the choicest herds in the country, and although very young, he has six daughters in the 14 pound list, and five of them made their reports with their first calves.

Tormentor's Fancy Wax is by the imported Tormentor, the sire of 42 in the 14 pound list. Tormetor is by Khedive, the sire of Princess second, test, 37 pounds, 12½ ounces, and he is a grandsire of Onan, of Bryerside, 31 pounds 3 ounces, Ethleel second, 30 pounds, 15 ounces, and Toltee's Fancy, 27 pounds 6½ ounces. The dam of Tormentor's Fancy Wax is Fancy Wax, test, 19 pounds 3½ ounces with her first calf. She is the dam of three cows in the 14 pound list, and two of her sons have daughters with records. She is by Fancy's Harry, the sire of 37 in the 14 pound list, and is out of Beeswax, test, 17 pounds 5 ounces, and the dam of 5 in the 14 pound list.

Will Pay Soldiers' Dues.

At a recent meeting of Somerset Council, Jr. O. U. A. M., the members decided by a vote that any one of their number enlisting for the present war would have their dues paid while absent, and that if they have families the Council would look after them while the husband is away. This action was taken in view of the fact that a number of the members belong to military organizations and they are likely to be called.

Operation to Improve Hearing.

Amelia Carbone, the young daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Carbone, of North avenue, went to Muhlenberg Hospital Thursday afternoon to have an operation performed on her throat. Ever since the young girl was born there was a growth in the throat and it was very gradually affecting the hearing. The operation was performed by Dr. Long and Dr. Ard and was very successful.

SHE SOUGHT DEATH BY SELF CREMATION.

Horrible Manner in Which Mrs. Frazee Committed Suicide.

COVERED HERSELF WITH OIL.

FOUND IN FLAMS BY HER HUSBAND ON CELLAR STAIRS.

The Woman Had Been Ill and Despondent for Sometime, and it is Believed That She Grew Tired of Life—Got up at 5 o'clock Friday Morning and a Few Minutes After Her Husband Saw a Terrible Sight—Died in a Few Minutes — County Physician Wagoner Granted a Burial Permit.

What may be a deliberate case of suicide occurred last Friday on Catalpa avenue, in the borough, when Mrs. Alexander Frazee was most terribly burned to death about the body and head. For sometime past Mrs. Frazee has been unwell and has been very despondent. She has been treated by Drs. Long and Jenkins. Her mind appeared to be weak, and little hope was entertained of her recovery.

Last Thursday, however, she seemed to be in fairly good health, and she remained up quite late playing cards with her husband. When they retired for the night everything seemed to be all right.

Next morning about 5 o'clock Mrs. Frazee awoke and after putting on a dress went down stairs. Her husband was awake at the time, but thought little about his wife getting up. In fact he thought she was going to prepare to get breakfast.

She had been absent but a few minutes when Mr. Frazee heard a terrible scream. He jumped out of bed with his night clothes on and hastened down stairs. When he reached the first floor he saw nothing of his wife. He then went to the cellar. When he reached the kitchen the room was filled with smoke and the odor was offensive. At first he thought his wife had set fire to the house, but when he reached the cellar a most horrible sight greeted his eyes. There was his wife enveloped in flames and the flesh was burning to a crisp. In fact his wife was being roasted alive.

He removed his clothes and attempted to smother the flames. This had very little effect and he secured a pail of water which he threw over her. This did not extinguish the fire, and his wife was by this time unconscious.

In a very short time Mrs. Frazee was dead, and the quickness of her death was hastened by her inhaling the fumes of the fire and smoke into her lungs. When Mrs. Frazee was found with the fire she dropped into the cellar floor close by the steps leading to the kitchen. She was so left until Mr. Frazee sent for Dr. Jenkins. When the physician arrived he found that life was extinct. From the waist upward the flesh was burned to a crisp. The features of the face was almost removed, and was scarcely recognizable. A portion of one leg was burned for a short distance.

A case beside the dead woman was a lamp. The entire top was removed and about half of the oil used. The supposition is that Mrs. Frazee poured the oil inside of her dress and then set fire to it with a match. All the evidence is strongly in favor of that way.

Chief Marshal Wilson was notified concerning the terrible affair and he notified County Physician Wagoner, of Somerville. The latter came to North Plainfield and viewed the remains. He then gave a permit for burial.

The husband and children of the dead woman are grief-stricken over the affair and can give no good reason why Mrs. Frazee should have thus taken her own life.

After County Physician Wagoner viewed the remains he determined that it was a case of suicide.

Mrs. Frazee was born in New York and was 40 years of age. She leaves a husband and two daughters. She also leaves a sister, Mrs. Harvey Smith, of Prospect avenue. The funeral services were held Saturday afternoon and were private.

Congregational Committees.

A meeting of the trustees of the Congregational church was held in the church parlors Thursday. Routine business was transacted. The committees for the year were appointed as follows: Pews and sittings, Joseph E Morse, Ellsworth Dwight and Louis I. VanAlstyne; music, M. C. VanArsdale, J. E. Stewart and George W. Rockefellow; church property and repairs, George W. Rockefellow, J. E. Stewart and J. A. Powlison.

Oak is the Choice.

Voting for the State Tree on Arbor Day showed a preference among the children for the oak, the maple, the elm, and the chestnut. The votes for these trees were as follows: oak, 609; maple, 200; elm, 104; chestnut, 74. Among other trees for which votes were cast were the pine, the willow, the birch, the tulip, the poplar and the walnut.

REMEMBER THOSE HEROES.

Remember the heroes,
Who died on the Maine,
Who died with intense
Sorrow and pain.

Who were doing their duty
To save the souls
Of the poor starving Cubans
One night in the cold.

Who were killed by the Spaniards
On those dark waters deep,
And sank to the bottom
In a watery grave to sleep.

This causes the excitement
O'er the United States,
And that hurries other heroes
To enlist at great rate.

To fight the cruel Spaniards
Who think they are smart,
But, who we find out,
Have no shame in their hearts.

Then up with your guns
And your bullets hard,
And off for Havana
Which we will bombard.

And if we can get
This great city, you'll see
Cuba will have her share
Of peace and liberty.

WHIST TEA AT PARK CLUB

AFTER FASCINATING PLAYING, TEA AND CHAT FOLLOWED.

The Game Was Duplicate Whist, Divided Into Four Sections—How the Sections Were Made up—The Score.

The ladies of the Park Club were entertained at the club house Thursday afternoon with a "whist tea." It proved a most enjoyable occasion to those who ventured out in the storm to attend it.

As was evident by the name, whist was the attraction of the afternoon. There were sixteen tables which were all filled. After spending most of the afternoon at the fascinating game, the tables were cleared away and tea was served while the guests enjoyed a social chat.

The game was duplicate whist, and the guests were divided into the north and south section and the east and west section. The north and south section finally won with a total average of 136 to 124, the total average for the east and west section. Miss Ballard Long secured the most, nine points, for the north and south section. The Misses Wood were second with an average of seven. In the other section, Miss Bushmore and Miss Clapp had the highest average, ten, and Miss H. French and Mrs. J. Hallock were second with six points.

The sections were made up of the following:

North and South Section—Mrs. Ruggles, Miss Coleman; Mrs. Ball, Mrs. Fleming; Mrs. Corwin, Mrs. Staples; Mrs. Ivy, Mrs. Eldridge; Mrs. Mason, Mrs. Gilbert; Mrs. Cooley, Mrs. Dupee; Miss Cook, Miss Underhill; Mrs G. Hallock, Mrs. Runyon; Mrs. VanDeventer, Mrs. VanDeventer; Mrs. Harmon, Mrs. Chapman; Mrs. Dupee, Mrs. Drayton; Mrs. P. M. French, Miss M. French; Miss Ball, Miss Long; Miss Wood, Miss Wood; Mrs. Williams, Miss Mary French; Mrs. Waring, Mrs. Bigiow.

East and West Section—Mrs. Brown, Mrs. Townsend; Mrs Hatch, Mrs. Smith; Mrs. Rogers, Mrs. Howell; Mrs Hazen, Mrs. Wallace; Mrs. Ostrom, Mrs. Woodward, Miss Marsh, Mrs. Kimball; Miss Stockton, Miss Elsberg; Miss Northrop, Mrs. Stevens; Miss Hyde, Mrs. L. Brown; Miss Murphy, Mrs. VanVleit; Miss Woltman, Mrs. Laing; Miss H. French, Mrs. J. Hallock; Mrs. Barlow, Mrs Douglas; Miss Bushmore, Miss Clapp; Mrs Lyman, Mrs. Western; Mrs. Curtis, Mrs. Clapp.

At the tea table, Mrs. Walter M McGee and Mrs. F. O. Ball presided. The table was prettily decorated in pink.

The affair was arranged by Mrs. Charles A. Reed and Mrs. S. St. John McCutchen, who were complimented by all on the successful result of their efforts.

TEA IN HONOR OF A GUEST.

A Pleasant Social Affair Given by Georgie Wharton Edwards.

A delightful tea was given Friday afternoon by Mrs. George Wharton Edwards, of Franklin place, in honor of the Misses Dodd, of New York, who are spending the spring months at "The Chestnuts," on West Seventh street. As the guests entered the house, they passed over a large Spanish flag which covered the floor of the hall having been placed there that the guests might trample it under their feet. In patriotic contrast, the flags of the United States and of Cuba waved above the entrance to the drawing room.

The young women who assisted in the dining room were Miss Gertrude Wells, Miss Nella Whiton and Miss May Tracy. A number of the young society women of this city were present during the afternoon to enjoy Mrs. Edwards' charming hospitality.

Another Attachment.

Another attachment has been issued by Justice Mattison against the property of the former superintendent of the defunct New Jersey Military Academy, Dr. A. D Wards. The writ was issued for Stewart, of Philadelphia, to whom Dr. Warde owed $140 for the cadet uniforms.

WON'T LET SCHOLARS HELP THE S. OF V.

Peculiar Position Taken by Scotch Plains Principal.

CAMP HAND WILL NOT GO.

THE ANNUAL VISIT OF SONS OF VETERANS NOT APPRECIATED.

The Grave of the Valorous John Hand Will Not be Honored With Patriotic Exercises on Decoration Day This Year as Formerly—Principal Morey Says he Don't Care Whether or Not They Come to the Plains, and Even if They Did the Scholars Would Not Join With them as in the Past.

The heretofore harmonious feeling that has existed between the members of John Hand Camp, No. 28, Sons of Veterans, of this city, and certain people in Scotch Plains who have had charge of the exercises Decoration Day in that village, is now somewhat disturbed, and the prospects are that there will be no demonstration at Scotch Plains this year as heretofore since the camp of young men has been organized.

The trouble, which is of recent date, was caused by John R. Morey, principal of the public schools at that place, and he informs the Sons of Veterans through their committee that this year the school children will not turn out, that their parents do not wish them to, and as far as he is concerned it makes little difference to him whether the Sons of Veterans come to his place or not.

Mr. Morey says that last year the celebration at Scotch Plains was a failure and that it was due to the Sons of Veterans that it was. He claims that the school children were kept waiting about the streets for a long time because the Sons of Veterans did not keep their word and arrive at the appointed hour. For this reason, he claims that the parents object to having their children in the parade.

On the other hand, it is said, that Mr. Morey was put out because a committee did not come and notify him when the Sons of Veterans arrived, and he was therefore unaware of their coming. All sorts of things have been said and the consequence is that the members of the Sons of Veterans have no disposition to go to Scotch Plains, if they are not wanted there.

The matter was brought up finally Tuesday, May 3, at a meeting of the camp and the committee in charge stated that they had called on Mr. *Morey twice and had received no sat*isfaction from him, other than that he would not let the children participate this year. This incensed the committee and by a vote of the members of the camp the question of going to Scotch Plains was left with the committee.

Owing to the fact that the grave of the late John Hand is located in the Baptist cemetery at that place, the Sons of Veterans feel a peculiar interest in seeing that the grave is decorated, and the grave will be decorated this year as usual, but by a detail instead of the whole camp.

In regard to Mr. Morey's assertions about last year's celebration, the Sons of Veterans claim that the failure was due to Mr. Morey and that it was his fault that there was unnecessary delay. The outcome of the affair will be watched with interest by all interested, as the members of the Jr. O U. A. M. and the fire company have made arrangements to turn out and the Township Committee appropriated the usual amount of $10 for the celebration.

ALICE IN WONDERLAND.

A Pretty and Clever Little Entertainment That Was Given.

An entertainment for the benefit of the Boys' Mission Band of the Crescent avenue church was given Friday afternoon at the residence of Mrs Charles Ames, 553 West Eighth street. The programme was most attractive, and was planned and carried out by Mrs. Charles E. Brooks. It consisted of an amusing scene from "Alice in Wonderland," in which the characters were taken by Miss Grace Kaufman, Amee Brooks, Van Wyck Brooks, and Brockholst Miller. Miss Helen Harmon played a charming selection on the violin, and Van Wyck Brooks gave a burlesque recitation. The numbers on the programme were announced by George Richards, president of the band, and the other officers and members assisted by selling candy, lemonade, etc. About one hundred and twenty-five persons attended, and the whole affair was voted a great success. The thanks of the band are due Mrs. Ames and Mrs Brooks for the great interest and trouble they have taken on its behalf.

Four Brick Houses.

Charles H. Hand intends building four brick houses, two stories high and a fine store on the corner with flats above, on his property corner of Second street and Watchung avenue. The present frame dwelling house is now being taken down and the cellars will then be started.

TO PUT WARDE IN JAIL.

SOMERSET AUTHORITIES WILL TRY TO LOCATE HIM.

Attachments Continue to Pile Up on the Property of the School — No Trace of the Missing Man as Yet.

The troubles of the absent superintendent of the defunct New Jersey Military Academy are not yet over. Every day brings in new attachments against the property of the departed Dr. A. D Warde. Beside the pecuniary obligations that are piling up against him, the authorities of Somerset county are preparing to take a hand in the prosecution.

Now that all the affidavits and evidence have been placed in the hands of the assistant prosecutor of Somerset county, it is understood that every effort possible will be made to lay hands on the missing doctor and bring him to justice. Several vague rumors have gained credence about town to the effect that he had been located, but they have been proved to be without foundation.

Murphy & Blatz, who have had charge of the bringing of most of the attachments against Dr. Warde's property, added two new ones yesterday. Miss Anna D. Cooper, of West field, who taught elocution at the Academy, has gotten out an attachment for $24.50 alleged to be due for her services. Bolce, Runyon & Company secured an attachment on the property for $14. Harrington & Swackhamer brought a writ of attachment for C. H. Rugg amounting to $17.60.

There are now sixteen writs of attachment on the property at the Academy, together with one distress warrant. They amount in all to $630 84. The property at the school is worth not over $300. Then there are bills amounting to several hundred dollars more that have not made any attempt to attach the property.

Miss Susan Glass has laid claim to two pictures and roll-top desk at the Academy which she claims she loaned to Dr. Warde to furnish the building. She was formerly associated with Dr. Warde at the North Plainfield High School.

CHILDREN'S HOME ELECTION.

Annual Meeting of the Association Held Thursday.

The annual meeting of the Children's Home Association was held Thursday afternoon at the Y. M. C. A. building, and the attendance was excellent, considering the weather. Miss Ella Serrell, treasurer, presented her annual report, which was very encouraging. The amount of receipts during the year are $5,931.55, and there was a balance on hand May 1st of $502.01. The legacy and endowment account is $111 02, and the cash for current expenses is $390.99. There is $459.85 in the City National Bank, and there is cash on hand to the amount of $42 16 Donations to the amount of $1,281.67 were received during the year, and a legacy of $60.

The election of officers for the ensuing year resulted as follows: President, Mrs. Horace Kimball; vice-presidents, Mrs. I. W. Rushmore Mrs. Martin I. Cooley, Mrs. Laura B Gilbert; recording secretary, Mrs Ruth C. Leonard; corresponding secretary, Miss Lucy H. Everett; treasurer, Miss Ella Serrell; board of managers, Mrs. Francis Wood, Mrs. R. C Leonard, Mrs. Laura S. Gilbert, Mrs B A. Hegeman, Miss Rebecca Lloyd. Mrs. Marion S. Ackerman, Mrs. Dr Utter, Mrs. J. W. Dunn, Mrs. E L. Suffern, Mrs. Martin I. Cooley, Mrs. J C. Peck, Mrs. I. W. Rushmore, Miss E VanBoskerck, Mrs. Eleanor Williams, Mrs. Charles Place, Mrs. Chas W. McCutchen, Mrs. Wm. B. Maxson, Mrs. J. D. Titsworth, Mrs. Stephen Cahoone.

Mrs. B. A. Hendricks was appointed matron of the Home for another year, and Dr. Edward Rushmore the visiting physician. The standing committees will hold over until the June meeting.

PRICES OF FLAGS GOING UP.

Demand by Citizens for Bunting Likely to Exceed Supply.

The demand by patriotic citizens for flags and bunting to decorate offices, stores and houses has been so great that the supply is running short, and prices have gone up with a rush. Although the factories have been making bunting as fast as they can, the demand from almost all directions has fully kept pace with the supply, and from present indications it will soon exceed the present output.

Orders from the country districts are just beginning to come in, and city dealers say there are calls for tens of thousands of flags. The Government, it is said, has the first call on the bunting now being made, and until that is supplied private citizens will probably soon have to pay an advance of one hundred per cent. on the prices that ruled ten days ago.

Patsey Christmas Married.

Justice Mosher officiated at a wedding Saturday morning, and joined in matrimony Patsey Christmas, the contractor, and Miss Rosina Cappello, the latter from Italy. The witnesses were Fortunato Marmentino and Lorenzo Paoli. The couple will live in this city.

THE APPOINTMENT OF AN OVERSEER OF POOR

Why It Was Necessary to Present a Minority Report.

A DIFFERENCE ABOUT PAY.

FIRST AGREEMENT WAS NOT KEPT BY REPUBLICANS.

In the Alms Committee When the Matter was First Considered it was Agreed That I. D. TenEyck Should be Named, to Receive $100 in Excess of Salary as Alms House Keeper—The Sudden Change of Mind Made by Mayor Fisk Mixed Things Things and the Citizens' Committees Wouldn't Concede It.

Regarding the appointment of Christian Hansen, of 312 West Second street, as overseer of the poor, there are certain things that have not been been published and they should be know in justice to the alms committee.

Before the appointment was made it was generally understood by the Alms Committee, Messrs. Andrews, Hetfield and Leitse, that there were three candidates for the position The three persons were I. D. TenEyck, George Marx and Mr. Rockafellow, the latter a brother of Constable Rocka'ellow. While all three men were first class and well-adapted to fill the office, it was the sense of the committee that Mr. TenEyck should be appointed. The committee held several conferences regarding the matter and it was supposed that Mr. TenEyck would be appointed.

It was also agreed between the mem*bers that the salary for the holder of* the office should be $100 This was agreed to by Mayor Fisk and the committee. Nothing more was thought of the matter until the night of the appointment, when Mayor Fisk sent in the name of Christian Hansen. Messrs Hetfield and Leitse were surprised. Neither of them knew Mr. Hansen and were unable to say anything about him, as was reported in the Council proceedings at that time. Mr Andrews pressed the nomination and after much debate secured for Mr. Hansen the appointment in spite of the fact that the other two members of the committee desired to have the appointment laid over until the next meeting.

The matter passed along for a while and from time to time the question of calling Mr. Hansen's salary was deferred until last Monday evening, when Mr. Andrews stated that he disliked very much to make a minority report, but he found it was impossible for him to agree with the other members of the committee regarding the salary. He then moved that the salary be fixed at $250, $50 less than the amount paid last year.

Mr. Hetfield stated that it had been agreed in committee meeting that the overseer of the poor was to receive $100, and he objected to the increase, and thought the committee should abide by the agreement. The the other members, excepting Mr. Hetfield and Mr. Leitse, did not agree to, and Mr. Hansen's salary was made $250.

Mr. Hetfield says that Mr. Andrews secured the nomination of Mr. Hansen after the consideration of the other three candidates, and that $300 was promised him for salary, but to compromise matters the amount was reduced to $250. Mr. Hetfield and Mr. Leitse feel very much the slight accorded them in not being recognized in the appointment, and think it only fair that their side of the story be heard.

Borough Fire Officers.

Warren Engine Company has elected the following officers: Foreman, Walter Bennett; first assistant, D. C. Allen; second assistant, F. M Lunger; recording secretary, Julius Stahl; financial secretary, David Bodine; engineer, Alonzo Brokaw; first assistant, Joseph Newman, second assistant, Louis Feiring; stoker, Edward Smith; representative to the Relief Association, J. J. Stahl.

Children should always increase in weight. Not to grow, not to increase in flesh, belongs to old age.

Present and future health demands that this increase in weight should be steady and never failing.

To delicate children, Scott's Emulsion brings richer blood and firmer flesh. Better color comes to the cheeks and stronger muscles to the limbs. The gain in weight is substantial; it comes to stay.

SPORTS

VARIOUS SPORTS.

At the Interscholastic games held at Princeton Saturday, George Proctor Smith won the pole vault. He also finished third in putting the shot.

Carroll L. Runyon, captain of the track team of the Plainfield High School, yesterday sent in the entries for the High School team for the New Jersey interscholastic games. Runyon is entered in the hammer throwing; Walter L. Long in the high jump; Joseph DeForrest in the discus, and Harry Cuming in the bicycle race. At the last moment Rhey T. Snodgrass backed out of the running events and announced that he would not take part in the games. George Proctor Smith, formerly of the New Jersey Military Academy, entered the High School lately so as to be able to take part in the State games. As he has not yet become a member of the High School Athletic Association, he could not be entered with the rest. The entries close today.

The young athletes, who were formerly students at the New Jersey Military Academy until that institution collapsed, now find themselves in a rather peculiar position. Among them is George Proctor Smith, president of the New Jersey Interscholastic Association. According to the rulings of that association, it will be impossible for the young men to now enter another school and enter the State interscholastic games. The rules are so made as to prevent athletes from attending school a few weeks in advance of the games so as to be able to enter. They are required to be at school several months before they have a right to enter from that school. As it is now too late to enter the High School and compete from there and as the New Jersey Military Academy is no more, Smith and his schoolmates are in a quandary. It is not likely that any special arrangement could be made as the athletes of the other schools in the association are all jealous of the ability of the Plainfield opponents and would vigorously oppose any rule that would so evidently favor them.

AROUND THE BASES.

The Plainfield Juniors defeated the Dunellen Juniors Monday afternoon by a score of 18 to 12. Last year the score was reversed.

The young Orientals will play the Bound Brook Athletic Club Saturday at Bound Brook. The battery for the Orientals will be John Callahan and Harry Drake. Patrick Ryan, short stop, has been released and H. Angleman taken in his place.

Baseball at the Plainfield High School has come to a sudden stop. There is a lack of financial support from the athletic association that will make it absolutely impossible for the team to continue. The reason for the lack of support that controls the sport is due to the fact that the treasury is perilously near a stage of emptiness while the bills that have already been contracted will take every cent there is in the treasury. It is not an easy thing to run a baseball team, especially if the financial support is limited. Manager Claude Edwards has done well with the team, but the members of the association were lax in their aid. The support of the public at the games was not sufficient to render the team self-supporting. So they had to draw on the treasury. The expenses of the track team added to the rapid disappearance of the small amount left. The interest in baseball among the High School boys has certainly decreased considerably. The members of the team no longer turn up to practice, and there are only a few who are really working for the good of the team. The High School has two more games to play, one at Newark Academy and the other here with the Princeton "Prep." As in each case the management has to pay one-half of the expenses, the games will probably be cancelled and the High School will withdraw from the contest.

CYCLING COMMENT.

Fred Pope, of West Front street, is riding an Eldridge wheel.

Frank Haurand, of Lederer's dry goods store, is arranging a bicycle parts. The plan is to issue invitations for a limited number. The party will ride to Elizabeth and return on the train. They will then go to some convenient place and have a supper.

Another bicycle run was held by the members of the Epworth League of the First M. E. church Monday evening There were twelve young people who took part in the run. They met at the church and after a spin to Oak Tree returned to the parsonage on Central avenue where a social time was enjoyed.

BASKET BALL

There is considerable talk of having the return match between the girls teams of this city and Cranford played on the lawn to one of the large residences in Cranford. It was first proposed to play in the gymnasium of the Cranford Athletic Club, but it is very small for the purpose and will accommodate but few visitors.

WESTFIELD.

Westfield, May 11.—The friends of Warren Woodruff and Miss Hattie Terry are offering congratulations today. They were married in New York by the Rev. Robt. F. Sampias about seven months ago, but they kept the secret well and it just came out Monday. Miss Terry is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. B. Terry, of South Broad street, and has been employed as cashier in M. B. Walker's grocery store for the past year. She is a fine looking young lady and has a large circle of friends. Mr. Woodruff is the son of B. A. Woodruff, one of the leading merchants of Westfield. Mr. and Mrs. Woodruff are now living with the bride's parents on South Broad street.

Tomorrow afternoon the Womens' Sewing Society of the Presbyterian church will hold their regular monthly meeting in the lecture room of the church. A supper will be served at 6:30 o'clock.

Rev. C. M. Anderson, pastor of the Methodist church, went to Bayonne last evening to preach the funeral services over the remains of one of his late congregation at that place.

Thieves broke into the store of M. J. Gildersleeve on Broad street Monday morning and stole about $6 from the cash drawer. An entrance was gained through a rear window.

Rev. Charles Fisk, rector of St. Paul's church, ran into a large dog while riding a bicycle on Broad street yesterday morning, but was uninjured exept for a few scratches.

The fine weather has brought out the flags again and Old Glory now flies from nearly every house and place of business in the town.

Mr. and Mrs. W. F. Moody, who have been stopping at Cranford, are now living in Westfield, having leased a house on Clark street.

Mrs. John Z. Hatfield delivered an interesting address at the "Mothers' Meeting" held in the W. C. T. U. Hall yesterday afternoon.

L. E. Hart's office building is almost completed, and when finished will add much to the attractiveness of Elm street.

The infant child of Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Dundes died at Branch Mills Sunday afternoon.

The fountain at the corner of Broad street and North avenue has been put in working order.

H. H. Downer has returned to his home on Park street after a two weeks' visit at Chicago.

The altar society of St. Paul's church will meet in the parish rooms Friday evening.

R. F. Hoenstein has laid a stone flagging in front of his property on Prospect street.

The closing reception of the Westfield Social Club will be held Friday evening.

The Ladies' Aid Society of the Methodist church meets this afternoon.

The Westfield Social Club held their regular monthly meeting last evening.

Mrs. Collins moved into the Ball homestead on Broad street yesterday.

Mrs. Paul Philip, of the Boulevard, is confined to her home by illness.

The vestry of St. Paul's church will hold a meeting this evening.

George W. Wresmick has opened a cigar store on Elm street.

The North Avenue Hotel is being painted and decorated.

Mrs. William Banister is visiting friends at Newark.

NEW MARKET.

New Market, May 11—Friendship Council, Jr. O. U. A. M., who has heretofore appropriately observed Fourth of July, will, this year, follow out the custom of former years. Already the members are beginning to arrange for the event, and they promise one of the best times ever held. There will be games, a band of music, celebrated speakers and a grand display of fireworks. All this will take place by the lake, where the cooling breezes always can be found.

Rev. Frank Fletcher went to Raritan yesterday to attend the regular meeting of the Ministers' Association.

Miss Corieli has been visiting her sister, Mrs. Clarence White, of Red Bank.

Miss Irene Day has returned from a visit with out-of-town friends.

To Return the Old Engine.

Scotch Plains, May 11—At a special meeting of Excelsior Hook and Ladder Company in their rooms last evening, it was decided that the members should meet at the company's headquarters at 5 o'clock this afternoon for the purpose of returning Gamble's hand engine in a body to the Exempt Firemen's Association in Plainfield.

Mrs. J. M. Tier, of Bank place, is visiting out-of-town friends.

ALL DONE IN HIS NAME

ANNUAL MEETING OF CITY UNION OF KING'S DAUGHTERS.

City Nurse Told How the Poor Appreciate the Efforts Made to Make Life Happier—Officers Elected for the Ensuing Year.

The annual meeting of the City Union of the King's Daughters was held Monday afternoon in the Sunday-school room of the First Baptist church. New officers were elected, and reports from the Union as well as from the different circles read. The reports showed that the Union is in a flourishing condition financially, and the results of the year's work can be looked upon very pleasantly.

The meeting was opened with devotional exercises by Rev. Dr. Yerkes. The treasurer's report as submitted showed that the receipts for the contingent fund were $30.66, the expenditures $17.87, leaving a balance of $12.18. The amount paid for the nurses' services was $9.93. The report of the nurse fund showed that $807.88 had been received, and $691.01 expended, leaving a balance of $116.87. The camp fund report showed the receipts to have been $287.64, expenditures $188.63, balance, $99.01.

Miss Hartranft, the city nurse, was also present, and made a report of her year's work. Miss Hartranft is quite enthusiastic over the prospects for good among the poor of this city, and told how anxiously the people looked for her coming, when due on her regular visits, and how much they appreciated her efforts in their behalf.

The reports of the various circles of the city were generally short, but contained much that was gratifying. In almost every case the circles had been actively engaged in distributing Christmas and Thanksgiving dinners to the poor, paying their shares towards supporting the city nurse and helping the work along in every possible direction. The Co Workers Circle reported that they had taken a young girl in Burmah to teach, and had named her Emily Butler, after their beloved president, and the Daughters of the Cross said they had added twenty-six new members during the past year.

Mrs. L. H. Biglow, Jr., was given an opportunity to tell something about the needs and wants of the Girls' Club. Mrs. Biglow said that the City Union had decided that they could not support the club financially any more, and that now they would have to look for aid among those outside of the union. The club is about to change its quarters to the house in the rear of the Jackson building on Madison avenue, and it will be under heavier expenses. It is desired that as many of the male members of the community interest themselves in the club as possible.

The election of officers resulted as follows: President, Mrs. Charles A. Reed; vice-president, Mrs. Edward Caldwell; corresponding secretary, Miss Emma Haviland; recording secretary, Miss Delphine Bowers; treasurer, Miss Linda Butler. It was decided to revise the constitution and a committee, consisting of Mrs. Frederick G. Mead, Mrs. W. L. C. Glenny and Miss Linda Butler, was appointed to look over the matter and to report upon it in the fall. The circles have a year now in which to pay their pledges to the nurse's fund, instead of six months, as formerly.

MOSES SCHLOSS MARRIED.

Scheuer & Company's Popular Young Manager Takes a Wife.

Moses Schloss, manager for Scheuer & Company, of this city, was married Tuesday to Miss Minnie Krieger, of Philadelphia. The wedding took place in Casino Hall, Philadelphia, the ceremony being performed by Rabbi Leucht, of Newark.

The wedding was attended by over 200 guests, from among the most prominent Jewish families of that city, and by William and Emanuel Schloss, brothers of the groom, from Plainfield. After a short honeymoon, the couple will take up their residence on Sandford avenue in this city.

—The Twilight Social Club will give a dance in the afternoon and evening of Decoration Day at the Crescent Rink.

—The annual conference of the Union County Christian Endeavor Union will be held Thursday evening, May 26.

AUSTRIAN EMPEROR TALKS.

Strict Neutrality But Strong Representation in the East.

Vienna, Austria, May 11, 1 p. m—The Emperor, in his speech in the Reichstag today, said that Austria would observe the strictest neutrality.

He hoped that the war would soon be finished by some equitable arrangement and he hoped for pacific developments in the east.

In view of the present uncertain situation, he said, the maintenance of a powerful armament in the east was necessary.

Chased By Spanish Ship.

New York, May 11, 12:40 p. m—The steamship Schleswig arrived at this port this morning after a very exciting voyage.

While off the coast of Hayti in the West Indies the steamer was fired upon by a Spanish warship. The Schleswig was chased for several hours.

It was only the poor marksmanship of the Spanish gunners that enabled the American ship to escape. The shots and shell flew wild and the ship was never struck once.

Dewey the Ruler Now.

AT CAMP VOORHEES.

Prospect of Jersey Boys Being Soon Ordered to Go to the Front.

Camp Voorhees, Sea Girt, N. J., May 11.—There seems a definite prospect soms of Jersey's blue-coats will soon be ordered to the front, and as a result everybody here is on the qui vive with excitement. The First Regiment has been mustered in with the exception of two companies. Capt. Butler is now hard at work preparing to muster in those companies. The army officers who are to assist him are expected today, and when they come the work will go forward with renewed vigor.

Meanwhile the boys of the Third Regiment are being looked over by the medical examiners and will soon be ready to be mustered in.

The return of pleasant weather put new life into the soldiers and drills and camp duties have been performed with energy.

The rumors as to who are to go and where they are to go are endless, but it is the general opinion that the First Regiment will leave the last of this week for the National camp at Chickamauga.

THE NAVAL RESERVE.

Premise of Active Service on the Badger for Battalion of the East.

Hoboken, N. J., May 11—There is a promise of active service at last for the Naval Reserves of the Battalion of the East. There was general disappointment when the detail ordered to take the monitor Montauk to Portland Me., was ordered home. Even when it was announced that the reserves would take charge of the auxillary cruiser Badger, there was a general feeling that the boys would only be disappointed again.

The action that has given the Jersey reserves renewed interest was the swearing in of Paymaster A. H. Colby, at the Brooklyn navy yard Monday night. He was ordered to make requisition for the articles needed for the reserve on board the Badger. The announcement had already been made that the Badger would be ready to be put in commission two weeks from Monday last. The Naval Construction Board has decided to condemn the flooring on one of the decks which will necessitate more and a further postponement of the time for active service.

Despite the delay, however, the Naval Reserves are now taking renewed interest as they believe that they will really go to sea on the Badger in the course of a few weeks.

Even if the Badger is not put in commission until three weeks from now, it will be necessary for a detail of the Battalion to go on board nearly a week before that date to assist in the preparations.

Those of the reserves who have been aboard the Badger are greatly pleased with her appearance and consider her a very sea-worthy vessel. Her armament is being prepared and will shortly be placed in position.

Meanwhile, the members of the reserve are relieved from the strain of expecting to be called out for duty at any moment.

A Menace to Health.

South Stirling, May 11.—The Board of Health of Warren township was this morning notified that a dead horse, which was owned by Rosyln Smith, a retired lawyer living at Washingtonville, had been lying in an open field on the farm of Augustus Sticket for several days and emitting a disgusting stench. Sticklet was ordered to have the dead carcass removed.

Mrs. James Southard, of this city, has returned from a visit with Mr. and Mrs. Charles Terrill, of Irvington. Mr. Terrill is a brother of Moses Terrill, of this city, and last Monday was appointed postmaster of Irvington.

From the Heart of London

In the house of the great Madame Dalbert, Regents Park, London, Eng., there lives a French girl named Angelus Daubene, whose restoration to health through taking Dr. Campbell's Red Blood Forming Capsuloids has attracted the attention of many people in the neighborhood of Regents Park. She writes as follows:

THE CAPSULOID COMPANY.

GENTLEMEN:—I have the good fortune to know your Manager. I say "good fortune" because six weeks ago when I met him I was a physical wreck through ulcer of the stomach, which caused me dreadful distress so well as anemia so bad that I was as pale as any corpse. I had not left the house for nine weeks, and I had made my will although only 22 years of age. When your Manager asked me to try Capsuloids, and told me they were not a patent medicine and contained only iron, I smiled and said iron was poison to me, that I would not dare touch it. He kindly explained that your Capsuloids contained saturol iron, exactly like the iron which my blood lacked so woefully. He offered to stay with me for an hour after I took the first Capsuloid for, in spite of his assurances that Capsuloids were as mild as milk, I expected to suffer indigestion pain immediately. I was surprised to find that my stomach was as free from pain at the end of the hour as before I took the Capsuloid. I have taken them regularly now for six weeks, without once feeling discomfort from them; the ulcer in my stomach is healed; I can eat even meat and potatoes; I can assure you my cheeks are rosy; I have gained 18½ pounds, and I am better and stronger and freer from headache and sickness than I have felt in years. I cannot repay you, but I am sure you have sold two hundred boxes in this locality through the change you have brought about in me.

I am ever thankfully yours, ANGELUS DAUBENE.

WAR NEWS!

A HUNDRED THOUSAND MEN TO GO TO CUBA.

Invasion to Be Pushed Forward Despite the Spanish Fleet.

General Merritt Has Secured More Regular Troops For Manila Expedition—The Spanish Cabinet Formed—Various Reports of the Locality of Spanish Fleet.

NO DELAY IN INVASION.

The Cuban Invading Force Has Been Increased to a Hundred Thousand Men.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

Washington, May 18, 10 a. m.—A stock of announcements and rumors from the War Department has attracted attention particularly in that direction today, and given the officials something to talk about.

It is difficult to keep up with the latest decisions regarding that projected invasion of Cuba. Rumors regarding the possibilities of its starting have grown so contradictory that few exactly know what is going to be done.

The statement was made this morning by an official high in power in the War Department that the preparations for the invasion will go forward and the movement started regardless of the movements of the Spanish fleet.

Then a change has been made in the strength of the army of invasion. Instead of the 25,000 troops that were to be sent, 100,000 soldiers will go to the island of Cuba.

It has been announced that General Merritt has won in his controversy with the War Department. He will secure that larger force for invading the Phillippines that he demanded. The first installment of troops to be sent to Manila will consist of 11,000, and 14,000 more will follow.

The report that was in circulation yesterday to the effect that President McKinley was preparing to make a second call for volunteers was officially denied by Major General Miles.

There is a semi-official report that says that the Spanish fleet, whose movements have kept everybody guessing, is now at San Juan.

Captain Hart, the well-known filibuster, will probably be pardoned at once. His pardon has now reached President McKinley, and only needs his signature to make it effective.

Washington, May 18, 1:20 p. m.—It is rumored in army circles that Roosevelt's Rough Riders will be ordered today to proceed immediately to Cuba.

It has been decided that the Pennsylvania troops are to go to San Francisco immediately ready for embarkation for the Philippines.

A report, not yet officially confirmed, is current to the effect that the Spanish fleet is heading for the harbor of Cienfuegos on the southern coast of Cuba.

From the Navy Department comes the statement that Rear Admiral Sampson has been instructed to cut the Cuban cable without delay.

The rush of office seekers still continues at the White House. President McKinley is besieged with requests for billets.

Cape Haytien, Hayti, May 18, 1:40 p. m.—The United States cruisers Minneapolis and Yale arrived at this port this morning.

SPANISH CABINET FORMED.

Names Handed to the Queen Regent—Ministers Will Be Sworn in Tonight.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

Madrid, May 18, 11:53 a. m.—The new Spanish cabinet has been formed. It is made up as follows:

President of Council, Senor Praxedes Sagasta.

Minister of Foreign Affairs, Senor Leon y Castillo.

Minister of War, Lieutenant-General Correa.

Minister of Marine, Vice-Admiral Auson.

Minister of the Colonies, Senor Romero Giron.

Minister of Finance, Senor Lopez Puligcerver.

Minister of the Interior, Senor F. R. Capdepon.

Minister of Justice, Senor C. Grotzard.

Minister of Public Instruction, Senor Gamazo.

Senor Sagasta submits the names to the Queen Regent today and the ministers will be sworn in this evening. Premier Sagasta will act as Foreign Minister, pending the arrival of Senor Castillo.

NEWSPAPERS TO BLAME.

Too Much Publicity Spoiled the Gussie Expedition Say Army Officers.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

Tampa, Fla., May 18, 1:50 p. m.—The colony of newspaper correspondents located here have been officially notified that in the future no mention must be made of small expeditions similar to that of the Gussie until success is assured.

They consider that success will be assured when the expeditions return and until then nothing must be said about them.

Army officers believe that the publicity given in advance to the Gussie expedition was largely responsible for the failure of the Gussie to land supplies.

The correspondents are warned that the papers publishing such stories be*fore permission is given will be* debarred from sending correspondents to Cuba with the army.

To the Relief of Dewey.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

San Francisco, May 18, 10:20 a. m.—The United States cruiser Charleston moved from the Mare Island navy yard to this city early this morning preparatory to sailing to the relief of Dewey at Manila. The Charleston carries a large supply of ammunition for the American fleet there, besides a deck load of bags of coal. The bunkers are filled to overflowing. Every bit of spare room is devoted to storage of coal and ammunition.

To Protect Atlantic Coast.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

Newport News, May 18, 1:40 p. m.—It is unofficially reported here that the fifth American squadron is being formed for the defence of the middle Atlantic coast. It will be composed of the cruisers Columbia and New Orleans, and the auxiliary cruisers Yosemite and Dixie, and also the mosquito fleet. Captain Sands will command the flag ship Columbia.

Heavy Cannonading Heard.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

Port au Prince, Hayti, May 18, 11:12 a. m.—The commandant of the island of Tortuga, of the northwest coast of Hayti, reports that he has heard further heavy cannonading eastward of Tortuga. The heavy fog that prevailed at the time prevented the sighting of anything that would indicate the cause of the firing.

At Work Again.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

Pittsburg, Pa., May 18, 1:45 p. m.—After an idleness of thirty years the shops at the Allegheny arsenal started today with a large force working in the manufacture of leather goods.

The volunteers of the Fifty-ninth Pennsylvania regiment passed through here this morning bound for Chickamauga.

SALUTED THE SOLDIERS.

Troops Going South Cause a Demonstration to be Made in Dunellen.

Three train loads of soldiers from Camp Black and Camp Hempstead passed through here Tuesday bound for the south. The soldiers were taken as far as Washington on the Central in three trains of fourteen cars each.

The troops were under the com*mand of Col. Fred Grant.*

Along the line there were demonstrations of a patriotic nature, but at Dunellen the enthusiasm of the people knew no bounds. Under the direction of Night Agent Charles Dunham, assisted by Arthur Vail and Paul Kratzel, the station was decorated with flags and lanterns and presented a gala appearance. The entire station platform was one great sheet of colored light, red and blue lanterns, and as the trains passed a few minutes behind each other fire crackers were exploded and a salute of twenty-one guns fired from a small cannon.

The soldier boys appreciated the reception, and although the trains went whizzing through so fast that only a glimpse of the station could be caught, they flung their arms out of the windows and waved their caps furiously. The first section passed Dunellen at 10:10, the second fifteen minutes later, and the third at 10:30. The run to Washington was made in good time, and next morning thirty-one of the empty coaches passed through this city on their way back to New York. Early yesterday three more train loads of Massachusetts boys passed through this city.

Robert A. Grant, of Grove street, has moved to Mountain avenue.

J. C. VanDyke, of East Front street, has had his house newly painted.

Fred Breem, of the fire department, has returned from a short vacation.

THE FAULTS OF THE BUILDING ORDINANCE

Important Hearing in The Councilmanic Chamber.

CHANGING THE FIRE LIMITS.

PROMINENT BUSINESS MEN MAKE MANY SUGGESTIONS.

President Lounsbury, of the Board of Trade, Thinks That the Law Ought to be Abolished Entirely. 4½ There are No Towns of Plainfield's Size That Maintain Any Such Restrictions —J. D. Runyon Advocates Several Changes—There Should be Greater Liberty on All Building Operations.

The building ordinance, enacted by the Common Council two years ago, which has been under the fire of severe criticism by builders and business men since it became a law, had its defects brought to the direct attention of members of the Common Council Tuesday, when a hearing was given by the laws and ordinance and fire and building committees.

Though there are no classes more than architects and contractors interested in the law, only two representatives of those advocations were present at the hearing—B. Fosgate and William Brokaw.

The meeting was called to order by Councilman Runyon, as chairman of the fire and building committee. Mr. Runyon said that it has become apparent that the building ordinance is defective. E. M. Laing, as chairman of the committee from the Board of Trade, offered a resolution which was unanimously adopted at a meeting held by the Board on April 20th, that the fire limits be cut down to Central avenue, 150 feet south of the railroad, Watchung avenue and Green brook.

Mr. Lounsbury suggested that the fire limits be shortened, and that the building ordinance be abolished outside of fire limits. Mr. Lounsbury said that he had written to the city clerks of cities situated as Plainfield is, and depending upon their growth from the same sources as is this city, and read letters from the clerks at Montclair, East Orange, Orange and Elizabeth. There is no building ordinance in any of these cities except East Orange, which has an inspector and a fire ordinance which covers the city 150 feet away from the main streets. Mr. Lounsbury made a speech point of Elizabeth, with three times the population of Plainfield, and with no building ordinance.

John D. Runyon offered the following suggestions: First, to reduce the fire limit; second, to establish open fire limits for those parts of the city which are situated within the fire limits, but which are in the open; third, to allow bay windows and small additions to be made to buildings to be built of wood, the additions not to exceed ten per cent. of the size of the original building; fourth to allow store buildings to be of larger size and a greater height but with an eight inch wall; fifth, to allow store fronts to be built of wood covered with metal, instead of brick, as now required; sixth, to permit some one or some committee to allow changes to be made in the ordinance when fire rules are not involved; seventh, to take and incorporate in the ordinance that the building ordinance is for the best interests of the people, not for the benefit of the insurance companies.

William Woodruff echoed Mr. Laing's sentiments. James Pope wasn't in favor of abolishing the ordinance, but thought it could be improved. He said people who are being compelled to connect with the sewer, ought to be allowed to build frame additions to their houses for that purpose, instead of being compelled to erect the structures of brick.

A. R. Thorn said William Brokaw thought the ordinance ought to be changed, and so did B. Fosgate. Mr. Lounsbury called attention to section 2, page 7, of the ordinance, where it requires brick walls which divide a row of houses to be eight inches in thickness and asked that that be changed. Mr. Fosgate thought that the wall was not thick enough, and said he would rather see it twelve inches thick.

"Yes," said Mr. Lounsbury, "that would be very nice if you wanted to discourage building."

Chief Doane, the building inspector, said that the ordinance was meant to protect the poor man who, if there were no ordinance and no inspector, would be imposed upon by unscrupulous builders, and said that the differences in cost between building a $1,200 house under the requirements of the ordinance and without it was

GREETING TO GRADUATES

ALUMNI RECEPTION FOR THE HIGH SCHOOL COMMENCEMENT.

Meeting of the Classes of '96 and '97 Held Tuesday Evening and Details Arranged—200 Tickets Will Be Issued.

There is to be an alumni reception at the Commencement exercises of the Plainfield High School this year. That has been decided. And it will be on just as extensive a scale as last year.

A meeting of the members of the classes of '96 and '97 was held at the High School building last Tuesday to take definite steps in the arrangement of the reception. As many of the members of both classes are out of town, the attendance was comparatively small. Miss Grace E. Overton, vice-president of the class of '96, called the meeting together and acted as the chairman.

It was decided without a dissenting voice to have a reception at commencement time. Furthermore, it was decided that it should be held in the Casino the evening of Thursday, June 23d, from 10 until 1 o'clock, after the commencement exercises in Music Hall.

There will be 350 tickets issued. Each member of the graduating class will receive four. A similar number will be given to each member of the two classes, '96 and '97, who give the reception. The Juniors will receive no tickets according to the precedent set last year. There will be a limited number of subscriptions which will be disposed of among the rest of the alumni. The members of the classes of '96 and '97 will be assessed the usual amount.

Full power to arrange any other details that may come up was given to the finance committee, which is composed of the following: Miss Grace E. Overton, '96, chairman, Miss Edith L. Pruden, '97; Miss Grace Crane, '97; Henry Eggerding, '96; Charles M. Dolliver, '96, and Raymond M. Carroll, '96.

The decorations of the Casino on that occasion will be patriotic and consist of flags and tri-colored bunting. The colors of the graduating class will be used to decorate the stage with. The decorating committee consists of Miss Miller, '97, chairman, Miss Grace E. Overton, Miss Clyde Burnett, Henry Eggerding and Raymond M. Carroll, '96, and Miss Lilla Livezy, Miss Edith L. Pruden, Miss Grace A. Crane, Miss Emma Cutter and William VanAlstyne, of '97.

NO AIR IN DIVING SUIT.

NARROW ESCAPE FROM DEATH THAT JERROLD OLIFF UNDERWENT.

He is a Gunner on a Torpedo Boat in Newport Harbor and Went Down in a Diver's Suit to Recover a Torpedo.

Jerrold Oliff, son of J. H. Oliff, of 1,058 Arlington avenue, is an expert gunner in the navy. He has been stationed on one of the torpedo boats at the Newport navy yard.

Three weeks ago two torpedoes were lost overboard in the harbor. Now torpedoes are expensive things, and it was decided that they must be recovered if possible. A lieutenant and Gunner Oliff volunteered to go down, although they were not used to diving. Oliff had never been in a diver's suit before. They found one of the torpedoes but the other was gone. Then the lieutenant stopped his hunt and Oliff continued it alone. As he failed to come up at the usual time, his companions hoisted him up to find him unconscious.

The valves in the helmet had become disarranged and his supply of air had been stopped. He bled freely from the eyes and ears. His eyes began to swell and for two weeks he was temporarily blinded. He has now recovered sufficiently to write home. He is rapidly improving, and the physicians at the Newport hospital say that he will be all right shortly. It was a very narrow escape, however.

Present Your Stamps.

It will be interesting news to many housewives to know that the Merchants' Coupon Exchange Company will be open until Saturday night, at 135 Park avenue, to redeem all coupons which were issued before the store was closed.

—Patriotic ties in all styles at Putnam & DeGraw's.

—In a short time the paid members of the fire department will start the vacation season.

—The members of the Women's Relief Corps, No. 10, auxiliary to Winfield Scott Post, No. 73, G. A. R., will hold a strawberry festival in Reform Hall the evening of June 3d.

—A patriotic service will be held next Friday evening at the First Baptist church under the auspices of the Christian Endeavor Society. John C. MacLoughlin will have charge.

LEITER LOAF IS COMING.

BAKERS ARE TALKING ABOUT INCREASING PRICES.

They Claim That There is Little Profit in the Bread Business at the Increasing Price of Flour Nowadays.

A meeting of the bakers of the city and the borough was called for last Tuesday at Councilman Henry Liefke's store on West Front street, to formulate some plan for reducing the size of the loaves of bread or raising the price a little so as to allow a reasonable profit on each loaf for themselves.

The meeting was attended only by half a dozen of the bakers, and no definite action was taken upon the matter. The other bakers in town will be seen today and urged to meet tonight or tomorrow night, when in the presence of a good representation of bakers, a plan can be settled upon agreeable to merchant and customer alike.

With the increased price of flour, the bakers claim they are losing money right along, especially on the small five cent loaves of bread. They say that in two five cent loaves of bread the customer gets half a pound more than in a ten cent loaf, so that it has come to the point where five cent loaves are sold almost exclusively, for customers readily see the difference.

Four or five years ago there was no five-cent loaves sold to amount to anything. But within that period, the small loaf has been coming into favor until now a sale of a large loaf is the exception, not the rule. Flour now sells at retail for $4.25 a twenty-five pounds, and about $3 a barrel. To be sure, the baker, purchasing as he does by the large quantity, buys at a lower rate than this, but at the rate flour is rising in price he will soon pay as much.

At the meeting last night it was suggested not only to do away with the manufacture of five-cent loaves but to make the seven-cent loaves a little smaller, keeping the ten-cent loaves up to their regular weight. This will be decided upon at the next meeting.

A prominent baker told a Press reporter this morning that the bakers did not want to take this step, but would prefer to let the price and the weight of the loaves remain where they are. But in most of the large *cities changes have been made ad*vantageous to the merchant, and they think it is no more than right that they should be expected to look out for their pocketbooks a little.

A JEHU'S BARN BURNED.

A DISASTROUS BLAZE IN THE WEST END EARLY YESTERDAY.

Cornelius Guinee the Sufferer — His Horse Escaped From Barn With Blanket Afire—The Beast to be Killed.

A disastrous fire occurred about 3 o'clock yesterday m. m. in the frame barn occupied by Cornelius Guinee, the hackman, at the corner of Spooner avenue and West Fourth street. The building was entirely consumed, together with its contents, and the loss will amount to several hundreds of dollars.

The fire was discovered by Officer Meyers, who was patroling his beat in that locality. He sent in an alarm from Box 45 at 3:12 o'clock. The department was not long in reaching the scene of the conflagration, but had to lay 650 feet of hose to get to the barn with water, and in the meantime the fire fiend had done its work.

In the barn were two carriages, one of which had been painted; a ton of hay, harness and stable fixtures, a sleigh and a horse. All were burned except the horse, which broke out of his stable and ran out, his blanket all afire, and his body badly burned. Bert Littell, who was coming to the fire, caught the horse and tore off the burning blanket. The beast will have to be killed.

A chicken house near the barn containing a number of hens was not burned, and the hens didn't even get down off the roosts.

George Moore's barn, next door, was scorched and damaged to the extent of twenty-five dollars. Guinee's barn and contents were covered by $1,400 insurance. The origin of the fire is unknown.

Heard About the Emerald Isle.

Last Tuesday Rev. T. Logan Murphy, of Washington avenue, gave his celebrated lecture on "A Trip Through Ireland," before a large and interested audience. The views were very fine and Mr. Murphy's remarks were a pleasure to all. After the lecture ice cream and cake was served by the members of Mizpah Circle, King's Daughters, under whose auspices the affair was given.

James King, of Newark, who has been visiting Plainfield relatives, returned home this morning.

LITTLE EDNA'S END TOLD BY A SPLASH.

A Ten-year-old Girl's Sad Death By Drowning.

WAS FISHING IN THE BROOK

TUMBLE INTO THE STREAM THAT PROVED A CAUSE OF DEATH.

In Some Unexplained Manner She Lost Her Footing and Plunged Into the Water—Before Oscar Kryte Could Find the Submerged Body of the Child Life Had Taken Its Flight—Doctors Worked an Hour to Resuscitate the Child, But Their Efforts Failed—Playmates Gave the Alarm.

A sad accident occurred Tuesday afternoon at the old Water street bridge over Green brook, as exclusively told in last evening's Press, Edna, the ten-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James E. Bailey, of Westervelt avenue, fell into the stream and was drowned. Physicians were *summoned, but all efforts were un*availing, for life had aped while the little body was under the water.

The accident happened about 2:45 o'clock. Edna, with several other children, was playing around the bridge, which crosses Elm place near Brook avenue. Edna was fishing and sat on a part of the stone wall, holding her line. Several of her little friends were sitting or standing near. Suddly there was a splash, and Edna had fallen into the water.

Mrs. Debaud, of Elizabeth, who was passing, saw the fall, but was so frightened that she is not able to say whether Edna fell from the stone wall or from the railing. Some think that the little girl was walking outside the railing and lost her balance. While others think that she was reaching out too far after her line, missed her footing and fell in.

The girl fell into the water from the northern side of the bridge. A colored woman, standing near, raised an awful shriek as the accident happened, which startled Mrs. Paul H. Loiseaux, of 1 Brook avenue, who was seated on her porch. Mrs. Loiseaux called her coachman, Oscar Kryte, colored, who was busy about the house, and sent him down to the brook to find out what had happened. Kryte plunged into the water without a moment's hesitation, although the water reached up to his chin and would have covered a shorter man, for the stream is over five feet deep at that point.

The body had come up to the top of the water twice, and the frightened children, who had flocked to the bank, and saw the lifeless form with closed eyes sink, were unable to do anything to rescue their playmate. When Kryte plunged into the water he began to feel about with his hands and feet. But not locating the body, he called loudly for a rake. It was brought to him, and in a few minutes the teeth became entangled in the girl's hair and clothing, and she was lifted to the surface of the water several yards below where she had fallen in. The limp body was taken home.

Some one had notified Mrs. Bailey, and and another had run after Dr. Cooley, who lives on Westervelt avenue, near where the accident occurred. The physician arrived at the same moment with the body, and efforts were at once begun to resuscitate the child. At first Dr. Cooley and Dr. Long, who had also arrived, thought the child still breathed, but after an hour's untiring effort the task was given up, and the girl was pronounced dead.

Phillip Giese, the mail carrier, started out on his wheel to find Mr. Bailey and acquaint him with the news. Going to the station house Assistant Chief Martin told him that Chief Doane and Bailey were out somewhere inspecting houses together. Giese fortunately found the two on LaGrande avenue and hurriedly told the father what had occurred. The Chief and Bailey drove to the house as fast as possible, and reached home while the doctors were busy.

Edna was a particularly bright child, and was a twin sister to Willie, another child. The little girl had the whooping cough, and it was suggested that a paroxysm of coughing coming on, had made her lose her balance.

A New Regular Policeman.

It is expected that at the next meeting of the City Council one new regular policeman will be appointed. The appointment has been looked for during the past few weeks, but there seems to be something in the way of the appointment.

J. H. P. Wharton, of this city, is in Philadelphia on business.

NEW YORK FASHIONS.

The thick winter coats and frocks which the children have been wearing are now too warm and cumbersome for the daily runs in the park and the brisk walks to school and back. A coat that is sufficiently warm for present wear, and that will be useful for donning over a thin frock on cool summer evenings is what is wanted.

For the child of three or four there is a quaint little coat of woolen green cashmere, with collar and cuffs of a darker shade of velvet and trimmings of velvet buttons and green cord. For the school girl from ten to fifteen years of age, the reefer costume is suitable and stylish looking. It would be most serviceable of navy blue serge, with removable collar of violet or green linen.

A pretty brown or green serge would be uncommon and the collar could then be of white hem-stitched lawn.

A sensible school girls' frock of gray vicuna, trimmed with braid, has a yoke and belt of green velveteen and fastens at the left side. An artistic little apron for the small girl, could be carried out in old rose cashmere, with velvet yoke, belt and sleeve bands. This dress has quite a Kate Greenaway effect, being short waisted, and is very dainty for dressy wear.

The little French blouse costume would be pretty in either linen or serge. A tabac brown linen, fashioned in this style would make a smart frock for school wear, if worn with removable guimpes of tucked cambric or lawn. The buttons could be of linen and the belt, which is held up at the waist by means of narrow straps stitched to the sides, of white kid.

The more up-to-date frocks for little girls are worn quite short. The little maiden wearing the large hat, has her hair tied with ribbons on either side of her head in the now modish style.

Evening Waist of Silk Crepe.

Crinkled goods and silk crepes bid fair to be very popular for evening and theater wear. These dainty materials come in every imaginable color and make up beautifully.

An effective model of turquoise blue crepe was cut quite low in the neck, the decolletage outlined with a full frill of the material from which suspended a ruffle of cream lace. The material was brought in gathers to the waist and confined with a belt of white satin ribbon; a bow of ribbon also adorning the corsage just below the left shoulder. Small puffs of the material constituted sleeves.

Neat Walking Gown.

The first requirement of the early season is a smart walking gown which will look well in bright weather, but not be so costly as to be spoilt by a shower. A tailor-made gown is the most suitable garment for this purpose, and these are as popular as ever for morning wear.

A perfectly simple dress of good material, well cut and finished can be made to serve many purposes by changing the shirts and fronts with which it is worn, and a smart chiffon vest is quite sufficient to render a plain coat and skirt suitable for unceremonious calls, especially when a stylish hat is worn with it. A costume of black and white checks, with white broadcloth revers, makes a neat suit.

A black and white cloth gown which looks very natty has the skirt forming four full pleats at the back, very narrow in the upper part while they widen considerably as they near the hem. Over the hips and across the front it is very close fitting. Two bands of white cloth were stitched down both sides of the front and around the foot of the skirt. The jacket had revers of the material edged with white and was worn over a vest of tucked silk and insertion.

The Gaudy Hat.

The brilliancy of the looped straw, Milan braid, and sephyr straw hats now on view is, to say the least, startling. Hats of every known color are to be seen by the hundred, of startling orange yellow, scarlet, grass green, and purple in every possible shade. Such an outbreak of intense color was never seen before. How these hats will look when they are further intensified with trimming remains to be seen. But certainly never did an elegant black hat with quiet inconspicuous trimming look more attractive than it does just now. In contrast with the gaudy wares set forth by even high-class milliners, who think that a woman could as well be out of the world as to be out of the fashion.

Styles in Skirts.

In the matter of skirts, each famous Paris house seems to have its own original ideas and models, no two being exactly alike, yet all showing very clinging fronts and sides, no matter how much the skirt may be expanded by trimming on its lower portion. They all give new fabrics different treatment and new garniture different manipulations; varying their handsome models for the home, for walking, visiting, church, dinner wear, for general use, and for special evening functions. These models have been copied by American tailors and modistes, and there is great satisfaction that there will be an unusual display of individuality in dress among the devotees of la mode when once the season's styles are on view.

Many Flowers Seen.

Many of the leaves, which are seldom pretty or natural-looking, even on expensive clusters. Another very fashionable mode of decoration is to encircle the crown of turban or toque with a thick wreath of flowers; nasturtiums in all their red glowing shades being favorite blossoms. This wreath is then veiled with tulle or other gauzy material, or white, black, or pale brown; repeating one of the colors of the flowers in the wreath, if wall-flowers or nasturtiums are used. Often not only the flowers but the entire hat is veiled with this delicate web-like textile, which, in the case of the violet-colored styles would certainly be a something of an improvement. Black tulle would at least tone if it did not conceal the quality of their dyes.

SMALL HIPS THE PRESENT FANCY.

Flounces Round Up in Front Instead of at the Back of Skirts.

(By special arrangement with the N. Y. Sun.)

The special variation in skirts which seems imminent, now that we are becoming accustomed to the circular flounces rounding down in front and up in the back, is the reverse order. Therefore, if we would have the latest mode, we must point our skirt, trimming up in front and down in the back. It may round up to the waist with a panel front, but without this, if it reaches a point just above the knee, there is sufficient curve. But whether your flounce curves up or be trimmed, it must fit around the hips as if it were moulded to the figure. Even this is not enough, for the hips must be coerced into as small a space as possible. Sylphlike and sinuous grace of outline is the motto of fashion this season, and you must heed it at any cost if you would be in the latest mode.

Small epaulets and tiny frills at the top of the sleeves are the accompanying feature of many of the new gowns, but they are gradually disappearing, and if you would have the latest mode, discard this sort of sleeve decoration entirely and apply all the trimming directly on the sleeve itself. It may be as elaborate as you like with tucks, insertions, braid or shirrings the entire length, but it must be quite small, with no unnecessary fullness at the top. Among the many other odd fancies in dress trimmings is the use of embroidered linen on a foulard gown. Such a gown in red and white has three ruffles of linen across the front of the bodice. The silk is tucked into a narrow yoke, and the ruffles, overlapping each other a trifle, fall below this, point enough so that the top one nearly meets with the collar band of white silk striped with black velvet. The ruffles form a trimming which falls a little over the bust, where a strap of black velvet ribbon an inch and a half wide is fastened at either side and crosses in front just above the belt of the same velvet, which is completed with a long bow of loops at one side.

It is a pretty general belief in China that women who wear short hair will in a future state be transformed into men.

Care of Plants.

One would scarcely think that it would be worth anybody's while to tamper with flowers and sell them as other than they really are. But it is an elaborate art. For instance, a matured tulip can be turned into a young thing just on the point of blowing by carefully plucking off the bloom, and leaving the bulb with its few leaves beneath. "Only two shillings, sir; it'll bloom in a week, sir," and black velvet ribbon, with fan-pleated ruffles of figured net let into the skirt in a very odd and unfamiliar fashion. These have guimpes or blouse-fronts of the net to match. Plainer styles have skirt-frills of the dress fabric, but a rich effect is imparted by a handsome guimpe of brocade, tucked silk, or dotted or striped satin, and this at a very little extra outlay.

Published for 1,600 Years.

The oldest newspaper in the world is not, as is generally stated, the thousand-year-old "Kin Wan," of Pekin, but the "Tsing-Pao," or "Pekin News," which was first published more than 600 years before the Norman Conquest, and which has been published without intermission for nearly 1,400 years.

The Tsing-Pao has the appearance of a yellow-backed magazine of twenty-four octave pages, each page containing seven columns, and each column consisting of seven "characters." Two editions are published—an edition de luxe for the Court and the upper classes in China, at a cost of 24 cents a month; and an edition, inferior in paper and printing, which costs 16 cents a month.

The "Tsing-Pao" is the "Times" of China, and chronicles the wealth and events of the Court, the life at Court, and the reports of Ministers. It is painfully significant that every error in printing the latter is punished with death.

The Cause of Nervousness.

"Over-work and under-exercise result in nervous diseases," said a physician recently. "Preventive measures may be summed up in two words," he continued—"physical development. Worry annually kills more people than work. Work should strive, however, to avoid all things that tend to disturb the nerves. Throw away the pen that scratches and a pencil that has a hard spot in it. Discard a needle that squeaks and a basting thanks. Use sharp pens, wear soft garments that do not rustle. Oil the hinges of the rheumatic door and fasten the creaking blind. These may seem trifles, but such trifles irritate the nerves as much as a piece of sandpaper in the shoe. Charles Lamb once said that a carpenter's hammer on a warm summer morn would fret him more than midsummer madness."

Fashion Hints.

A handsome bodice is of burnt orange taffeta, the waist from the yoke down being made in alternate clusters of fine tucks and applique insertion. Where the bodice joins the yoke are triple revers of silk, edged with three fine tucks of white taffeta, and the top rever is covered with applique lace. The yoke is circular and in clusters of wave tucks, with a narrow insertion between the clusters, and the sleeves are small, with pointed decorations.

The visiting and reception gowns this season are gentle reminders of ages gone by, the demure quaker colors and lavender and peach seeming to the old days being once more in vogue. A pretty gown is of lavender-colored crepe de chine, with a trimming of point applique lace and net.

For middle-aged women stylish gowns are made of black silk warp. Woolen goods are made with a skirt having two bias milliner's falls, headed with a fancy silk gimp. The front has an Eton effect, with square revers and belt, pointed in front, of satin. Vests and collars of white silk are covered with cream lace.

A Dainty Gift.

A dainty mouchoir is always a welcome gift and as the variety is endless there is no excuse for anybody being without one. The prettiest takes the form of a very large envelope in fine white linen, the front and back beautifully embroidered in some effective flowers of different colors, which give a very artistic finish. In larger mouchoirs they are painted on satin or delicate silk, and when decorated with roses form a very charming case. These affairs are always well wadded and lined with soft silk, the edges often finished with a pretty lace border.

Wisconsin to Row.

It is reported that the University of Wisconsin will accept the invitation of the rowing association composed of Columbia, Cornell and Pennsylvania to row on the Eastern crews next June in the eight-oared shell races of the varsity and freshmen crews.

A HARD WORD.

Perseverance! can you spell it?
And its meaning, can you tell it?
If you stick to what you're doing,
Study, work or play pursuing,
Every failure bravely meeting,
Bravely each attempt repeating,
Trying twice and thrice and four times,
Yes, a hundred, even more times,
You can spell it! You can spell it!
And its meaning, you can tell it!

QUEER BOYS OF ZULULAND.

They Chase Monkeys for Work and Hunt Birds for Fun.

At the same time that our boys are started for the school, often feeling very much injured because the day is bright and they would rather play football, the Zulu boy, without any breakfast, is sent out into his father's field, where the crops are growing.

The work assigned to him there does not in the least resemble any chores that a boy might find to do here, for it consists in chasing away the monkeys and baboons which come out of the forest and prowl about with designs on the ripening pumpkins and other fruits. This is lively work, for monkeys are notably quick in their movements and unless the youngsters are on the alert the monkeys pounce upon their booty and carry it away under the boys' noses.

At other times of the year it is not the baboons but the birds that must be kept from the ripening grain. After a morning of such lively exercise the boys are ravenous for their noon meal, the first food that is given them during the day, for they only eat twice in twenty-four hours and not so much as an afternoon tea between times.

The whole aim of a Zulu boy's training is to make him a dauntless and victorious warrior. This being the case, the most important of their games is one in which they learn to throw sharpened sticks with skill. It is played as follows: One of their number ascends a small hill while the others, with their sticks in their hands, range themselves in a row down the side. The lad at the top then throws past the boys with all his force the huge, soft bulb of a large African lily. This bulb is a foot in diameter, and as it goes by the first boy he flings his stick at it. If he fails to pierce it the next boy, quick as lightning, throws, too, and if he fails, the next one, tries it, and so on until one of them sends his stick into the heart of the bulb, and as a reward he is allowed to go higher in the line, displacing the boy above him.

Though they consider it a great hardship to be obliged to chase the birds from their father's crops, the boys will pursue them from bush to bush and from tree to tree, until they actually tire their game out, when they knock the birds on the head and kill them. If a Zulu boy were told to put salt on a bird's tail he would not find it such a very difficult feat.

When the young Zulu has become tired of the latest from other sports he runs to the nearest river, into which he dives. It is not necessary for him to stop to take off his clothes, because he never wears any, and at such a time he must find it very convenient. Zulu boys have been in the water so much from their very infancy that they seem almost as much at home in it as the fish themselves. Many of their strokes in swimming differ greatly from ours, and they are able to make headway against the swiftest and strongest river currents. This is very necessary, because the South African rivers all flow swiftly and there are few opportunities for still-water bathing.

They are especially proud of the length of time that they are able to remain underneath the water, and they learn to swim with their shoulders. They do not use their arms at all, but simply call into play the powerful muscles of their little backs. —Chicago Inter-Ocean.

Youths' Ambition in Mexico.

In Mexico it is the ambition of every youth to become a bull-fighter. In their plays boys there mimic the bull-fighters. They use their shawls as banderillas, sticks as lances, and a flat piece of wood as a sword. One boy acts as the bull and the others act the parts of the picadores, banderilleros and matadores. When they grow older they participate in amateur bullfights. In the country towns these are common. Blooded bulls are used, but their horns are sawed off, and lads, rigged out in all the finery of a real matadore, enter the ring, tease the bull, and carry out all the performances except the slaughter. The Government forbids that. At these amateur fights often one of the lads is injured. If he recovers he is a hero; if he dies—oh, well, he was brave.—Augusta Chronicle.

The FARM

The FARM

Seeding Spring Wheat.

It is usually advisable to seed Spring wheat as early as the soil is in good condition after the ground has warmed sufficiently for the seed to grow. The last part of the growing season is the uncertain one for wheat. When seeded in drills a bushel and four quarts to a bushel and a peck of seed have given best results as a general rule. The amount of seed which will give the best yield will vary with the season. A season which favors the stooling of the plants requires less seed than one which is unfavorable to their stooling. The shoe drills are preferable to the hoe drill or to broadcasting wheat. The shoe drill puts the seed into the ground and usually into moist ground, and covers it over, ready to grow. The broadcast seeder and the hoe drill are more uncertain, as some of the grain is covered, deeply, some shallow and some of it not at all. If the reader will bear in mind that to sprout or start growth every seed requires a certain degree of warmth, moisture and air, he will understand what he is required to furnish to the wheat kernels to induce them to start growth.

Shoe drills can be divided into two classes, viz, the shoe chain and the shoe press drills. The shoe like those of the corn planted and garden seeders opens a furrow in the ground and drops the seed into it while the sides of the shoe hold the dirt back. When shoe moves past the point where a certain seed has been dropped, the loose dirt falls in, covering the seed more or less completely. Following the shoe is a short, large-linked chain in the case of the shoe chain drill and a small wheel in the case of the shoe press drill, which covers the seed more completely. In addition to covering the grain the press wheels compact the ground over the seed, which tends to make moisture rise into the soil which surrounds it. This firming of the soil tends to produce one of the necessary conditions for growth, viz., moisture.

It is often a good plan to harrow the grain after seeding if it has not been rained enough before the wheat was sown. It will not hurt the grain to harrow the ground after the wheat is up. Wheat that is four inches high will not be injured by harrowing with a peg toothed harrow. If it rains after the wheat is seeded and before it is four or five inches high, harrowing the ground after it has dried sufficiently will usually prove beneficial. In that case the harrow loosens the surface of the soil and prevents the escape of water by evaporation at a time when the wheat is not high enough to mulch and shade the ground well.—Prof. J. H. Shepperd.

Artichokes for Hogs.

For the past four or five years one of my neighbors has planted an acre or two of artichokes annually for his hogs and I have watched his success closely to learn, if possible, whether or not it was a practical venture, and as a consequence I have come to the conclusion that they can not only be handled with the utmost safety but are an excellent and cheap feed for hogs. The tops are also valuable for cattle and sheep. The stover is cut and shocked very much as one cuts the corn crop. Stock eat the stalks quite as readily as, if not more so than, they do the corn stover. Where the ground is rich an immense amount of coarse fodder can be grown on a single acre.

Some writers in speaking of the artichoke give the impression that they are difficult, in fact impossible, to exterminate. Such an idea is entirely erroneous. If they are sown in a lot where hogs can be turned in on them there will be absolutely no difficulty along this line, unless, of course, there are more tubers than the herd can use, in which case all that is necessary is to turn in more hogs. If you put a lot into artichokes under the impression that once sown you will reap forever, the chances are you will find yourself much mistaken.—C. C. Reynolds in Agriculturist.

Strength of Straw.

The strength of straw does not depend so much upon the variety of oats as upon the food which is supplied to the plants. If a large quantity of potash and little or no nitrogen is supplied to them the leaves, which are seldom of much use, will grow rapidly and the straw will be short and weak. The White Russian and American Banner oats are both good varieties, but both will lodge if too much nitrogen is supplied.

Saving Seed an Early Start in the Garden.

The ground is often cold when the seed is put into the garden plot To get the earliest vegetables, have a few boxes without bottoms and with a sliding pane of glass for a top, as shown in the cut. Let the top slope toward the sun. Shut the slide entirely until the plant breaks ground, then ventilate as one would in a hotbed, as suggested in the right hand sketch. A few such boxes will make some of the garden products ten days earlier—worth trying for.

Controlling the Ox Warble Fly.

The warble or swelling on the back of cattle is caused by the larvae of a fly which attaches its eggs to the hair on the legs, flanks and neck of the animal. These hatch and the larvae establish themselves under the skin, usually on either side of the backbone. Here they feed upon the animal juices until ready to pupate, causing the swelling or warble. When growth is completed the grub leaves the warble, drops to the ground, crawls under the most convenient shelter, such as a piece of board, log, etc., and there transforms into the fly or adult stage. There is a difference of opinion as to how the grub gets under the skin. Some etymologists claim that the egg is taken into the stomach by the animals licking themselves, hatch there, adhering to the walls, then the grubs gradually work their way toward the surface, where they remain until fully grown. Others hold that the eggs hatch where they are laid and the young larvae bury themselves at once under the skin. Whatever method is employed the results are the same.

The best way to get rid of the pest is to kill the maggots. This may be done by squeezing them out. Place the thumbs near the base of the swelling and press firmly until the grub is forced out. To prevent the attacks of the fly in summer, a mixture of 4 oz. flowers of sulphur, 1 gill of spirits of tar and a quart of train oil rubbed along the spine, loins and rump, is useful. Train oil can be used alone. As the fly does not move about from place to place freely, its eradication on individual farms depends almost completely upon the owner.—American Agriculturist.

Sowing of Green Crops.

Farmers should give some attention to green crops, whether they use the entire pasture or not. Green crops rape as green forage will not fail to afford a large variety and cost less than any other foods, giving large amounts of forage and assisting in keeping the land in good condition. Rye, autumn clover, field clover, cow peas, green corn, rape and oats are all suitable for producing green food in abundance, and as rye and crimson clover give a supply in the spring, before grass has made growth of any consequence, they should always be in the three combination. Oats and peas, broadcasted together, may be seeded now if the ground is not frozen, and they will give a larger amount of green food on one acre than can be secured from three or four times that area of pasturage, and the forage may be cut and carried to the animals at the barn. When the green food is no longer suitable for cutting sheep may be turned on the remainder and will find a fair proportion of food. Later cow peas may be sown and they are to be sown on land in better condition than before. It is not too soon to sow Essex rape, and as many farmers have given it a trial, those who will make the experiment with give it a place on the farm hereafter. It can be cut or eaten off several times during the year and yields enormously, sheep being very fond of it, while cattle and hogs also relish it highly.—Troy Times.

Sunflower Ensilage and Fodder.

I have been feeding sunflowers as fodder and ensilage for the past seven years, having found by accident that they were as good for milk or butter as corn. I cultivate the same as corn, except I give much more hen manure. I cut when the seed reaches the dough state, and run all through the ensilage cutter. I have fed when newly cut with good results in helping out short pasturage.

The early frosts in autumn do not hurt sunflowers, hence they are very valuable as a second crop, and by planting late in the fall they will come on rapidly in spring, giving an early summer cutting. I have had plants 11-2 feet high when corn was just coming up. They do well on any corn land, and, like corn, respond to liberal feeding. I have never fed the seed to chickens, but have planted largely about the house to fence out malaria. An army surgeon once told me that when stationed on the Rio he house was the only one free from malaria because he filled his grounds with sunflowers. We have not had a case at my home since beginning this practice.

When saving seed it is best to save that which grows on branching plants, as the small heads are much easier run through the rollers of the cutter than the mammoth single heads. When filling the silos I put in one load of sunflowers to two of corn.—J. V. Nott, in Agriculturist.

Blackberries on High Ground.

The fruit buds of the blackberry, after they have swollen or have opened, are very tender, hence the plants should be placed on high ground, away from the cold frosty air which settles in the valleys in the spring. A north slope protected on the south from hot winds is desirable, together with very frequent surface cultivation to conserve moisture. Irrigation, at the time of the making of the fruit and ripening it, would produce wonderful effects in quality and amount of production of fruit.

QUICKEST HORSES IN THE WORLD.

The Exploits of Joe and Dan, of the Kansas City Fire Department.

The quickest horses in the world were at one time in Kansas City, at the headquarters of its Fire Department, directly under the office of the chief, George C. Hale. To Mr. Hale's genius, more than to any other factor, the quick horse owed his first development, for Mr. Hale is the inventor of the earliest swinging harness, which made the quick horse possible. When Henry M. Stanley and his wife were in this country they witnessed an exhibition drill of the Kansas City Fire Department. The drill so impressed the visitors that an account of it was published in a London journal, and this English article brought an invitation to Mr. Hale to visit England as the representative of the American fire service at the international fire tournament.

Mr. Hale and a picked corps went to England, taking with them the remarkably quick horses Joe and Dan, and they became world-famous as the quickest harnessing time of the London fire brigade is one minute seventeen and a half seconds, and the Kansas City horses were harnessed in one and three-quarter seconds, and were out of their engine house in less than eight seconds, there could be no competition. In Kansas City four fine bays were harnessed to the hook-and-ladder truck almost as quickly as even Joe and Dan could jump into their harness. It was a pretty sight to see these four well-kept horses spring to their places at the stroke of the gong, and in two or three seconds stand ready to run with the apparatus. Joe was killed by an accident, but Dan, with a new mate, is still in service and as quick as ever.

The record for quickest time from the engine house to the throwing of water on the fire is held by a Kansas City company. In this instance the horses were harnessed, a run of 2,194 feet, a little less than half a mile, was made, and water thrown from the hose in the wonderfully brief time of one minute thirty-one and a half seconds.—F. S. Dellenbaugh in St. Nicholas.

A PROPHETIC CARTOON.

Published in a Spanish Paper February 6, Before the Maine Disaster.

The issue of Blanco y Negro, the best-known of the Spanish illustrated weekly papers, contains the above cartoon. Spain claims that the horrible catastrophe in Havana harbor was due either to unavoidable accident or the carelessness on the part of American seamen in handling explosives. The issue of Jan. 29 of El Correo Espanol, a newspaper of Mexico City, which is the organ of the small but influential Spanish party in that republic, contains a significant article entitled 'Armed Courtesies." It is only a coincidence that a Spaniard in Madrid should have portrayed Uncle Sam in the act of casting explosives into the water, one of which has just burst near the water-line of the Maine, while another Spaniard in the Mexican capital was writing a veiled threat of what might happen to an American vessel in Cuban waters, were it to anchor with any other than a friendly purpose. It is remarkable, however, as a coincidence, and if there were in Spain an organization to correspond with the Mafia of Sicily and Southern Italy, there might be ground for a belief that both publications were inspired by the foreknowledge of a great crime.

Bothered.

"What is the matter?" inquired the friend of the man who was gazing vacantly into space. "You seem troubled."

Stone Soles for Shoes.

An inventor has hit upon a method of putting stone soles on boots and shoes. He mixes a waterproof glue with a suitable quantity of clean quartz sand, and spreads it over the leather soon used as foundation. These quartz soles are said to be very flexible and practically indestructible, and to give the foot a firm hold, even on the most slippery surface.

THE PROFIT IN POSTAGE STAMPS.

How Hustling Postmasters About New York Make Money.

"There is one point," said an inspector of the Postoffice Department, "that has not yet brought out in connection with the consolidation of the smaller postoffices around New York with the New York office. Nevertheless it is one that by consolidating the smaller postoffices with the larger ones the departments expect to do away, to a large extent, at least, with the systematic robbery which it is now unable to prevent. I mean by this the traffic in stamps by which the gross receipts of the smaller offices are swollen to undue proportions and the postmaster's salary correspondingly increased, while the larger offices do the work.

"This practice is carried on around all large cities, but especially in and about New York, and is a great injustice to the postmaster and the postoffice of New York. As is well known, in the smaller fourth-class offices the postmasters are paid in proportion to the stamps cancelled. In the larger fourth-class offices and the Presidential offices the salary is dependent on the receipts. Take a small office in the neighborhood of New York. The postmaster depends on his cancellations for his revenue. In the same town lives the secretary of a large insurance corporation, who happens to be a personal friend of the postmaster. The latter goes to the secretary and explains that his salary is dependent on the cancellation of stamps, and says that it would be very easy for the secretary to bring down at night, on his way home from his office, all or a large part of the letters of the company which are to go in the night mail. Instead of depositing them in the office at New York, or in one of the stations, sub-stations or letter boxes, where they will do no good, why not mail them in the smaller office and thereby help a friend? The Government loses nothing and the friend gains. So, as an act of friendship the secretary often consents, and the postmaster of the suburban town is enabled to report a large amount of cancellations, and is paid accordingly.

"When the pay depends on the gross receipts another course is pursued. Instead of bringing the letters out from town the obliging friend is requested to purchase his stamps at the office and mail his letters in New York. In this way the receipts are swollen and the salary of the postmaster expands in proportion.

"In other cases the suburban postmaster is a commuter, and has an office in the city. Here he makes friends with those in charge of large corporations and requests them to purchase from him the stamps they require, offering to deliver them on the premises. This is frequently done, the postmaster bringing into town every day several thousand stamps and selling them to the large firms and corporations. Of course the more he sells the larger his salary, and he is usually very industrious. The evil does not stop here. Sometimes the secretary does not propose so obliging or the corporation is not friendly to the postmaster. It then becomes a matter of business, which means a split in the commissions. The postmaster offers to divide his salary, or rather pays a commission on each letter mailed at his office by the repre*sentative of the concern. Where a* firm is sending out a thousand letters a day this soon becomes a matter of considerable profit to both the postmaster and the obliging friend; or else the postmaster offers a small reduction on the stamps. As he is paid *for selling them he can afford to sac*rifice a part of the profit, and by selling ten or twenty thousand stamps in a lump he can put the price down considerably. Even if the firm saves only a few dollars, it is a reduction it could not obtain at the general postoffice, and many of the large houses in New York buy all their stamps in this way. There are a hundred concerns in New York, such as wholesale firms, commission houses, insurance, railroad and steamship companies, that use from one to a thousand stamps a day, and the saving of a few dollars on each 10,000 means something in the course of the year.

"This business is well known, and there is good reason to believe that some persons in New York are shrewd enough to make a fair living by beating the department, for this is a scheme that can be worked both ways at once. Suppose, for instance, that you are the manager of a large insurance company, using a thousand stamps a day. The postmaster at your town is paid by the amount of his cancellations. You are on friendly terms with him, as you are with the postmaster at every large town near by, who is paid according to his gross receipts. You agree with the first to bring out your mail every evening, and are met by him at the train. With the other you arrange to take six thousand stamps a week, which he delivers at your house in the suburbs or at your office in town. From both you get a commission, from the one for the stamps and from the other for the letters. Now put the two together and you will find that you are getting at least one-fourth of your stamps for nothing. The stamp bill of your firm is $6,000 a year, and you are receiving $1,500 a year for your trouble. Quite an agreeable addition to the ordinary salary, and you also have the pleasure of knowing that you are helping two friends. As there are many men in New York who are just as wise as you, the department believes that this sort of thing has been going on for years. Of course nothing can be done with the individual, and with the postmaster the department is restricted to a dismissal.

NEW BISMARCK STORIES.

His Affection for His Dog—A Threat Carried Out.

Henry von Poschinger, who has published ten or twelve volumes regarding Prince Bismarck's political career, has written a magazine article containing several new Bismarck stories. As new Bismarck stories are rare pieces of literature nowadays, it may be worth while to relate one or two of them. Told in Poschinger's language they are:

"In 1877, when Bismarck's favorite dog, Sultan, was dying, the Chancellor watched over the poor creature with such keen distress that Count Herbert at last interfered and sought to lead his father away. The Prince took a few steps toward the door. Then, as he turned, he met the eyes of his old friend.

"'No, no; leave me alone,' he exclaimed, as he went back to Sultan. When the dog was dead, he looked up at a friend and said:

"'Our old German ancestors had a beautiful religious belief. They believed that after death they would meet in the heavenly hunting grounds all the good dogs which were their companions in life. I only wish I could believe it the same.'

"In 1851—a year still in the shadow of the revolution—when the tide of political passion was still running very high, Bismarck entered a restaurant one day to get a glass of beer. A man who sat near him, and evidently was inspired by the information of several friends, began to abuse a member of the royal family. Bismarck looked at him coldly, and then said:

"'If you do not leave the room before I finish this beer I will break the glass over your head.'

The man did not go. Bismarck emptied his glass slowly, sip by sip. He arose, walked deliberately over to the man who had spoken insultingly of the royal family, and smashed the glass on his head. The man fell howling to the floor. Bismarck turned to the waiter and asked what the glass cost, paid the bill, and walked slowly to the street. Yet at this time he was a man of political position and the recognized leader of the Conservative party. True to his principles, however, he took the offensive, attacking his opponent with the first weapon that came to hand.

ALUMINUM MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS

Mandolins and Guitars, Banjos and Violins Made Out of the White Metal.

Various musical instruments are made of aluminum, including mandolins, guitars, banjos, and violins, and drums. The advantages claimed are resistance to climatic influences and superiority of tone. Some of the mandolins are made with the body, including the top, entirely of aluminum, others with the top of spruce, the neck of wood, and the other fittings of the usual kind. Such a mandolin is sold at from $25 to $200. The prices of all aluminum mandolins range somewhat lower.

Guitars with a spruce top and the back and sides of aluminum in a single piece are sold at from $25 to $200. Banjos are made with aluminum rims, fitted with heads of the usual kind, and they are also made with aluminum heads. Such a banjo, with wire strings could be played in the rain.

The aluminum violin that is now upon the market is, in its body, all aluminum, while the neck and other fittings are of wood. All the aluminum instruments are handsome, and the aluminum violin, with its silver-gray body, and finger-board and tail-piece of ebony, is of great beauty. It is a costly instrument. The makers of the aluminum mandolins and guitars with spruce tops are now engaged upon a violin whose back and sides will be of aluminum in a single piece, the top of the instrument to be of spruce.—New York Sun.

At Wholesale.

"This is the room where you issue licenses, ain't it?" inquired the young man, after taking a leisurely survey of the apartment.

"Yes," replied the Deputy County Clerk. "What can I do for you?"

The caller pushed his hat back on his head, winked and beckoned him nearer.

"It's like this," he said, in a lower tone. "I am going to get married and go into the saloon business. How much discount can you give me on the licenses if I take 'em both out at once?"—Chicago Tribune.

Dangerously Near It.

"I come mighty nigh swearin'," the deacon confessed, as he came into the house, nursing a bruised thumb.

"You don't hab to tell me dat, my wife.

"But I do tell you. I am a-tellin' you right now. I hit my thumb with the hammer, and 'stead of sayin' 'By ginger!' like I most always do, I hollers out, 'By pepper!' I dunno how much hotter I would of made it if it had hurt a little worse."—Indianapolis Journal.

Easy Application.

Friend—What did you tell that sick chap to do for himself?

Christian Scientist—I told him he must shake off the idea that he was ill.

Friend—Did he agree to try it?

Christian Scientist—Yes; he said he had chills and fever, anyway.—Cincinnati Commercial Tribune.

What She Heard.

Mrs. Jagsby (at head of stairs, 5 a. m.)—What is that noise? Is that you, Mr. Jagsby, falling upstairs?

Mr. Jagsby (thickly)—N—no, m'dear! The noise you (hic) hear, thank just the (hic) break o' day!

A NEW WESTERN IDEA.

Girls Who Give Gold Medals of Their Little Fingers to Their Betrothed.

"Do the girls here give gold models of their little fingers to their fiances?" asked the Western girl of the Gothamite.

"Heavens, no!" answered the Gothamite. "It seems to me that that is a rather grewsome souvenir."

"Not at all," answered the Western girl. "It is decidedly dainty, and I'm a little surprised that New York is so far behind the times. The fad started in this way. When the daughter of one of our big Western politicians was six months old, he had a model of her little finger cast in gold. Around the little dimpled digit is a ring of turquoise, which is her birth stone, and it makes a lovely charm for her betrothed's watch chain. He valued it so much that it set other men to thinking, and the result is that as soon as the girl wraps one of these chaps around her own little finger sufficiently for a proposal to follow, he immediately insists upon a gold facsimile of the flesh and blood original. It is a pretty conceit, and is being followed by every Westerner who is in subjection to somebody's little finger.—New York Sun.

Making an Artificial Skin.

A process has been patented in Germany for making a substitute for the natural skin for use in wounds. The muscular coating of the intestines of animals is divested of mucous membrane and then treated in a pepsin solution until the muscular fibres are half-digested. After a second treatment with tannin and gallic acid a tissue is produced which takes the place of the natural skin, and which, when laid on the wound, is entirely absorbed during the healing process.

The Inquiring Mind.

Johnny—Say pa, I want to ask you a question.

Mr. Sniff.—Well, now, I don't know why the Spring doesn't always come in the Fall, or where the wind is when it doesn't blow, or whether, if the almanac makers should leave out the month of August, the corn crop would be ruined by September frosts. But go ahead.

Johnny—Why, pa, I only wanted to know how it comes that no one but children die in childhood?—New York Journal.

Stood Up for Him.

"Do you think your sister likes me, Tommy?"

"Yes; she stood up for you at dinner."

"Stood up for me? Was anybody saying anything about me?"

"No, nothing much. Father said he thought you were rather a donkey, but she got up and said you weren't, and told father he ought to know better than to judge a man by his looks."— London Household Words.

Not Susceptible to Flattery.

Broken-Down Actor (with battered hat and frayed clothing)—Ah, good morning, me charming Camille. May I inquire if you have at your disposal any cold turkey or other suitable viands with which a gentleman might assuage his hunger?

Servant Girl (who has been there before)—I guess there's plenty o' cold victles in the kitchen, if that's wot ye mane. But—er—where's the gintleman?—New York Truth.

His Theory.

"A great many women marry men for the purpose of reforming them," remarked the observant citizen.

"I suppose so," replied the man who was reluctantly writing a check, "but sometimes they misjudge a man. Now that you remind me of it, I believe my wife has suspected me of the habit of saving too much money."—Washington Star.

Electric Tornado Alarms.

A cyclone or a tornado will rush suddenly upon a township and leave it in ruins a few minutes later. This fact has resulted in the invention of a barometer, built on such lines that, a few minutes before the arrival of a violent atmospheric disturbance, the mercury, being agitated, rings an electric alarm and gives fair warning.

Tame Enough.

Tourist (in Jersey, apprehensively)—How about the Jersey mosquitoes? Don't you find them pretty vicious creatures?

Jersey Native (indifferently)—Not at all! Not at all! Why, they'll eat right out of your hand!—Puck.

Nothing to Tell.

Mother: "What did your father say when he saw his broken pipe?"

Innocent; "Shall I leave out the wicked words, mamma?"

Mother: "Certainly."

Innocent: "Then I don't believe there is anything to tell you, mamma."

His Years.

"Shay, m' (hic) frien'!" said Lushington, after vainly fumbling with his latch-key for twenty minutes.

"Well?" returned the passer-by.

"Have you (hic) got such a thing as a spare key (hic) hole about you?"—Judge.

Not a Judge.

"Is it true, 'Nesey, that stolen chickens are the sweetest?"

"Dunno, boss, 'deed I don'. I nebber tasted de yudder kind."—Typographical Journal.

AMERICA'S FLORENCE NIGHTINGALE

Clara Barton and Her World-Wide Work for Christ and Humanity.

Miss Clara Barton was born in Oxford, Massachusetts, 1838. She attended the public schools of her native town and supplemented her education by a course of study at Clinton, N. Y. A serious affection of the throat compelled to resign the position of principal of the first public school of Bordentown, N. J., she accepted the offer of a clerkship in the Patent Office, at Washington, D. C.

At the outbreak of the war, in 1861, a number of wounded soldiers from her native town arrived in Washington, and Miss Barton asked permission to go to the hospital and nurse them. So competent did she prove, that the surgeons begged that she would remain permanently. She consented, resigning her position in the Patent Office. When the great battles began to be fought, and the need on the field became peremptory, she hired vehicles and went to the scenes of action. Culpepper Court House being her first destination. She was at Cedar Mountain, Antietam, Fredericksburg, Falmouth, and at the siege of Charlestown, superintending her band of trained nurses, and rendering personal service wherever it was needed. When the war was ended, thoroughly exhausted by her continuous labor and exposures, she went to Europe to recuperate. While there the Franco-Prussian war broke out, and she promptly offered her services. At Metz and Paris, and many other scenes of conflict, she ministered to and comforted the wounded and dying. Her services were acknowledged by the Emperor of Germany by a presentation of the Order of the Iron Crown, a number of other distinguished personages she received tangible proofs of gratitude and esteem. As President of the Red Cross, founded in 1864, Miss Barton rendered efficient services to the sufferers of the Ohio and Johnstown floods, the Michigan fires, the Charleston earthquakes, and other national calamities. During the famine in Russia, the Red Cross sent relief to the suffering peasants.

Miss Barton was the idol of the soldiers of the War of the Rebellion, and wherever she goes she wins the gratitude and love of thousands. She was in Havana at the time of the "Maine" disaster, and, with her staff or workers, was promptly at the side of our wounded sailors, who were rescued from the exploded and sinking warship.

LAWYER AND PREACHER.

Judge Christian Got His Clients Out of Jail and Later Married Them.

Judge Hiram Christian is the old original lawyer of McDowell, W. Va. He has practiced law so long in that county that the "memory of man runneth not to the contrary." The Judge, however, combines with his law practice a general utilitarian business relationship. He pulls a tooth with as much dexterity as the latest graduates of the dental schools, and in the old days was known as a man who would fight at the drop of a hat. He is above all an all round good fellow. A short time ago the Judge was called upon to take a case which seemed surrounded by more than ordinary difficulties.

Lucien Gabriel, an Italian, and Lizzie Smith, an English girl, both from Algoma, had taken a fancy to each other, and their love led them beyond the bounds of good citizenship, or, rather, further than is allowed in good society. They were arrested and both were languishing in the county jail with every hope of separating them from complete happiness.

After remaining in jail for ten days they sent for Judge Christian. The case was an easy one for the Judge. He had them released from jail temporarily and took their bonds before Judge Chambers of the Criminal Court to try and effect a permanent release. While Judge Chambers was inquiring into the details of the case, with the culprits sitting in his office, Judge Christian then and there produced a marriage license, and instantly dropping his role as attorney, so to speak, took on the role of a minister of the Gospel, and proceeded to make the troubled twain a happy one.

After the ceremony and the congratulations of the minister was a lawyer again, and he produced a bond for the offenders, duly signed and sealed, with his own wife as surety. Judge Chambers relented, receipted the bond, and Lucien Gabriel and his bride went out into freedom and bliss.

A Poem of Olympia, Wash.

In a public school of Olympia, Wash., where pupils are asked occasionally for impromptu poetical recitations, one particular boy recently ordered to show his ability at rhyming for the benefit of the School Board's visitors, astounded all present, and secured punishment for himself later by declaring:

God, Oh! God, supreme on high,
Look down on this committee.
Who chose such fools to teach our schools
In this our capital city.

SCHOOL OF A SOLDIER.

Manual of Arms for Young Men of Mill Boy Inclination.

War talk always stirs the military ardor of the boys. There is no school boy so young but what he yearns to be a soldier when his country sounds the call to arms. To-day in every city and hamlet in the land, this spirit of patriotism finds expression in the formation of companies of juvenile battalions. Ordinary sports and pastimes, for the time being, give place to the evolutions of the drill and the manual of arms, and the martial strains of drum and fife are beginning to be as popular and omnipresent as they were in 1861-65.

In forming ranks the position of the soldier at "Attention" is: Heels in the same line and near each other; feet turned out equally and forming with each other an angle of about 60 degrees; knees straight, but not stiff; body erect on the hips, slightly inclined forward; arms and hands hanging naturally; little fingers opposite seams of the trousers; head erect, chin slightly down, and eyes straight in the front.

Next comes the manual of arms. Marching and the performance of difficult evolutions need not be taught until the boys have mastered the secret of preserving perfect alignment in ranks, and handling their guns. The manual of arms is as follows:

Order Arms—Butt of gun rests solidly on ground, barrel to the rear, touching toe of the right shoe; right hand holding the piece between thumb and fingers, first two fingers to the front.

Port Rms.—Raise piece diagonally across the body, magazine to the front; grasp it smartly with both hands (the right palm down) at the small of the stock (the left palm up) at the balance, thumb clasping the piece, barrel slipping to the left and crossing opposite the junction of the neck with the left shoulder; right forearm horizontal, left forearm resting against the body; piece near the body.

Shoulder Arms—Carry the piece diagonally across the body with the right hand, magazine to front; grasp it at the balance with left hand palm up, thumb clasping the piece; carry the right hand and quickly to the butt, embracing it, heel between the first two fingers, the thumb and fingers closed on the stock, the barrel sloping to the left and crossing opposite the juncture of the neck with the left shoulder, left forearm resting against the body, the piece, left arm, and hand being in the same position as port arms. Raise and place the piece on the right shoulder, the right elbow against the side, the right hand directly in front of the elbow; at the same time slip the left hand, fingers extended and joined down opposite the bolt handle. Then drop the left hand by the side.

Parade Rest—Being at order arms: Carry the right foot six inches straight to the rear, left knee slightly bent; carry the muzzle in front of the center of the body, barrel to the left hand just below the stacking swivel and with the right hand below and against the left.

Charge Bayonets—Being at order arms. Half face to the right, carrying the right heel six inches to the rear and three inches to the right of the left heel, and at the same time raise the piece with the right hand, inclining the butt to the front; grasp it with the left at the balance, back of the hand down, thumb clasping piece, elbow against the body; grasp the small of the stock with the right hand and bring the point of the bayonet to the height of the chin, right hand supporting the stock firmly against the front of the right hip, the body inclining slightly forward.

When precision in this manual has been attained the drillmaster may take his squad into some handy lot and put the boys through their paces

Styles of Long Ago.

The longest train on record was that of Catherine de Medici on the occasion of her marriage. It was forty-three yards, and borne by ten pairs of pages.

Henry II. of France ordered that no woman beneath the rank of princess should wear crimson, and that no velvet should be worn save by ladies of the Court or of the nobility.

In 1461 a fashion of gold collars came in. They were of solid gold, and reached to the neck, fastening with a padlock in front. Some of these weighed as much as a pound.

The Gallic women wore a white woolen gown trailing on the ground, and a purple cloak, with white scarf thrown over the head; the hair was usually arranged in one long braid.

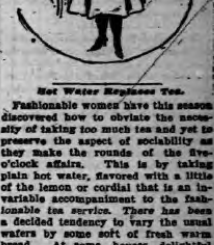
Very long skirts were introduced in France by the daughters of St. Louis. They had very large feet, which they wished to conceal, and so adopted the skirt to hide their pedal deformity.

The most changeable period of feminine fashion was in France between the outbreak of the Revolution, and the Restoration in 1815. During this time 759 different styles are recorded.

During the entire reign of Charles the Second the ladies never washed their faces. There was an idea that water injured the complexion, and the face was wiped with a rag dipped in milk.

A Handy Wardrobe.

For the girl whose city bedroom boasts no wardrobe, and only a single closet to hold her every-day garments, it is necessary to utilize any recess there is for it. To do this, get a board the width of the recess and as high as can be conveniently reached. Have screw hooks placed upon it for the waists. Against the wall stretch a length of cretonne or muslin; let this hang down just twice the length of the recess. Under the headboard have a six-inch board with screw hooks on it for the skirts; then, on the very front edge of the headboard, have very small hooks screwed in, and correspondingly tiny rings on the reverse edge of the long piece of cretonne. When the skirts and bodices are hung on their respective pegs, turn up this cretonne and catch the rings into the hooks, thus, as it were, enclosing the dresses in a loose bag. Outside of this recess, a few inches higher than the headboard, have a little brass rod fastened, on which, by rings, one can hang a pretty curtain, which will conceal the cretonne bag.



Hot Water Hopeless Too.

Fashionable women have this season discovered how to obviate the necessity of taking too much tea and yet to preserve the aspect of sociability as they make the rounds of the five-o'clock affairs. This is by taking plain hot water, flavored with a little of the lemon or cordial that is an invariable accompaniment to the fash*ionable tea service. There has been* a decided tendency to vary the usual waters by some sort of fresh warm bread. At some houses delightful Sally Lunn is handed round, and miniature tea biscuits, too, hot, and to be eaten with butter, have been often seen. Small fresh round sponge-cakes, often the work of the hostess herself, are offered at some studio afternoons, and there is a universal suppression of sandwiches. These are no longer deemed necessary or even desirable.

Princesse Party Frock.

A quaint and pretty frock for a little girl is the gown fashioned after the princesse model. An artistic little dress seen recently at a children's party was carried out in old rose cashmere, with yoke of white muslin. The short body was made perfectly plain, except for a narrow beading around the yoke; from this depended the gathered skirt, which was finished at the bottom with a pinked ruffle of the material. The epaulettes were of the material, while the sash was of old rose silk, tying in a bow at the back. A house or school frock after this pattern would make up very prettily in blue serge, with gulmp of red silk.

Ready for the Theatre.

A chic theater corsage for a dainty brunette, is of rose colored flowered satin, quaintly cut, and fitted basque plain. The front which is decollete has a pointed plastron of white chiffon, bordered on either side with revers of the material edged with chiffon ruches and trimmed with straps at even distances of black velvet ribbon. The puffed chiffon sleeves and ceinture of black velvet.

The cape of cream brocaded satin was lined throughout with pink silk, and trimmed around the neck with a white feather boa.

Gestures of Royalty.

A gossip breaks out with an account of the characteristic gestures of European Royalties when engaged in conversation. The Prince of Wales, if annoyed or nervous, winks his left eye rapidly. The German Emperor pulls furiously at his moustache. King Humbert of Italy caresses his moustache affectionately. The Emperor of Austria puffs out his cheeks.

south Europe.

When the troops of a nation are ordered to discharge explosive bullets at its own subjects, things are in a bad way for that country. Italy is apparently on the verge of a revolution that may sweep the house of Savoy from its place and even compel Pope Leo XIII himself to seek asylum elsewhere. It is to be noted that the mobs that rose in the Italian cities and killed 1,000 people fired on monasteries and sacked them as freely as stores and factories. Not often has this happened in a Catholic country. When it has been done, it was the signal for a revolution so terrible and farreaching that no man now ventures to think what may happen in the immediate future. The leaders in the Italian disturbances are plainly those anarchists who would as willingly destroy church as state.

In Spain the condition of things is the same, though there it comes from actual poverty and from disappointment with the government. Italy is tottering; Spain is tottering. How is it in France? There is not much outward disturbance—yet. But those who have watched the third republic through its checkered career see signs that another revolution may be impending, with a dictator, emperor, heaven knows what, in the foreground. We sincerely hope otherwise, but can only wait and watch events.

The nations of south Europe, all of kindred race, languages and blood, seem rushing on to their ruin. Have they fallen into old age and decrepitude and are they sliding down the slope of time into decay, as the Chinese, Egyptians and so many others have done before them? Natural conditions are all in favor of the continuance of these south Europe nations. Their climate is so mild and healthful that southern Europe is the sanitarium for Christendom. Their soil is the most fertile, growing the finest fruits, grains and vegetables in abundance and variety unequaled elsewhere on the earth. Yet except France, the most northerly one of them, these beautiful countries stagnate and rot in ignorance, destitution and misrule. Has the finger of fate written their doom?

In all the three great divisions of the globe, on the other hand, in Europe, Asia and America, the nations owning the northern regions of the globe are rich, progressive and powerful.

The United States has done a bolder and more daring thing than even declaring war on Spain. It has snubbed a lord high Pooh Bah of the New York Four Hundred's most sacred and select circle, Duke Oliver Hazard Perry Belmont himself. Duke Belmont, actuated by a patriotic and patronizing desire to assist the United States in its present little embarrassment, offered to build a torpedo boat out of his own pocket, if not out of his own head, and lend it to the government for the war. Perhaps he wanted a torpedo boat for a pleasure yacht after hostilities cease, and so lent instead of gave the thing. The loaning of the craft instead of a gift of her outright was one string attached to the vessel. There was another. It was that Duke Oliver Hazard Perry Belmont himself should be commander of the torpedo boat. If Duke Oliver had said his wife would boss the yacht, the government might have thought twice before refusing the services of that redoubtable commander, but Duke Oliver himself, good for one cruel insult, heartily declined with thanks the brilliant offer of Duke Oliver. Never mind. The duke still has his valet and his beautiful clothes.

The barb wire scheme of defense was familiar to Weyler in Cuba. His trocha was made from barb wire. Among the equipments of our troops who went to Cuba was a consignment of 2,500 wire cutters to be used in demolishing the thing. Even flat on the ground, however, the squirming, tangling things would be apt to catch the boys' legs and tear their gaiters.

Dewey's battle in Manilla bay was the greatest naval victory of modern times and it will so stand for centuries. The destruction of ten Spanish warships and the killing of 800 Spanish seamen without the loss of a vessel or even a man on our side is something unheard of before in sea fight records.

The country is so much richer and more populous now than it was in 1861 that war taxes, whatever may be finally decided on, will bring in far larger revenues than they did then and will not be felt by the people nearly so much.

Who Should Be Our Allies?

The most important, perhaps also the most glorious, sign of the times is the drifting together of the nations toward harmony among themselves. Even the alliances of the powers of Europe, maintained as they are by force of arms, are favorable to peace and prosperity. Before the inauguration of these alliances Europe was split into a host of little countries perpetually warring on one another and snapping at one another.

The day of small things, even of small nations, is over. Little countries have united and formed great ones, either peaceably or by conquest. Thus Germany has done; thus also have Russia and Austria. The next step will be a still wider co-operation and welding together of nations. Where the small countries agreed to work together the next thing will be that the great powers will do the same. This understanding may come through war and tribulation, but it will come. Then will begin the real republic of man.

In this co-operation of the nations where will be the place of the United States? We cannot longer stand aloof from the responsibilities of a mighty power; we must bear our share for good or for ill henceforth to the end. Already the nations of Europe are putting forth feelers on the subject of alliances with us and making bids for our favor. Which of the nations of Europe is our natural ally, if there is such nation? Many would reply at once that it is the English, our kindred in blood, our own kith and kin, our language, institutions, push and grit.

Perhaps. Yet there is Russia the great, Russia who stood by us as our fast friend during the dark hour of our civil war, when even England turned her back on us. Let us never forget the friendship of Russia. There, too, is Germany. There is among our people almost as much of the manly, vigorous German blood as of English, and the children of the fatherland have been among the most important builders of our free civilization. Why shall we not be good and fast friends with Germany? France, too, the one leading power that is a republic, she nation that befriended us in the Revolution against England and made it possible for us to be a republic—shall we forget the service rendered us by our sister of France?

The powers of Europe are all our allies. We need them and they need us. We are the friend of them all.

Various educational associations have come to the conclusion that a determined effort should be made to teach children morality in the schools. This conclusion is the correct one. The object of all education as well as of the experiences of later life is character building, the formation of a noble human being. In teaching morality in the schools, however, the danger lies in the liability of the teacher to mix his or her particular theological creed with the ethical instruction. The teacher must continually bear in mind that theology is not morality at all. The proof of it is that we find persons of diametrically opposite religious creeds to be equally good citizens, moral, upright and useful. In the purely ethical teachings of either the Old or New Testament there is not a trace of theology, unless belief in a reverence for a Supreme Being may be considered such. Teachers whose task it is to inculcate morality in schools cannot do better than to follow the lead there indicated.

Under the municipal law governing London, when a new street, a sewer or other public improvement is to be put upon a piece of ground within the city limits the expense of the improvement is not borne by the owner of the ground, but by the tenant of the property. Thus the tenant must pay the tax on "rates" for the improvements, while the wealthy landlord escapes. The richest ground owners in London are consequently bitterly opposed to the Progressive party. In spite of their opposition, however, the voters of London stand by the Progressive county council.

When the United States government accepted the naval cadets at Annapolis, it bought their work and the use of their brains so long as they remained in its service. Naval officers who are patriots will therefore joyfully give to their country any inventions that will help it without demanding extra compensation. Think of Washington or Lincoln haggling for big money for something he had invented which would have been useful to his country!

The notable reply of Colonel Ingersoll when asked how he thought one could best succeed as an orator is commended to all who hope in future to thrill the earth with thoughts that breathe and words that burn. "In the first place," said the colonel, "I would advise him to have something to say."

The United States treasury contains at present $500,000 in prize money won by men of the navy in the civil war, but which was never claimed by them. Well, the United States will be able to make excellent use of the money if they never do claim it.

Don't talk of your ailments, your wrongs, your poverty and your bad luck. Don't carry a funeral around with you. All your friends have troubles of their own, every one.

War Revenues.

Congress proposes to get money to carry on the war from two sources, taxing and borrowing. The taxes, with one exception, are an affair of internal revenue, the duties on foreign goods being considered to be at present as high as it is expedient to make them. The entire sum to be raised by internal revenue taxation will be something over $90,000,000. It is to come from fermented liquors, tobacco and stamp taxes. Beer will be taxed $2 a barrel instead of $1. The tax on beer will bring in, it is expected, $46,000,000. The added taxes on tobacco are expected to produce $20,000,000.

Third, there is the stamp tax. This will mean that deeds, drafts, wills, checks, mortgages and legal documents generally, insurance policies, telegrams, express receipts, patent medicines, perfumery, cosmetics, etc., must have a stamp affixed for which a sum of from 1 cent to $90 has been paid. The stamp tax is expected to bring to the government $30,000,000.

The one exception to the raising of the war tax from domestic sources is the proposed tonnage duty. This would mean that all foreign vessels bringing goods and passengers to the United States should pay a tax of 30 cents per ton of their capacity. Many are of opinion, however, that it would be far wiser to drop this feature of the revenue bill. Foreign vessels arriving in American ports already pay a light tonnage duty. The first effect of the mere proposal to levy such a tax caused an irritation against us in Europe, particularly in Germany, where we are accused of trying by this tax to make European nations pay the expenses of our war with Spain. We want the sympathies of the European powers at present, and it will not be well to alienate them by a petty tonnage tax, especially as it will raise only $2,000,000, a sum not worth irritating even Emperor William for. A tax on tea and coffee may come later.

The bond issue for the emergency of a prolonged war is the large thing. The sum to be raised by government bonds is $600,000,000. The plan proposed is to, allow the government in its discretion to pay $100,000,000 of this money in a year or less, the rest to run 10 and 20 years at interest.

Spanish compliments to Americans are numerous. They fill the weary air. The favorite name for us among the lower classes is "swine," and when the Spaniard is drunk, and consequently braver than usual, he swaggers around with a knife, boasting that he wants to "stick American pigs." De Lome long ago showed the typical high bred courtesy of the Spanish don when he wrote in a private letter that President McKinley was a low politician. Blanco further expressed the common Spanish estimate of our country when in a proclamation he styled us a "batch of nobodies." The same idea was put into yet more artistic language by the eloquent governor of the Philippines when he hurled at us the words a "nation of social excrescences." This was just before Commodore Dewey paid his little visit to the islands. Spain certainly whips us all to pieces in the abuse of language. We cannot cope with her in aiming and firing torpedoes of the tongue or the heavy projectiles of thundering talk. The English vocabulary is not equal to it.

The experiment in municipal government now under trial in London is watched with peculiar interest in our large new world cities. The last city election gave the London county council an unqualified indorsement in the re-election of many of the old members and of new ones favorable to its policy. The London county council corresponds to the various boards of aldermen and councilmen in American cities. A majority of its members belong to what is known in London municipal politics the Progressive party. This party is in favor of control by the people through their duly elected representatives of gas and water works, street railway and other public franchises. Since it came into power four years ago the Progressive party has done much for the sanitation of London and the convenience of its people. It has constructed, among other things, a free tunnel under the Thames river.

The literary canon of the Norwegian author Bjornstjerne Bjornson is respectfully commended to those young men and women of the pen who consider pessimism and horror a mark of genius in a writer. It is this: "What we want in the future is a literature which will make men better."

Rev. Dr. C. S. Swallow, Prohibition and independent candidate for governor of Pennsylvania, is making his canvass on the platform, "Thou shalt not steal." This is awfully suggestive, but we hope Dr. Swallow does not mean to insinuate that only his own party is honest.

It is possible to regard any sort of merchandise on the sea as goods contraband of war except perhaps jewsharps and French bonnets.

The Spanish warcry, "Down with the American pigs!" The American warcry, "Remember the Maine!"

The running expenses of one of our big battleships amount to as much as $1,500 a day.

Stages of National Growth.

History shows that nations and races, like individuals, have their childhood, youth, prime and old age. The leading countries of the earth represent the various stages of national life and duration.

If there is one country that exemplifies the prime of life, that country may be said to be England. Science and art flourish. The land is prosperous. It has the greatest navy and the largest commerce of any country. Today the real greatness of a country is measured by the strength of its navy. Great Britain could conquer in a sea fight any two other nations of the globe. Her people are free, intelligent, wealthy and full of pluck. The quaint old inscription written of Nuremberg in her day of glory may be applied to Great Britain today:

England's hand
Goes to every land.

Our own country is entering on its prime. Its childhood is past. It is passing from its athletic and promising youth and taking what will be perhaps the greatest place ever held by any country in the world's history. It will be so if we follow out the traditions of the founders of this republic, if we do not let wealth, luxury and corrupt old world ideas suck the lifeblood and manhood out of us.

Russia is in her youth, emerging now from barbarism. All children are barbarians. Russia will be the next nation after the United States to rise to grandeur. China, country and people, is decrepit, shriveled up and feeble, going down into old age and death. Spain is a dying old nation; so is Turkey, perhaps also Italy.

In all Asia only one nation is alive and throbbing with red blood. That is Japan. The most singular race spectacle of the time is the Chinese on the one hand, a dying people, and the Japanese, and next door to them, belonging to the same one of the great racial divisions as full of pluck and all conquering energy as any people of the northern blood.

Finally the trend of historic events shows that the ruling peoples of today, the nations present and to come, belong to the northern regions of the earth. Those whose glory is past are of the south, chiefly. Again, only the nation owning a great geographical area can today figure in history. The small country is nothing but a little country.

The remarkable speech of Senor Silvela in the cortes showed that at least one Spaniard has a grain of common sense left. His assertion that while honor demanded Spain should fight before surrendering Cuba there would be nothing dishonorable in stopping the fight when she found she had nothing to gain by it, really pointed a way out for the queen regent and her advisers. The Latin nature is quick to catch one. The "honor" of south European nations requires a fight when Americans or English would not think of it. When private individuals of the south European blood fall out, nothing short of a duel will satisfy their honor. It does not matter much which gets the worst of it. So that there is a slight scratch and blood is drawn that is enough. They shake hands and are friends. Applying this reasoning to Spain, she can now stop any time and withdraw honorably to herself from the fight with the United States. Cuba is certainly lost to her anyhow, as Silvela pointed out, since by the granting of autonomy she gave up the right to tax it as she pleased.

The benighted ignorance of the Spanish masses is shown by the fact that the majority of them, with the possibility of getting a republican government in the event of the downfall of the present monarchy and with a free choice before them, actually prefer another fool king to the liberty enjoyed by an independent people. They would rather have the profligate old Don Carlos for king or even Butcher Weyler for a dictator than to govern themselves. What can be expected of a people like that, a people, moreover, among whom only one woman in six can read and write?

There is considerable truth in the statement made by a recent writer that "there can be no general prosperity in this country that is not born and sustained in the west." The writer should have added also the south. From the south and west come most of the original raw material on which are based the manufactures and commerce of the nation. When the producers of the raw material are prosperous, manufacturers and merchants will likewise be prosperous.

A late ruling of the United States supreme court is directly in line with the sentiment of all civilized individuals. It affirms the legality of the New York law prohibiting persons who have been convicted of and punished for crime from practicing medicine in New York state.

The editor of a good newspaper has as much influence in his day and generation as any man living, and we care not who he is.

In teaching morality to school children a sufficient foundation on which to base all the rest is simply the golden rule.

The most disagreeable people on this earth are those who consider their own opinions on all subjects absolutely correct.

AN ANNOYING WRECK.

TWO CARS BLOCKED THE EAST BOUND TRACK FOR THREE HOURS.

They Were Being Switched to Scott From Works When They Jumped the Rails—East Bound Trains Were Delayed.

A small wreck occurred on the Central Railroad early last Tuesday near the Berckman street crossing in this city which delayed travel over the road for three hours and caused some inconvenience to the trainmen.

About 5:50 Tuesday morning freight train No. 469, east bound, drawn by engine No. 401, Conductor Lucker, was crossing over from track No. 1 to No. 3 to put a loaded freight car on Scott's switch. While bumping along over the switches one of the cars jumped a frog and left the track, carrying a gondola with it. The east bound train switched over here to track No. 2, and were a little late getting into New York. The damage to the freight car was slight, and the wreck was cleared away by 8:30 o'clock.

Preached Against Yellow Journalism.

The service at the First Baptist church Sunday morning was attended by seventy persons, and the pastor, Rev. Dr. D. J. Yerkes, delivered a strong sermon on the subject, "Thou Shalt Not Bear Evil Report." The doctor dwelt upon the evil and false reports given out by newspapers of a sensational character, and he also spoke against the practice of gossiping and trying to ruin people's character. The discourse had to do considerably with the present war, and he spoke highly in favor of the righteousness of the cause which brought on the war. There were many helpful points in the discourse which were profitable to all. During the service Miss Harris and Mrs. Ward sang a beautiful duet.

Charged With Taking Bed.

Carrie L. Schorb, of East Front street, has begun suit in Justice Moffett's court against Christopher Meyer to recover $49 which she claims is due her as damages. Mrs. Schorb owns a piece of property on East Fifth street, next to where Meyer lives, and charged Meyer with cutting off sod from the lot and carrying it away. Meyer claims that other people in the neighborhood have been doing the same thing.

May Walk Postponed.

The stormy weather Sunday prevented the members of the Gesang and Turn Verein from enjoying their annual May walk. Fourteen members started at 4 o'clock Sunday morning and got as far as Scotch Plains, when it began to rain very hard. The party at once decided to return and have the walk next Sunday if the weather permits.

Gave Way to Red Cross Benefit.

The House Committee of the Park Club announces that the informal club entertainment that was to be held on Thursday evening, has been postponed so as not to conflict with the Red Cross benefit at Music Hall on that day.

No Cure—No Pay.

That is the way all druggists sell Grove's Tasteless Chill Tonic for Malaria, Chills and Fever. It is simply Iron and Quinine in a tasteless form. Children love it. Adults prefer it to bitter, nauseating Tonics. Price, 50c. For sale by R. J. Shaw. 12 2 1y

THE WONDERS OF SCIENCE.

Lung Troubles and Consumption Can be Cured

An Eminent New York Chemist and Scientist Makes a Free Offer to Our Readers.

AN INDIGNANT PRISONER.

He Will Go to Jail Because He Did Not Get a License.

Patrick Cashman, who works for Mrs. John Brown, was arrested early Monday morning by Officer Totten for carting garbage without a license. Cashman applied for a license several weeks ago, and the license has been awaiting him ever since April 1st.

In the meanwhile Cashman has been carting just the same, although being warned again and again to obtain the license or quit.

When arraigned in court that morning Cashman admitted carting garbage, but said he didn't charge for it, and didn't think Health Inspector Addis had a right to make him take out a license.

"Ten dollars or thirty days," said the Judge.

When Cashman heard this sentence he went into a towering rage, and as he was led back to his cell shouted: "Then down I'll go. This is a nice town, this is, where a man can't work for nothin."

His horse and wagon were sent back home.

Sudden Death in Martinville.

Theodore Abbott, foreman in William Bartle's stone cutting establishment on Park avenue, received word last Tuesday of the sudden death of his mother in Martinville, from a stroke of paralysis. Mrs. Abbott was about sixty-eight years of age.

THE FLOWERY KINGDOM JUST AWAKENING TO CIVILIZED THOUGHT.

The Chinese Have Been Taught How Weak They Are to Resist Other Nations of Enlightenment by the War with Japan, and Now There is a Developing Feeling for More Education—The People Naturally Turn to the United States Missionaries for Help and the Church People Should Help Cause All That is Possible

Under the auspices of the Temple Builders' Society of the First Baptist church a very interesting meeting was held last Sunday in the church. George H. Batcheler, president of the society, presided and read extracts from two letters from Mr. and Mrs. Hendricks, who have charge of the Yerkes' chapel located in India. The work was reported to be progressing favorably. Mr. Batcheler then introduced Rev. C. L. Rhoades, secretary of the American Baptist Missionary Association, who gave a lecture of unusual interest on "China." Mr. Rhoades presented his subject in an entirely new light and it awakened new thoughts about the work. He spoke of the foreign powers, cat-like, waiting to grasp China and appropriate the lands and vast wealth for their own benefit. In the late war, he said, between China and Japan, the former was made to realize how weak she was with her vast population. Since that war China has been aroused and she wants to be instructed in that which will make her a powerful Nation.

In view of this desire she has very naturally turned to the United States and her missionaries, for they have not evidenced any desire to appropriate the lands in China at the point of a cannon as the other Nations have. She realizes that Japan has made wonderful progress in civilization and she, too, wants to do so. The vast fields of unknown wealth wherein are contained treasures are eagerly sought for by the foreign nations. It has been said that there is enough coal in China to supply the whole world and for this reason other powers are striving for possessions.

In conclusion the speaker said that the door of China now stands wide open to the United States and she has the glorious opportunity of a century. He urged the hearty support of all in the cause of China and solicited means to carry on the work.

The committee in closing, said that they would be glad to receive written suggestions from builders, and asked that they be sent to Councilman Walter L. Hetfield. The committee promised to give all the suggestions made last night careful consideration.

$10 for Killing Calves.

John Barre, of Netherwood, was fined $10 Tuesday morning in the City Court for killing calves within the city limits. Barre was arrested two two weeks ago by Health Inspector Addis, who caught him in the act of killing. He pleaded not guilty at first, but Saturday morning changed his plea to one of non vult. Barre was represented by Attorney Francis J. Blatz who asked the Court for leniency, but as Barre had been guilty before of this same offense the City Judge was not inclined to be easy.

PLUCKY LITTLE NATION.

WELL-KNOWN HISTORIAN DESCRIBES THE CAREER OF HOLLAND.

Closing Lecture of the Present Season for the Monday Afternoon Club Delivered by William Elliott Griffis.

The club year of the Monday Afternoon Club closed Monday afternoon with a lecture on "The Holland of Today," delivered by William Elliott Griffis, the well-known historian, in Casino of the Union County Country Club. Mr Griffis might well be considered an authority on the subject of Holland; one of his best known books is "Brave Little Holland, and What She Taught Us," which has interested many readers in the plucky little Nation by the sea.

A Nation's present can only be explained by its past, and a considerable part of Mr. Griffis' lecture was devoted to a study of the causes which have made Holland what she is today. The long wars with Spain were described, and then the speaker dwelt with admiration upon the determination and perseverance shown by the Hollanders.

A picture of the little queen, Wilhelmina, had been placed on a stand near the lecturer, and he called attention to the many excellent qualities possessed by the young sovereign, and the warm love borne for her by her subjects. Wilhelmina, he added, comes of a race not only great, but good as well.

The odd costumes of the people, and especially the ponderous head-dress worn by the peasant women, were described, and stories told of their origin. Mr. Griffis spoke warmly in praise of the beautiful home-life general among the Hollanders, and of the influence the love of home and native land have had in the history of the country.

The wonderful excellence of the art of Holland was of course spoken of at length by Mr. Griffis. In painting nature and home-life, the Dutch painters cannot be excelled.

As a lecturer, Mr. Griffis is a pleasant, easy, informal speaker. With a bright, original manner of expression, and many little touches of humor, he easily held the pleased attention of his audience, and made the final gathering of Plainfield's largest woman's club a delightful ending to a year of absorbing and successful work.

by local application, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflammed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflammed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free

A May Walk.

A pleasant May walk was given last Saturday by Miss Deborah Winn and Miss May Walls, of the borough. The party started at 10 o'clock in the morning and spent the day wandering about the mountains back of North Plainfield. The young folks returned home at 7 o'clock after a day of great enjoyment to all. Among those in the party were Miss Marion Pierson, Miss Helen Pierson, Miss Mabel McGee, Miss Leontine Huntaman, Miss Bertha Hill, Miss Jessica Hill, Miss Anna Marquardt, Miss Henrietta Winn and Wm McGee, Norman Hill and Wm. Pierson.

Death of Henry Bender.

Henry Bender, of West Front street, died Saturday night after a short illness, and was buried Tuesday afternoon from the German Reformed church, of which he was a member. The deceased was 38 years of age, a cutter by trade, and was employed by Mantz Brothers, of West Front street. He leaves a widow and two children, a boy and a girl. Mr. Bender was a member of the Saengerbund singing society, and a choir from that organization sang at the funeral. Interment was in Hillside.

A Faithful Servant Gone.

The death of Julia Bannon, aged fifty-two years, occurred Tuesday at 440 West Eight street. For twenty-five years she was a faithful servant and friend in the home of J. Evarts Tracy, and she was highly esteemed for her many excellent qualities. The funeral services were held at St. Mary's church yesterday morning at 10:30.

Opposition to Martin Act.

IT WAS SMITH DAY IN SOMERSET COUNTY.

The High Mogul of the Family Was on Trial.

AN ECHO OF THE BIG PIGNIC.

PHOTOGRAPHER REGER DIDN'T OBEY ORDERS QUICK ENOUGH.

The Photographer Wanted to Take the Pictures of Some of the Smiths, But Isiah, the President and Patriarch, Said Nay, and Then Forcibly Removed the Offending Photographer From the Picnic Grounds—The Result Was a Suit and Damages for Reger—Case Heard on Appeal By Judge Bartine.

Somerville, May 17—The Somerset county court yesterday echoed an incident of the famous Smith picnic at Peapack, up in the hills of Somerset, last August, which served as a magnet to draw upwards of a hundred Smiths to the tribunal of justice.

The Smith family reunion is one of the great features that annually occur in New Jersey, and the event is attended by members of that family name that range from plain every day folks to United States senators and college professors. The re-union is under the direction of the Smith Association, of which Isiah Smith is president and patriarch. Naturally there are a large number of Smiths who attend the re-union that are easy game for all sorts of fraudient schemes, and as a result fakirs mix up pretty freely with the Smiths when they meet at Peapack. One of the supreme duties of the president of the Smith Association is to ferret out these fakirs and thus preserve the temper and morals of the great and glorious family. It was while engaged in what he considered this duty that Isiah became involved in trouble that resulted in his appearance as a defendant in Somerset court yesterday.

Henry Reger is a photographer living in Smithville. Smith reasoned he espied a chance for a day's profitable business, as the Smiths are great for having their pictures "took" on occasions when they gather for a good time. Consequently Reger took his outfit and a tent to the scene of the Smith festivities that August morning. He erected his tent at a favorable location and was about to begin business when Isiah Smith cast his eagle eye over the landscape and saw the operation which Reger was to engage in. In the Smith constitution laws of the Smith family reunion that no pictures shall be "took" by itinerant photographers, and President Smith immediately proceeded to Reger's tent and commanded him to pull stakes and decamp. Smith insisted that he had temporary authority over the land on which the tent was erected, and when Reger made no move to go, Smith tore down the tent and grabbing Reger by the seat of the trousers soon had him a standing dejectedly in the road. In the scuffle that took place a lamp in Reger's dark room was overturned and set fire to the tent and material and a portion of it was consumed.

A few days after the picnic, Smith was made a defendant in a suit for damages by Reger. Reger was represented by Miss Mary V. Steele, the second woman lawyer in New Jersey, and after an exciting trial secured a verdict in his favor. Smith appealed to the county court and yesterday the case was heard by Judge Bartine, during which many Smiths were sworn.

At the conclusion of the testimony Judge Bartine said that evidently Smith had used undue force in ejecting Reger from the sight of the picnic, as there was no need to choke a man and burn his outfit to accomplish his removal. Judge Bartine, however, reserved his decision until a later date. In the meantime the Smiths of New Jersey are much concerned to learn what the outcome of the contention will be, as it will have an important bearing on how order at Smith picnics in the future is going to be maintained.

Improving the Library.

Woolston & Buckle began Tuesday painting and decorating the room in the Public Library where the Schoonmaker rare collection of pottery is to be exhibited. There will be green burlap on the upper part of the wall and the ceiling will be painted a cream color, with a red dado, and light olive woodwork.

Verdict for Plaintiff Stands.

The appeal case of Howell Thatcher against Charles Debole, that was twice tried in Justice Mattison's court, came up in the Somerset County Court of Common Pleas and the appeal dismissed. The verdict for $108 for the plaintiff now stands. The plaintiff was represented by Winfield S. Angleman.

W. W. Cooke, of the borough, left Tuesday afternoon on the 2:28 o'clock through western train for Des Moines, Iowa, where he has secured a lucrative position in a publishing house. Mr. Cook has been employed in the office of the Central Railroad Company in New York for some time past.

TO HELP BUILD A CHURCH

A LARGE FAIR TO BE GIVEN BY CHURCH OF THE REDEEMER.

The Affair Will Continue for Three Days and Will Have Many Pleasant Features to Amuse—Those in Charge.

One of the largest fairs ever held in this city will be opened on Thursday, May 19th, at 8 o'clock at No. 20 Willow avenue under the auspices of the ladies of the Church of the Redeemer. The ladies have had this bazaar in contemplation for some time and the results of their work, will, it is certain, be gratifying to all beholders.

There are six principal booths besides other attractions. On entering the eyes of the visitor will surely be attracted by the display of sofa cushions of all kinds and descriptions, presided over by Mrs. W. Montgomery Downey and Mrs. Frank Brown. Here all styles of pillows from the comfortable hammock cushion to the elaborate drawing room ornament may be procured. Bags are also very much in evidence here, hanging from every possible place and of every conceivable kind.

The doll booth decorated in pink presents a fascinating appearance, and here miniature ladies and gentlemen, boys and girls, are seated about in graceful attitudes, tempting the money of the on lookers out of their pockets. Miss Wilson, Miss Barlow, and Miss Frances Phillips are here to attend to the comfort of these small people, and incidentally to take charge of the gains accruing from them.

The fancy table displays all manner of tempting and beautiful articles, and Mrs. Samuel Townsend, the chairman, has a corps of ladies assisting her, among whom are the following: Mrs. Charles Matthews, Mrs. George Dupee and Miss Stevens.

Numberless rare and exquisite articles are on exhibition at the china booth where Mrs. Audsley and the Misses Audsley have charge.

A bower of green and white is the candy booth where the most delicious varieties of that article may be obtained. Here Mrs. Gilbert T. Rhoades with Miss Moore, Miss Josephine Brock and Miss Phillips at her sides, supply the wants of the purchaser.

The lemonade booth is also in tempting proximity and is a charming picture. Mrs. Frank Rowley and Mrs. Demarest preside here, while Miss Virginia Hegeman, Miss Dora Waring and Miss Elizabeth Curtis hand glasses of the refreshing beverage.

Last but not least comes the refreshment room, where the visitor may enjoy a most delicious meal at a reasonable price. Mrs. O. Stevens, assisted by Mrs. A. B. Faber, Jr., Miss Davis, Mrs. Henry R. Phillips, Mrs. Brock and Mrs. Webb look after the comfort of the guests, while young ladies attired patriotically in red, white and blue serve the appetizing viands. Old Glory is prominently displayed about the supper room and the tasteful decorations are pleasing to the eye.

Grab-bags are also centers of attraction, and here articles of various degrees of value may be obtained by the payment of a small sum. Miss Clapp has charge of these entertaining features.

Visitors will all find amusement and pleasure at the bazaar which will continue through the afternoons and evenings of Friday and Saturday, May 20th and 21st. No admission fee will be charged. The proceeds of the fair will be devoted to the building fund of the parish.

TEMPERANCE WORKERS MEET.

Howell Division Entertained State Officers and Out-of-town Visitors.

Howell Division, Sons of Temperance, gave a reception and entertainment Monday to the three divisions of the order in Newark. Despite the inclement weather, there were fully fifty visitors, and as many members from this city present. The evening was passed in a pleasant way, with music and recitations, and before the visitors left, refreshments were served. There were seven divisions represented last night, being from Elizabeth, Roselle, Newark and Camden. The programme presented was an enjoyable one. Miss Josephine Murphy recited. Miss Try Mattox sang, accompanied on the banjo by Miss Dora Bennett; Mrs. A. D. Pope, and Mrs. Clark, of Newark, rendered a duet, and Mrs. Pope afterwards sang a solo. Mrs. Manley also sang, and was encored.

The Grand Worthy Patriarch and three of the Past Grand Worthies were present. The reception was given with no idea of having the outside friends meet the workers, and become better acquainted with the order and the object of the organization.

The committee in charge consisted of Sylvester Scribner, chairman; William B. Ayres and Benjamin Hand. The ladies committee was composed of Miss Alice Scribner, chairman; Mrs. Andrew Cox, Mrs. Margaret Lisk, Mrs. T. F. Lincoln, Miss Maggie Moore, Mrs. David Bush, Miss May Thompson and Mrs. James Baldin.

DEVELOPING THE BOYS.

WORK OF THE BOYS' CLUB AT THE END OF THE FIFTH YEAR.

Closing Exhibition Showed What the Young Fellows are Taught and How Well They Accomplished Their Work.

Saturday the Boys' Club closed its fifth year after one of the most successful seasons in its existence. The closing took the form of an informal reception, at which the boys and their parents and friends were invited and given an opportunity to see just what kind of instruction is given the boys of the club, and how their idle hours are spent when they are there.

The exhibition Saturday evening was the fourth annual. Under the direction of Olaf Sangstad, the superintendent, samples of the boys' work were spread out in the working rooms. The branches taught here are carpentry, mechanical drawing and designing and foundry work. All the work is done under Mr Sangstad's eye, and some of the work exhibited would have done credit to a skilled mechanic. Especially was this true in the designing department, where several of the patterns showed an originality and a thoroughness that is remarkable in boys.

The past year has been one of flattering results to the directors and superintendent. The total attendance was 5,304, against 2 217 for 1897. The lads who are taught in the club are not turned out skilled mechanics, but they are taught to be handy with tools, beginning with the model and the plane and being worked along through the varying degrees until when they have finished the course they have chosen they are fitted to accept positions in the machine and carpenter shops several degrees removed from the mere apprentice.

The club re-opens for its sixth term September 15th. Mr. Saugstad has been with the club for five years, or ever since its organization, and has had complete charge for the past two years. During the summer months it is Mr. Saugstad's intention to re arrange the different year's work about the work rooms so that the visitor can see at a glance what is being done.

The visitors to the club Saturday evening were numerous and were loud in their praise of what the boys are taught. For fear some might not have been able to come Saturday, Mr. Saugstad opened the rooms yesterday afternoon from 4 to 6 o'clock, to give all an opportunity to visit the exhibition.

Delegates to Encampment Convention.

A special meeting of the Exempt Firemen's Association was held Saturday evening for the purpose of giving the delegates to the State convention the power to select their own alternates. A Martial Air Prevailed and Army Rules and Regulations Were Maintained—How the Affair was Arranged.

A martial air prevailed at Trinity last Friday at the camp fire of officers and committee members of the Christian Endeavor Society.

On entering, the first thing that struck the eye was the sign: "Don't attempt to pass the guards without giving the countersign, (name of committee.)" In the centre of the large Sunday-school room was a camp fire, the tripod and camp kettles and pile of wood underneath in the open space, in the centre of which were a number of lighted candles, which gave quite a realistic effect. On either side of the camp fire were stacks of muskets. The parlor was the headquarters of Commander-in-Chief H. J. Martin and staff. The committees were called companies and were given class rooms as company quarters, assigned as follows:

Co. A, lookout; Co. B, prayer meeting; Co. C, social; Co. D, flower; Co. E, Sunday-school; Co. F, missionary; Co. G, temperance and good citizen ship; Co. H, reception; Co. I, music; music; Co. K, visiting.

All late comers were promptly put under arrest and placed in the guard house, for which, and the headquarters and company rooms, J. Q. Miles had tastefully lettered artistic signs.

The sentinels at the door were Messrs. Charles Dolliver and Walter Emmons. They were obliged to "shoot" Charles Bemsen for attempting to run by the guards. To the music of the fife and drum corps march, played by Mrs. F. E. Anthony, the commander and staff marched to the mess room, where a bountiful supper was served.

After dinner speeches were made by Commander Martin, Dominie Scheack, F. E. Smith, A. K. Willett, Miss E. C. Benedict, Mrs. Scheack and E. E. Anthony. All then repaired to their respective headquarters, where a half-hour was spent planning ways and means of work. All then gathered around the camp fire and with no light but that of the fire an hour was most delightfully spent in earnest and helpful conference. Taps or good night were sounded at 10 o'clock and the most successful affair of the season closed.

Winfield Scott Post, G. A. R., kindly loaned the camp-fire outfit and muskets. The camp-fire was under the management of Mrs. H. J. Martin. Mrs. J. E. Townsend, Miss Corinna Young, Miss Jennie Ross and Mrs. Bertha Richards, composing the social committee, who were assisted by the reception committee and twelve young people who acted as waiters.

To E. E. Anthony, who planned the affair and H. J. Martin and others who assisted in carrying it out, as planned, much credit is due.

ENGAGEMET ANNOUNCED.

Harry Drier to Wed Miss Sophie Sandberg, of New York.

The engagement of Miss Sophie Sandberg, of New York, to Harry Drier, of this city, was announced Sunday. There was a celebration at the home of the bride, Bleeker and Christopher streets, Sunday afternoon, in honor of the event. There were 150 guests present and a delightful time was enjoyed. William Newcorn, of this city, acted as master of ceremonies and made some very apt remarks. There were also present from this city Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Drier, Miss Bertha Drier and Walter Drier.

A Philadelphia Train Discontinued.

The westbound Philadelphia train due in this city 2:17 p. m. has been discontinued, and there is a 2:32 train that now stops to pick up passengers for points west. The 2:32 train leaves New York at 1:45 in the afternoon. There is a E. and O. through train that now leaves New York at 1 o'clock in the afternoon and runs to Washington in five hours. It does not stop at Plainfield.

Consul Bowen Visiting Here.

Herbert Wolcott Bowen, Consul-General of the United States at Barcelona, Spain, is a guest of his brother, Henry E. Bowen, of Watchung avenue. Since his arrival a week ago in New York, Mr. Bowen has visited Washington to make his report to President McKinley and the State Department. Previous to his appointment to Spain in 1890, Mr. Bowen was a resident of Netherwood.

A Church Site.

The piece of property at the corner of Grove street and Prospect place has been purchased by the members of the Church of the Redeemer and at an early date the work of building a church thereon will be started.

THE GALLANT SEVENTH WENT HOME DEFEATED

Crescents Won Their First Game of the Year.

SCORE WAS FOUR TO TWO.

IT WAS A CONTEST BETWEEN THE MEN IN THE BOX.

A Crowd of Several Hundred Enthusiasts Visited the Oval and Witnessed the Inauguration of the National Sport Where Bicycling Once Had All the Glory—Manager Mumford's Team Showed That It Was a Strong Aggregation—Batting was Good and Opportune—The Score Given in Detail.

The Seventh Regiment, the "gallant Seventh" of New York, was vanquished. As the setting sun disappeared behind the cloudy forerunners of the approaching storm, they departed from the field of battle the losers in the race for victory. Decidedly it was a day for rejoicing for the Plainfield baseball enthusiasts.

This all happened Saturday afternoon when the Plainfield Crescents opened the season at the Crescent Oval. Their opponents were the baseball experts of New York's crack regiment. The result has already been suggested. It was by the score of 4 to 2, a decidedly satisfactory state of affairs to the victors.

The game was something on the order of an experiment. Manager Mumford claimed that he had a wonderful aggregation of ball players, but nobody had seen them together as yet. Then, too, it was the first game on the Oval, and the success of baseball in that location needed to be demonstrated.

Altogether, the experiment was very successful. Those who went to scoff remained to cheer. The Crescents, although weakened by the loss of two of their players, put up such a stiff game that one of the strongest of the amateur teams in New York succumbed to its prowess. While the crowd was by no means what has been seen at some baseball games in the past, it numbered several hundred people and was quite enthusiastic. The grand stands and bleachers were a decided advance over any of the past and the diamond promised much after another week's work.

There were a number of familiar faces among the Crescents when they took their places on the diamond. "Jack" Cavanaugh was at first. He is to captain the team this year. Despite the announcement that "Art" Lederer was intended for the outfield, he showed up at second according to orders and covered the base well. Metz, the new short stop, was a decided success. Cooney injured a finger Friday and Collins was brought in from the field to third to fill his place. Without any practice for the position, he did excellent work. His place, however, is in the outfield. Owing to the fact that his father was ill and likely to die at any moment, O'Brien, the former Princeton and Manhattan College man, who was to play in the outfield, did not come. Symons and Hollister filled the vacant positions and did excellent work. Clarence Vroom took Lederer's place in the outfield.

Warren McLoughlin faced the boys of the Seventh as pitcher for the home team. His arm was rather glassy at times, but he kept the ball under pretty good control and proved a mystery for the visitors. Dave Vroom was behind the bat and caught with all his accustomed vigor.

In batting there was a distinct advance among all the local players. They showed a tendency to hit the ball that was pleasing. Lederer showed the most improvement and made the prettiest hit of the day, good for two bases.

Not only was the batting good, but it came at the right time in most instances. The visitors on the contrary were unable to bunch their hits and while their base running was much superior to that of the home team, they could not get their runners home even after they had nearly completed the circuit.

The visitors were handicapped by the loss of two men, but they put up a strong game despite that. Discoway had good control of the ball and never gave one Plainfielder a chance to walk to first, although he did not strike out as many as Mac.

At the start the game looked like a pitcher's battle. Two men on each side were struck out in the first inning. Then the visitors opened the fun in the second. Discoway went out at first, Donnely scored a clean hit. Four balls sent Young to first. A slow grounder along the foul line to third by Ferguson filled the bases. Lardon struck out. Then Mac's went back on him and he forced in a run by giving Wessells his base on balls. Dollard ended the inning by going out, Collins to Cavanaugh. Nobody scored again until the fifth although several started to make the circuit.

Clarence Vroom opened the inning by an easy grounder to Discoway, who threw him out at first. Symons hit to far centre field for one base. Lederer drove the ball over shortstop's head for two bases. Then Hollister sent them both in on a long drive to left. He tried to stretch it to a double and was nipped at second.

Cavanaugh made a double in the next inning and reached home through an error by Frank Cadmus and a sacrifice hit by Metz. Symons scored again in the seventh on a hit by himself, a wild pitch, a sacrifice by Hollister and a single by Dave Vroom.

The success of the Crescents rather dampened the ardor of the "Gallant Seventh" until the eighth inning. Will Cadmus made a vicious lunge at one of Mac's outshoots and sent Symons chasing after it. He stole second and third and scored on the throw-in of Discoway's long fly to right field. The other attempts at scoring failed. The Crescents did not play their half of the ninth inning.

The detailed score is as follows:

A WATSON IS FINED.

MALICHAR, BROTHER OF MIKE, PAYS THE CITY $50.

He Pleaded Mea Vult to Selling Liquor Without a License and Gave Bonds to Conduct an Orderly Place Hereafter.

Judge DeMeza has evidently become thoroughly exasperated with the Watson tribe of illegal liquor sellers, and in court this morning he dealt severely with Malichar, brother of Mike, who had pleaded nea vult with the hope that by saving the city the cost of a trial he would be taken care of in a lenient manner by the cadi. Is he entitled to pleading nea vult, Malichar also gave a bond for $500 to conduct a strictly orderly place, and sell no intoxicants in sarsaparilla bottles, but Malichar's late day penitence did not save him a fine of $50 or sixty days in the county jail.

Malichar took his sentence coolly, although he evidently expected to get off with a suspension of sentence. He paid the fine.

The two Watson brothers have given the city any amount of trouble, and Mike has been charged several times with selling beer. This last time it was the brother, Malichar, who was arrested. He promptly entered a plea of not guilty, and a date for the trial was set. When the day came, and a jury had been sworn, Watson's lawyers, Codington & Swackhamer, offered an affadavit, sworn to by Watson, stating that an important witness was out of the State. Upon this the court consented to postpone the trial for several weeks.

While waiting to the day of trial to come, Malichar offered his plea, which was accepted, and upon the recommendation of the Corporation Counsel, this sentence was inflicted. Watson said that he had cleaned out his wine room, moved the bar out of doors, and promises to keep an orderly hotel there.

Chose the Same Date.

Two employes of the United States Express Comany, of this city, are to take unto themselves wives Sunday, May 22d. They, prospective grooms are William Albert, of East Fourth street, who will be married to Miss Christine Svenson; and William Hartpence, of East Fourth street, who will marry Miss Edith Wieghman, of West Front street.

A Plague of Dogs.

Residents living in the western part of the city have complained to the police about the large number of homeless curs that are to be found in the neighborhood of Grant avenue and South Second street. Several little children have had narrow escapes from being bitten. Chief Grant has given Frisbie orders to exterminate some of them, and the work will be begun at once.

A Thorough Mayor.

Mayor Wilson, of the borough, is thoroughly business and up-to-date in his method of conducting the affairs of the borough. He now has an office in the borough Council rooms, where he will meet all persons having business with him. He can be found at his office at 9 o'clock in the morning and at 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

GRADUATING HONORS AT THE HIGH SCHOOL

Pupils Accorded Distinction by Reason of Good Work.

AN ALUMNI RECEPTION.

HENRY PIERCE AND MISS OSGOOD RECEIVED THE HONORS.

The Young Miss Will be the Valedictorian and the Young Woman Salutatorian — Both Were Chosen by Vote of Their Classmates — Wilbur F. Cornwell, President of the Class of '98, Says There Will be a Reception Given to the Graduates—A Meeting Will be Called Soon and the Details Arranged.

Two announcements have been made that are of special interest to the upper classes of the Plainfield High School. The appointment of the honor pupils of the graduating class has been made, and Wilbur F. Cornwell, president of the class of '98, has stated that the classes of '98 and '97 will continue the old custom this year and give a reception to the graduates.

It has been the custom to appoint the valedictorian and salutatorian from among the members of the graduating class for the excellence of the work during the four years of the High School course. This year, Miss Ellen Osgood and Henry Pierce were found to be equal in standing, and the question as which place they should receive was left to the class. The question was put to vote and Henry Pierce selected valedictorian and Miss Osgood salutatorian.

In regard to the alumni reception, it has been decided to hold one as usual, although the movement is rather late in starting. President Cornwell is no longer a resident of this city, and is also busy with his studies at the New York Homœopathic College. He has therefore turned the matter over to the vice-president of the class, Miss Grace E. Overton, who will call a meeting at once. Details of the reception will then be settled.

OLD HAND ENGINE RETURNS.

Scotch Plains Firemen Present the Exempts With the Machine.

Despite the very heavy storm last Thursday the members of the Scotch Plains fire department came to Plainfield and returned the hand fire engine to the Exempt Firemen's Association. When they reached the Plainfield square with the old-time machine, Chief T. O. Doane, R. B. Rogers and Jerry Moore, committee from the Exempts, were waiting to receive the present. The committee and visitors all adjourned to Findlay's hotel, where the apparatus was placed for temporary storage. A lunch was then served to the visiting firemen by the committee, after which a short time was devoted to speechmaking by all present. Then there was a visit to the fire houses, where an exhibition of calling up the fire horses was given.

The old engine looks as bright and clean as in days of old and is still good for work. The Scotch Plains department recently bought another hand engine from parties in New York. The engine was formerly in the service in New York city.

BOROUGH SCHOOL COMMENCEMENT.

Miss Bertha Stevens and Fred Williams Accorded the Honors.

The Borough Public School commencement will be held on the evening of June 23d in the N. Y. A. A. Hall. There will be twelve graduates and arrangements are now being made to have an attractive programme. The music will be a great feature of the occasion

Miss Bertha Stevens will be the valedictorian, and the salutatorian will be Fred Williams. Miss Smalley and Miss VanFleet, of the graduating class, it happens, have secured the same average in their studies, and they will divide the honors. It has been very difficult for the teachers to decide in the matter, but due announcement will be made concerning the selection.

STREET IMPROVEMENT.

West Fourth Street Will Receive Some Needed Repairs.

A few loads of stone are being dumped on West Fourth street near Park avenue, to improve the condition of the road a little until the street can be macadamized, As soon as Street Commissioner Garrett can get around to it, the street will be macadamized from Park avenue to New street.

A different plan is being pursued this year in regard to using the street roller. Last season it was kept attending one gang of workmen, but year it goes from one to the other, and in this way the work can be pushed forward much more rapidly.

Children Have a Party.

Mrs. Laurence Myers, of East Front street, gave a party Friday afternoon in honor of her daughter, Margaret's birthday. Several little friends from the neighborhood were invited, and the afternoon was passed very pleasantly in the "bird's nest" under the trees.

PATRIOTIC ADDRESSES.

DELIVERED AT THE AFFAIR GIVEN BY DAUGHTERS OF AMERICA.

The Remarks Caused Much Enthusiasm Among the Audience—Were Followed With an Entertainment and Dance.

An entertainment and dance was given in Washington Hall Thursday under the auspices of Martha Washington Council, Daughters of America. This is the first affair of the kind given by the council in some time past and it was in every respect a success. The occasion was marked by two addresses of a patriotic character given by State Council Secretary J. B. Rollinson, of Rahway, and District Deputy VanCamp, of Newark. Both addresses were attentively listened to and created much enthusiasm in the patriotic audience.

The programme for the evening was an excellent one and consisted of recitations by Miss Cora Hand, Miss Murphy, Miss Ella Hand, of this city, and Miss VanCamp, of Newark; vocal duets by Miss Knight and Miss Bird and the Misses Gullberg. The appearance of John Moran was a feature and his singing of popular songs received cordial applause. The instrumental selections on the piano by Miss Cortwright were greatly enjoyed by all, and in fact every number on the programme was well received. During the evening Prof. Naylor's orchestra rendered patriotic airs and music for dancing which followed the entertainment.

The committee in charge of the affair consisted of Mrs. Joseph Randolph, Mrs. Daniel Page, Mrs. Mattis, Mrs. Gullberg and Mrs. Biker. The committee also attended to the refreshment stand and dancing, while Walter Higgins very kindly officiated at the door box. The entertainment was given for the benefit of the council and a goodly sum was realized through the earnest efforts of the members.

"Jack" Carney appeared on the programme and gave some of his German dialect. He took for his subject the present war question, and he disclosed a small cannon upon which he spoke at some length. His jokes were good and he displayed his old-time wit and humor. During his speech the orchestra played "Hail Columbia."

A CLUB RECEPTION.

A PLEASANT TIME GIVEN IN THE CATHOLIC CLUBHOUSE.

Rev. Father Murphy One of the Guests and Was Cordially Greeted by His Old Parishioners—Patriotic Decorations.

The members of the Catholic Club gave a sociable and reception last Thursday in their clubhouse to the newly-elected honorary and associate members. The occasion was made one of patriotic display and the club members and their guests thoroughly enjoyed the evening.

A short programme, which closed with dancing, began the evening. Rev. Fathers Smyth, Murphy and McCormick were present, and each one spoke a few words of encouragement to the members of the club. Father Murphy, who is now stationed in Paterson, was able to run over to this city for a little while yesterday and to stay to the reception. As Father Murphy was a special favorite with his parishioners, when he was here, they were very glad to see him, and he had a little reception all to himself.

The programme opened with patriotic selections by George Rogers, piano and Eugene O'Reilly, violin. Miss O'Keeffe, of Brooklyn, sang two solos, accompanied on the piano by Miss Fannie Hillman. James Ward, of California, an actor of considerable note, was present and entertained the audience with a few selections, paying a high tribute to the church and especially to the clergy in a short speech. "America," sung by Miss O'Keeffe, Miss Flannagan and Miss Keely, ended the programme.

The floor was then cleared for dancing, which was kept up until a late hour. Music was furnished by Rogers and O'Reilly. The hall was gay with American flags and bunting, the national colors being displayed on the walls, platform, and even the President's table was covered with the colors. A picture of Rear Admiral Dewey, framed in red, white and blue, hung at the back of the stage.

The committee in charge of the reception consisted of T. J. Comerford, chairman; James Hibbits, Thomas Owens, E. Flynn, H. H. Hillman, Wade and M. Higgins. An elaborate supper was served during the evening.

CARDS AND PATRIOTISM.

Last Gathering of Thursday Night Euchre Club for the Season.

The Thursday Night Euchre Club was entertained last Thursday by Miss May MacLaughlin, of Somerset street. The American colors were prominently displayed on the tally cards and the napkins used were also of the same colors. Eugene MacLaughlin took the place of an absent lady member and he took first prize. Miss Clara Williams won second prize for the ladies, while Robert Clark and George Heumann were awarded first and second prizes for the men. This was the last meeting of the club for the season. The members of the club decided to attend in a body the concert to be given by the Queen City Band in Music Hall the evening of May 20th. They will occupy a private box.

A DOUBLE EXCURSION.

Central Lodge and G. A. R. Will Go to Asbury Park Together.

Central Lodge, A. O. U. W., held a meeting Thursday. One candidate was initiated, and three propositions were received. The excursion committee reported that as the grand encampment of the G. A. R. and the Supreme Lodge of the A. O. U. W. met at Asbury Park the same week, the joint-committees of Columbia and Central Lodges advised that they combine with Winfield Scott Post in an excursion June 23d, as both organizations had already planned to go on that date. The committee was given full power to act in the matter.

Deputy Grand Master Workman Clark T. Rogers gave an account of his visit to Fraternal Lodge, Phillipsburg.

—The local letter-carriers are making extensive arrangements to entertain the carriers of this State who meet in this city in annual convention on May 30th.

A MONSTER BENEFIT FOR THE RED CROSS.

Affair To Be Given in Music Hall Tonight.

WEBER & FIELDS' ARTISTS

MAYOR FISK AND PROMINENT CITIZENS ARE THE PATRONS.

The Profits Will be Turned Over to an Auxiliary Committee, Headed by Miss Morton, to be Used to Aid the Sick and Wounded Who Suffer for Their Country's Cause—Under the Direction of Mrs. Berman—Music Hall Will be Patriotically Decorated for the Occasion—Names of the Patrons

Four American sailor boys rendered up their lives in defence of their country's flag last May 11th. They were the first victims on the American side since the conflict between the United States and Spain began. Others were wounded and have been brought back to the United States. It is to care for these and other victims of Spanish shot and shell that the monster benefit entertainment at Stillman Music Hall next Thursday evening will be given.

The Red Cross Society is recognized by all the civilized nations of the globe. In this country it is recognized as the official care-takers of the sick and wounded of army and navy. The big benefit this evening will turn its receipts over to the Red Cross fund, which goes for the prosecution of the work of that charitable organization.

The leading citizens of Plainfield are the promoters of the benefit. Headed by Mayor Charles J. Fisk, a committee of prominent men have taken the benefit in hand and are exerting their united efforts toward making the benefit the great success that it deserves to be.

The committee has sent out the following letter to many of our Plainfield homes:

Mayor's Office,
Plainfield, N. J.
May 9, 1898.

Dear Sir:—It is proposed by a number of ladies in this city to arrange with Weber & Fields, of New York, for an entertainment to be given May 19th at Music Hall for the benefit of the Red Cross fund for the care of the sick and wounded in our army and navy.

This charity has our endorsement and support, and we trust you will do what you can to help the matter along and make the entertainment a great success.

The letters have met with an almost unanimous response. Aside from a lengthy list of patrons who have promised to use their influence and assistance, many others have promised to purchase tickets for the monster benefit.

The list of patrons are as follows: Chas. A. Fisk, E. E. Lowe, Howard Fleming, Dr. Endicott, J. Kirtland Myers, Edward White, T. S. Armstrong, G. W. Bookfellow, Craig A. Marsh, Dr. Davis, Marion Ackerman, W. D. Wadsworth, Dr. Ard, Ernest Ackerman, James Scott, W. W. Smith, Charles Potter, E. H. VanBuren, S. F. Kimball, J. W. Gavett, L. W. Serrell, Jr., C. E. Brooks, F. H. Andrews, George Chapman, J. B Dumont, Dr. J. B. Probasco, John Barker, Harry C. Runkle, J. M. Wolf a, George Wharton Edwards, E. H. Booth, J. B. Kirkner, Wm. Graydon, E. T. Barrows, T. J. Mimford, S. St, J. McCutchen, Alexander Gilbert, W. A. Pinto, W. D. Murray, A. C Vail, W. L. Saunders, Charles A. Reed, H. M. Stockton, Dr. George Endicott and Rowland Cox.

The benefit will undoubtedly be a great social event. There is every prospect of a very large sale of tickets among the highest social circles It is not, however, for any one particular set, all are invited and all are welcome. It is a right worthy cause in which everyone can lend a hand.

Don't get the idea, however, that those who do attend will not get the worth of their money. Weber and Fields have a reputation to keep up that which assures a delightful entertainment. It will be a vaudeville performance by one of their best companies, composed of artists who stand very high in their profession. The programme will consist of selections by the following well known people of the vaudeville stage; Harris and Field, Dutch comedians; Mary Norman, soci ty entertainer; Adel Purvis Ourt, dancing with stereopticon effects: Hiatt and Bowers, musical comedy act; Stinson and Morton, comedy sketch; Gertie Gilson, vocalist; Sylvia Teller, imitations of Vesta Tilley.

The affair is being arranged and managed by Mrs. P. P. Berman, who is well-known in New York as an expert in that line of work She has had charge of the famous Damrosch concerts and other entertainments of equally high standing.

The proceeds of the benefit will be placed in the hands of Miss Morton, daughter of Former Governor Levi P. Morton, of New York, who is a member of the auxiliary committee of the Red Cross Society in New York.

Elaborate preparations are being made for the decoration of Music Hall the night of the benefit. Flags and tri-colored bunting will be used in profusion until the building is completely transformed. Every effort is being made to make the setting for the affair as complete as possible. It is a worthy charity and well deserves the support of every patriotic citizen of Plainfield.

PROGRESS OF EVOLUTION

INSTRUCTIVE LECTURE DELIVERED BY REV. A. C. NICKERSON.

It Adds Great Resources to the Power of the Mind, and is a Doctrine of Unity and a Great Inspiration

The following is a portion of the lecture on "Progress of Evolution," delivered by Rev. A. C. Nickerson in All Souls church Friday night:

"The growth of the idea since 1859 has been phenomenal. Spencer was then an evolutionist, and, following him, Darwin, Tyndall, Lewes, Buxley, Hooker, Tylor and Lubbock, accepted it. Soon after no biologists were to be found who were not evolutionists. Wholesale creations and destructions became generally discredited. But there was much opposition. The universities generally refused their endorsement. Agazi opposed it. Dawson hesitated. Evolution has conquered, however, as opposition of the most powerful interested and prejudiced kind.

"Progress in thought. Many have feared its supposed materialistic tendencies. It is not materialistic. It adds nothing to matter, but does add resources innumerable to the power of mind., Matter has no independent existence, and evolution practically wipes it out of existence. Everything in nature, including man, grows by help of a divine and inescapable guild. Since Spencer's letter to Youmans, evolution is a way of life, a manner of thought.

"Evolution in preaching. It's doctrine of unity or togetherness, a great inspiration to the preacher. All sciences are one. The mind and the universe it studies are one. God and man are one, as Jesus taught us. History, literature, religion are all seen in a new light through evolution."

TO INCORPORATE A NEWSPAPER.

A Democratic Organ of Which Rev. J. H. Wells is to be the Editor.

Attorney John P. D. Kirch, of Park and North avenues. was called upon a few days ago by Rev. John A. Wells, of Bernardsville, and a few other prominent men of Somerset county, and asked to take steps towards organizing a weekly Democratic paper for that county, to be circulated throughout the Third Congressional district. The paper is to be known as the Bernardsville News, and the proprietors hope to make it the official organ of Somerset county Mr. Kirch has drawn up articles of incorporation, and is now procuring shareholders.

MAN OF MANY ALIASES.

Desperate Horse Thief Formerly Worked For Mayer Fisk.

Constable William H. Panborn Friday spent sometime in looking up the record of the desperate character with whom he had the encounter on Thursday, and finds that he formerly worked in this city. The prisoner has gone under many aliases. He worked for Thomas Fenton, of Rockview avenue, and Mayor Fisk, as coachman, under the name of Patrick Wade. He registered at the Bound Brook hotel as Clark, told the Central freight employes that his name was Myer and when arrested said that his name was Cadan.

—At the meeting of Perseverance Lodge, Knights of Pythias Friday evening, the second rank was worked.

Bad Blood Is a Good Thing

to be rid of, because bad blood is the breeding place of disfiguring and dangerous diseases. Is your blood bad? It is if you are plagued by pimples or bothered by boils, if your skin is blotched by eruptions or your body eaten by sores and ulcers. You can have good blood, which is pure blood, if you want it. You can be rid of pimples, boils, blotches, sores and ulcers. How? By the use of

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

It is the radical remedy for all diseases originating in the blood. Read the evidence:

"Ayer's Sarsaparilla was recommended to me by a physician as a blood purifier. When I began taking it I had boils all over my body. One bottle cured me."—BONNER CRAFT, Weston, Miss.

"After six years' suffering from blood poison, I began taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and although I have used only three bottles of this great medicine, the sores have nearly all disappeared."—A. A. MANNING, Houston, Texas.

HORSE THIEF CAUGHT AT POINT OF PISTOL

A Desperate Criminal Captured by Constable Pangborn.

HIS WAS A CLEVER GAME.

POSED AS A FOREMAN OF WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH COMPANY.

Went to Bound Brook and Hired a Horse and Dray Belonging to John King, Ostensibly to Make Repairs on a Telegraph Line, But in Reality as a Ruse to Steal the Horse—Arrested by Constable Pangborn After a Desperate Encounter on Somerset Street—Crook Now in Jail With Serious Charges

It was only at the point of a revolver that Constable William N. Pangborn Thursday succeeded in capturing one of the most desperate and clever horse thieves ever arrested in this section of the country.

Wednesday afternoon three men entered a Bound Brook hotel and registered as "J. Clark," "M. Hunt" and "P. Edgar," all of New York. Clark announced himself as a foreman of a construction gang of the Western Union Telegraph Company, and stated that he had come to Bound Brook to get material that had been sent by freight which was intended for repairs on the line running back over the mountains towards the Pataula valley.

Soon after arriving "Clark" called up John King, a contractor, on the telephone, and engaged a horse and truck of him for three days, for the ostensible purpose of transporting assistants and material with which to make the repairs. He also engaged three or four men in Bound Brook to help him with the work.

Considerable material had arrived at the Central freight depot that morning for the Western Union Company, and "Clark" told the railroad employes that he would be around early yesterday morning with a team for the freight. From the clever manner in which the crook worked it showed that he had a thorough acquaintance with the plans of the telegraph company.

As arranged, he appeared at the freight depot and loaded the dray, which he had hired from King, with cross-pieces for telegraph poles. Then he started out over the route of the telegraph line, distributing the cross-pieces every few hundred feet, and boasing his assistants in a thorough manner. By noon they arrived at Pettifloo's Hotel, three miles from this city, where "Clark" ordered dinner for his men. He told Pettifloo that he had got to go to Summit yesterdoon to arrange plans at that end of the line, and asked him if he would not loan his light buggy for the trip. Pettifloo agreed to do so, rendering valuable to the telegraph company. The assistants were told to go back to Bound Brook and remain there till "Clark" returned. About 1 o'clock "Clark" left Pettifloo's with the horse and buggy.

During the morning, however, the regular foreman of the Western Union Company arrived in Bound Brook and was much surprised to hear of "Clark's" proceedings. It was soon realized that the latter was a crook, and word was telephoned to Constable Pangborn to be on the lookout for the man and arrest him on sight.

Constable Pangborn was walking along Somerset street, near Grandview avenue, when he saw coming towards him a man driving a horse answering the description of the one rented by King. He ran out in the road and commanded "Clark" to stop. The latter paid little heed to the constable and then Pangborn grabbed the horse by the head.

"Clark" plied the whip on the horse in a vigorous manner, and though the animal plunged forward, Pangborn pluckily hung to the bridle and prevented the thief from escaping. Then "Clark" turned his efforts to the constable and lashed him in a terrible manner.

Pangborn saw that he had a desperate man to deal with, and he pulled a revolver from his pocket and jumping into the buggy thrust the revolver in the cowering face of "Clark." "Clark" made a motion for his hip pocket, as if to draw a revolver, but the constable quickly told him to throw up his hands or he would shoot his head off.

"Clark" realized that the game was up and surrendered. He was taken before Justice Mattison and arraigned on the charge of larceny for having taken the material of the Western Union Company from Bound Brook. He was committed to the Somerset county jail to await the action of the grand jury. Thursday night another charge was served on the prisoner in the jail, charging him with stealing a horse from King. The prisoner gave his name as James Callahan, of Jersey City, when taken before the Justice.

AGAIN DIRECTOR OF THE COUNTY SOLONS.

J. F. Hubbard at the Head of New Board of Freeholders.

CHOICE WAS UNANIMOUS.

W. R. CODINGTON ALSO RE-ELECTED COUNTY ATTORNEY.

Both of the Honored Plainfielders Expressed Appreciation for Their Selection—New Freeholders Sworn in—S. Ruling Ryno Elected Clerk—Mr. Codington Told How Union County was Patterned After by Other Bailiwicks—Appropriation Committee was Named and the Official Papers Chosen

J. F. Hubbard, of Plainfield, who has been a member of the Union County Board of Freeholders for 30 years, and has been Director of the body for several years, was May 11th again chosen to preside over the new Board that organized with eleven Republicans and six Democrats. The fact that Mr. Hubbard was unanimously elected shows his popularity as a presiding officer.

William R. Codington, of Plainfield, who has been county attorney for several years, was also re-elected to that position.

The new members are Joseph McCandless, Elizabeth; F. T. Higgins, Linden, and Moses W. Scudder, Westfield, all Democrats.

Freeholder Farrell nominated Mr. Hubbard for director, and Freeholder Brucklacher, of Elizabeth, represenring the Democratic minority, seconded the nomination.

The clerk was instructed to cast the ballot, and Mr. Hubbard was declared re elected director by a unanimous vote. He briefly returned his thanks, and stated the pleasure it gave him to know that he had all the members with him at the beginning of the work of the year.

S. Ruling Ryno was elected clerk for the third term unanimously.

The salaries of the clerk and county attorney were each fixed at $300 per annum.

Director Hubbard administered the oath to Clerk Ryno, and the board proceeded with its routine business. Freeholders Boll and Burnet were appointed a committee of two to escort the county attorney elect into the board room.

Mr. Codington was found in the court room, and when ushered into the presence of the board he gave expressions of his thanks for the honor conferred upon him. He said he felt it a high honor, and it had been an extreme pleasure to associate with the members of the board. He spoke of the high standing of the county, and how it has been patterned after by other counties in many important actions in which Union county has taken the initiative steps, notably the county road improvements.

The rules of order governing last year's board were readopted on the resolution of Freeholder Miller, and the board meetings were fixed for the first Thursday in each month.

The minutes of the board were ordered published in the following papers:

Plainfield—Courier-News and Daily Press.

Rahway—Advocate and Union Democrat.

Summit—Herald and Record.

Westfield—Leader and Union County Standard.

Elizabeth—Daily Journal, Daily Leader, Freie Press and New Jersey Contractor.

Cranford—Chronicle.

Director Hubbard appointed as the committee on appropriations, Freeholders Farrell, Huiskamper, Boll, Brucklacher and Burnet.

County Surveyors Bauer and Hubbard were present at the board meeting, and were introduced to the new members.

After the meeting a banquet was partaken of at Louis Miller's restaurant.

This is the eleventh time that Mr. Hubbard has been chosen Director of the Board of Freeholders.

Plainfield Boys at Sea Girt.

The Plainfield boys in Company H, State militia, of Somerville, who are now in camp at Sea Girt, include William Havelock, Florence S. McCarthy, Benjamin F. Scribner, O. J. Spriggs and Frank Carver. Other Plainfield boys in camp who are in the Company H, include Mark Doud, Ed. Day and Herbert Overbaugh. It will be noticed that Plainfield is fairly represented already, and no doubt there will be more to go if it becomes necessary.

A Delightful Luncheon.

A luncheon was given Thursday afternoon by Miss Ella C. Benedict, of East Fifth street, in honor of her aunt, Mrs. Read Benedict, of Staten Island. Covers were laid for twelve, and there were guests present from Staten Island, Jersey City, Newark and Plainfield.

William Cockley, of the West End, is visiting Philadelphia friends.

STATE CLUB WOMEN GATHER HERE TODAY.

Annual Session of the Federation of Women's Clubs.

200 DELEGATES PRESENT.

WELCOMED TO PLAINFIELD BY MRS. FLORENCE HOWE HALL.

Convention Opened in a Patriotic Manner by Mrs. Fanny Crosby, the Blind Hymn Writer, Singing the Star Spangled Banner—Miss Cecelia Gaines, President of the Federation, Responded in a Felicitous Manner — Encouraging Reports Made by Committee Chairmen—Several Interesting Addresses Made.

Representative women from all over the State met in this city this May 12 at the semi-annual meeting of the State Federation of Women's Clubs, which was held in the Park Avenue Baptist church and in the Union County Country Club Casino. Delegates were present from about seventy clubs, and before the morning session was ended, nearly 200 had been registered. The morning session was taken up with addresses and reports from heads of departments, and after lunch, which was served at the Casino, the programme was continued there.

Women's Clubs from Arlington, Bayonne, Bound Brook, Camden, Cranford, Roselle, Jersey City, Newark, Verona, Montclair, Metuchen and other places were represented and besides the president, Miss Cecilia Gaines, of Jersey City, Mrs. Florence Howe Hall, of this city, Mrs. Fanny Crosby, Dr. M. E. Greer and Miss Florence A. Mulford, of Newark, were present.

This meeting was in charge of five clubs of this city—Monday Afternoon Club, Parliamentary Club, Rasores, Current Events Club and Town Improvement Association. Mrs. S. R. Kroh was in charge of the meeting at the church and was assisted by a decorating committe and corps of ushers. Mrs. Charles McCutcheon was chairman of the decorating committe, with Mrs. H. M. Maxson, Mrs. George Babcock and Mrs. George Dupee as her assistants. The decorations were a large American flag draped over the pulpit, with a quantity of flowers and potted plants below. Miss C. R. Yates was in charge of the ushers, who were Miss Van Boskerck, Miss Hunter, Miss Cahoone, Mrs. Lemuel W. Serrell, Jr., Mrs. Frank Clawson, Miss Murphy, Miss VanDeventer and Miss Dumont.

The session was opened with prayer by Mrs. Fanny Crosby, the blind poetess and hymn writer. This was followed by singing "The Star Spangled Banner" by the ladies, who sung the anthem with vim and spirit. The delegates were welcomed by Mrs. Florence Howe Hall, of this city, in a few trite remarks, and the response was made by Miss Cecilia Gaines, of Jersey City, president of the Federation. Miss Gaines suggested that there is a large field for work for women in this State, especially in the Legislature, where women can wield a great influence in law-making. The speaker said that the ladies needn't think that the men are rapidly going to the dogs now that they are enlisting so rapidly in a war that means plenty of hardship and little glory.

Miss Ada D. Fuller, of Jersey City, corresponding secretary, stated that at the present time there are seventy-three active clubs in the State Federation, which means a membership of 4,000.

In the absence of Mrs. R. B. Horton, of Cranford, Mrs. Margaret J. Yardley, of East Orange, read the report of the committee on the department of libraries. The Traveling Library Bill has passed the legislature, and become a law. Unfortunately no appropriation can be made this year, but a vote of thanks was given Governor Voorhees, and those gentlemen who were instrumental in pushing the bill through the legislature. A beautiful bouquet of lilies of the valley, the State flowers, was sent to Mrs Horton by the executive board of the federation.

Miss Vermilye, of Englewood, reported the work of the Committee up on Palisades. At the present time, very little can be done to save the Palisades, but Miss Vermilye advised the ladies to adhere to the purpose and insist upon the Palisades being saved and national reservations made of them, as has been done with Niagara Falls.

Mrs. John Gifford, of Princeton sent her report upon the forestry department. It was read by the president. Mrs. C. W. Butler, of Montclair, reported upon Town Improvement Associations. The pioneer Town Improvement Association was founded in Stockbridge, Mass., and the influence of the association has spread out until almost all the eastern states are blessed with a similiar organization. Miss Mary McKeen, of Camden, reported upon the Kindergarten department; Mrs. C. W. B Cushing of East Orange upon the educational department, and Mrs. Richard Grade, upon the reciprocity bureau.

Mr. McCann, general traveling passenger agent of the Missouri Pacific Railroad, was asked to speak briefly upon the cost of transportation to the General Federation meeting in Denver next month. Mr. McCann said that the cost of the round trip would be $54 20, with additional charges for berths and meals. The New Jersey Federation is entitled to five delegates

The business being finished, the regular order of the morning was resumed. Mrs. Mary E. Green, M. D., president of the National Household Economics Association, spoke upon the study of "Household Economics." Dr. Green was followed by Mrs. William S. Shailer, president of the New York Household Economic Association. Both ladies dwelt upon the importance of household economy, and its influence upon the people in general.

Mrs. Henry M. Maxson, of this city, chairman of the New Jersey Audobon Society, wrote "A plea for birds," which was read by Mrs. Marian Leland. "Farm Industries" was treated of by Mrs. Candace Wheeler.

The delegates were then invited to luncheon at the Country Club, the invitation being extended by Mrs Edward C. Perkins, president of the Monday Afternoon Club.

The delegates chosen to go to the National Federation of Women's Clubs, to be held at Denver this summer, were: Mrs. Cecelia Garner, of Jersey City, Mrs. Florence Howe Hall, of Plainfield, Mrs. W. J. Yardley, of East Orange and Mrs. Craven, of Newark.

A PATRIOTIC SOCIABLE.

AN UP-TO-DATE AFFAIR GIVEN BY THE CONGREGATIONALISTS.

Church Decorated With Flags and Tri-Colored Bunting—Rev. Mr. Goodrich was Master of Ceremonies Last Evening.

There was a patriotic air about the decorations and the whole programme at the sociable held in the Congregational church last Friday. A "Patriotic Sociable" was the title applied it by the Women's Association, under whose auspices it was given.

The church and parlors were prettily decorated with a profusion of flags and tri-colored bunting. Then, too, many of the guests wore ribbons of the National colors or small flags.

Rev. C. L. Goodrich acted as master of ceremonies. The opening number on the programme was a piano duet by Miss Hollis Winkler and Miss Eva Wilkins. Then "The Star-Spangled Banner" was sung by the audience, led by a choir composed of Miss M. G. Morse, Miss Katheryn Dwight, Miss Emma LaBoyteaux, Morris C. VanArsdale and Stacy Raynolds.

A thrilling little recitation was given by Miss Lizzie Hoagland. After a vocal solo by Miss Filmer, the choir led in the singing of "The Red, White and Blue." "Scott and the Veteran" was the title of an appropriate reading by Rev. C. L. Goodrich. As an encore, he read a poem about the patriot Hale.

A vocal trio was next given by the Misses Emma LaBoyteaux, Agnes LaBoyteaux and Katheryn Dwight. Miss Hoagland gave another recitation of a humorous character, and then the programme closed with the singing of "America."

Everybody then adjourned to the parlors where ice cream and cake were served. In the centre of each dish of ice cream a small American flag was placed. They were kept as souvenirs of the pleasant occasion.

The programme was arranged by Miss Nellie Winkler. She was assisted in the decorating by Mrs. A. C. LaBoyteaux and Miss Winkler. The refreshments were prepared under the supervision of Mrs. F. D. Fuller.

COLLIDED WITH THE TROLLEY.

A Black Horse Driven by Adam Fritz Was Injured for Life.

For the second time this year Adam Fritz, of Somerset street, has come out second best in an encounter with a trolley car. Thursday afternoon he was driving a handsome team of black horses down Somerset street. The horses were soon to be shipped to an undertaker in Jersey City who had purchased them. A car approached from the opposite direction.

The east wind carried away the sound of the car from the horses and they did not hear it until they were close upon it. They shied toward the gutter, partially turning the wagon. The sound of the wheels scraping against the curb caused them to sheer back toward the car. The hub of the wheel caught in the car and soon Mr. Fritz, horses and wagon were piled in a confused heap.

One of the horses was so injured that he will probably be no use in the future. The other one was not seriously injured. Mr. Fritz also escaped injury.

Early in the year, Mr. Frits was smashed up by a horse that became frightened at the car. He did nothing about the first case. The company will probably settle for the damage done Thursday as the team was a valuable one.

WHERE WOMEN HAVE SWAY IN POLITICS.

State Club Women Hear Interesting Reports from Colorado.

WOMAN'S WORD GOES.

CLOSING SESSION OF THE STATE FEDERATION OF WOMEN'S CLUBS.

Miss Carrie Louise Boylan Told of a Halcyon Condition of Affairs That Existed in Colorado for Women Who Participated in Public Affairs—A Woman Legislator Whose Word Went—An Original Poem Recited by the Blind Hymn Writer—Many Other Interesting Features Were Enjoyed.

The meeting of the State Federation of Women's Clubs was continued Thursday afternoon in the Casino of the Union County Country Club. The afternoon session was an informal one, and was called to order soon after 2 o'clock by Miss Cecelia Gaines, of Jersey City, president of the Federation.

An elaborate luncheon was served to the visitors at 1 o'clock in the Casino to which over 300 delegates stayed. The Casino presented a pretty appearance, and the platform and side walls were set off with spring blossoms and potted plants.

A choir from the Monday Afternoon Club, consisting of Mrs. George Chapman, Mrs. Frank Clawson, Mrs. J. K. Myers, Mrs. Robert Lowry, Mrs. Irving Howard Browning and Mrs. William L. Saunders, rendered two short selections, "Spring and Love," by Gall, and the "Owl and the Pussy Cat," by Ingraham Next came the greetings from the five clubs of whom the State Federation were guests. The greeting from the Monday Afternoon Club was given by Mrs. Isaac L. Miller; for the Woman's Parliamentary Club, Miss C. Yates; Club of Current Events, Mrs. M. E. Dwight; Town Improvement Association, Mrs. Pierre Mali; Rasores Club, Mrs. Horace Kimball.

Mrs. Fanny Crosby, the blind poetess and hymn writer, recited an original poem, and Miss Imogene Clark followed with selections from "Will Shakespeare's Little Lad." Miss Crosby, who is totally blind, was led to the front of the platform by Miss Gaines, and recited her lines with feeling and expression. She was warmly applauded, but would not consent to recite again. Miss Clark is a native of this city, and had many admirers in the audience.

There were three patriotic guests present, Mrs. Louis Baroli, who is known as "The most famous woman in Cuba;" Mrs. J. D. Bedle, president of the Colonial Dames of this State; and Mrs. Washington Roebling, chairman of the New Jersey Washington Memorial Association. Each of these ladies had something interesting to say, which was listened to with attention. Miss Carrie Louise Boylan, State chairman of correspondence, spoke of the General Federation meeting in Denver, which occurs next month.

Miss Boylan had a great deal to say about the state of affairs in Colorado, and especially of the active part women and women's clubs play in the political matters in that state. The speaker said that nothing is done in Denver until the advice of the club to which Miss Boylan belongs, has been asked, and that the men show such a reference to them that almost everything the club asks for in the line of improvements is granted at once.

Such a halcyon condition of things does not exist in this State, so the President said, upon Miss Boylan's conclusion, and mentioned an incident in a conversation she once had with a Colorado lady, in which she expressed a desire that such and such a thing be done.

"Of course it will," this Colorado lady said, "for I am a member of the Legislature myself, and whatever I say, goes."

Denver is the destination of the Federation members in a few weeks, and the President and officers hoped all who could would go, whether delegates or not. The meeting closed with singing "The Red, White and Blue," and thus enclosed one of the most brilliant as well as patriotic assemblages of club women that has ever been gathered together in this State.

Fell on the Trolley.

Just after one of the street cars had started Friday from the North Avenue station, a woman attempted to cross the street in front and stumbled and fell across the fender. The car was immediately brought to a full stop and the woman helped to her feet. She refused to give her name, and said she was not hurt. The escape was a narrow one, for if the car had been running at full speed the woman must have been ground beneath the wheels.

OLD FIREMAN SICK.

George Butsche Seriously Ill at His Home on Lyman Place.

George Butsche, of Lyman place, one of Plainfield's oldest residents, is seriously ill at his home. Mr. Butsche is well advanced in years and he has seen his best days. His friends do not have much hope that he will recover. For years he was associated with the fire department and was at one time driver for No. 3 engine when the engine was stationed on West Front street where Stillman's new building is now located. He was considered to be one of the most careful and efficient drivers the department ever had. After his retirement from the department he engaged with Mr. Odam, the slater, and when able he assisted him in his work. He is a member of Plainfield Lodge, No. 44, I. O. F., and the members are now looking after their faithful member. Dr. D. C. Adams is in attendance.

PROGRESSIVE WHIST.

Pleasant Evening at Cards Arranged by Mr. and Mrs. B. R. Rogers.

Mr. and Mrs. B. R. Rogers, of Westervelt avenue, gave a progressive whist party last Tuesday at their home to a few friends. The hospitality of the host and hostess was proverbial and everyone had an enjoyable time. The first and second prizes for the women were won by Mrs. William Startup and Miss Mabelle Force, while L. M. Dunavan and William Angleman were presented with the first and second prizes for the men. After the game a tempting repast was served and sociability reigned supreme. Those present were: Mr. and Mrs. Will F. Williams, Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Marshall, Mr. and Mrs. William Startup, Miss Mabelle Force, Miss Smith, Mrs. T. H. Kellar, of Plainfield; Miss Mosher, of Somerville; L. M. Dunavan, Hiram Humes, William Angleman and Hazelwood Kellar.

HOOKED BY A COW.

A Peculiar Accident Reported From the Hospital.

Fred Hofer, aged about 53 years, residence unknown, was admitted to Muhlenberg Hospital last Saturday for treatment for an injured eye. It appears that a cow hooked Mr. Hofer in the eye, and the chances are that he will lose the sight. After he was admitted to the hospital he refused to have Dr. Ard operate on the eye. In consequence the man was allowed to go yesterday. It is thought that the accident occurred at New Market recently. The man is hardly able to see out of the eye at the present time. He has no regular occupation but goes about doing odd jobs.

Funeral of Henry Bender.

The funeral services of the late Henry Bender were held Tuesday afternoon at 2 o'clock from the German Reformed church, in the borough. Rev. George Hauser, pastor, officiated. There was a large attendance of the members of the Gesang and Turn Verein, who were present in a body. During the service the singing section of the German society sang several times. There was a very beautiful display of floral offerings. Those who served as pall-bearers were Michael Weber, William Gartner, John Bremer, Harry Bummell and Max Wiertz. Interment was in Evergreen Cemetery.

TALKED OF TEMPERANCE.

Interesting Christian Endeavor Service at Warren Chapel Tuesday Night.

A very interesting Christian Endeavor service was held at Warren chapel last Tuesday. The subject of the meeting was "Temperance." Mrs. Bach, a member of the temperance committee, had charge of the service and announced the various numbers on the programme after the opening exercises. There was a recitation, "Mamma, When will Papa Come," by Anna Bach; singing by the choir, "Down with the Evil and Up with the Right;" a soprano solo, "It Breaks my Heart Because I am a Drunkard's Child," by Miss Lillie Zeisz.

The address of the evening was made by Miss Carra Peck, a noted temperance speaker. She interested her audience very much in the cause of temperance and her remarks were listened to attentively.

After a meeting refreshments were served by the committee, which is composed of Mrs. W. A. Wilson, Mrs. Bach, Miss Kohler and Miss Mamie Wilson. All present voted the meeting one of the best held in a long time.

GENEROUS MAYOR WILSON.

Paid for Improvements for Two Church Properties Out of His Own Pocket.

During the last week the members and officers of Holy Cross church, at the corner of Washington and Mercer avenues, and Grace M. E. church on Park place, were much surprised at the sight of a gang of stone layers at work laying a fine flag walk over certain portions of the street fronting each of the edifices. As officers of neither church had ordered the sidewalks laid there were was a good deal of speculation as to who was responsible for the improvement.

After diligent enquiry it was learned that the walks were being put down through the generosity of His Honor J. H. Wilson, who had intended that the information should remain sealed in his own mind and that of the contractors. But in someway the news leaked out and now the congregations of both churches are very grateful to the Mayor for his liberal action.

Resolutions of Condolence.

At a meeting of the Plainfield Gesang and Turn Verein, held May 17th, 1898, the following resolutions of condolence were unanimously adopted on the death of Henry J. Bender:

Whereas, It has pleased our Heavenly Father in His infinite providence to remove by death one of our beloved members, brother and friend, Henry J. Bender, one who always took a deep interest in the welfare and prosperity of our association; one who was always ready with valuable aid, and who did all this most willingly and cheerfully; therefore, we desire here to place on record a full expression of our great loss, and for our lasting regard for him and his memory; and be it

Resolved, That we hereby tender to his bereaved widow and stricken family the assurance of our warmest regard and tender sympathy in their bereavement, under a blow so sudden that our faith in the divine love can say, "Thy will be done."

Resolved, That this preamble and resolutions be placed in full upon the minutes of our association, and that a copy be forwarded to the family and to the daily papers for publication.

NO ASPHALT FOR SOME TIME TO COME

Council Discusses Matter of a Permanent Pavement.

PIPES MUST BE LAID FIRST.

THAT MEANS THAT IMPROVEMENT WILL BE DELAYED.

This is Thought Necessary by the Street Committee So That it Will Not Be Needed to Tear Up the Thoroughfares to Lay Pipes That Will Soon Be Put Down—Councilman Runyon's Plan of Establishing a Fire House in the West End Goes Through—City Officials Invited to Memorial Day Exercises.

The business considered at the adjourned meeting of the City Council held last Monday was of more or less importance and all the members were present except Mr. Hetfield, who was unavoidably detained.

Mrs. Vail and other residents of Johns street asked the Council to place two electric lights on that street.

The Memorial Detail of Winfield Scott Post, No. 73, G. A. R., extended a cordial invitation to the Mayor and Council to occupy a reserved box at Music Hall on Decoration Day. The invitation was accepted. G. W. Potter and others asked the Council to repair Fourth street from Park avenue to New street and establish the proper grade. A bill of $2,502.50 was received from Frank Hubbard for work done in connection with the work of the Martin Act Commissioners, such as making maps and surveys. This amount will eventually come out of the general amount realized from the collection of back taxes.

A communication was received from Mayor Fisk in which he stated that Florence McCarthy, one of the most efficient members of the police force, had resigned to enlist in the regular army. He said that the officer enlisted with his knowledge and approval and he recommended that the officer receive $60 pay for the month of May, and that his place be kept vacant for him until he returns. This action was concurred in by the Council and Mr. Barrows offered a resolution that the officer be given the balance of the year off without pay. The same was adopted.

Corporation Counsel Marsh made a statement concerning certain cases wherein the city is interested. He said that the case of Mrs. Sarah Millikan against the city for damages claimed owing to the proximity of the sewer beds to her property, would come up at the October term of court, as would also the case of Lucy Swan against P. S. Gibson. Regarding the report of the Martin Act Commissioners he said that he would be obliged to argue for the confirmation of the report.

Mr. Barrows made a statement regarding the matter of placing the electric light wires underground. He said that the Corporation Counsel had been working during the past few weeks with city matters and had been unable to draw up a suitable ordinance covering the case in question. He hoped to have the matter ready for the next regular meeting of the Council.

Mr. Barrows also reported on the matter of asphalting the streets in the business part of the town. He said that the telephone and electric light wires were yet to go underground and the curb connections to be made. In his opinion and that of the street committee the matter of laying a permanent pavement cannot be considered until this work is accomplished. He said that the Council fully realizes the benefits to be derived from such a move and are anxious to give the taxpayers and property-owners what they deserve. The matter was talked of during the first part of the year and it is the intention of the Council to make as much progress along that line as possible. On a motion offered by Mr. Barrows one crosswalk was ordered laid at the corner of Fourth and Liberty streets, and another at the corner of Plainfield avenue and Eighth street.

Other resolutions offered by Mr. Barrows were to the effect that the sewer bonds reported be filed, and that Monday evening, June 6th, be set as the time when the Council will meet to receive bids for constructing sewers for surface drainage. The plans and specifications are now on file in the City Clerk's office.

Mr. Runyon offered a resolution that an amount not to exceed $5,000 be appropriated for the purchase of a lot and the erection of a firehouse in the western part of the city, and that the fire and building committee be given power select a site and secure plans and specifications for a building, and report at a future meeting. The resolution was adopted, after which Mr. Runyon stated that he would offer at the next meeting certain changes to be made in the fire ordinance.

A resolution was offered by Mr. Moffett to the effect that inasmuch as the city has purchased a liberty pole, and that Edward White has presented the city with a flag, that Decoration Day be the time chosen for the raising of the flag and that Winfield Scott Post, No. 73, G. A. R., have full charge of the affair. The time set for the celebration is 9 o'clock in the morning of May 30th. The resolution was adopted unanimously.

In a resolution offered at the last meeting by Mr. Hetfield regarding the collection of back taxes under the Martin Act, it was made to read prior to 1880. It should have read prior to 1881. The resolution was so amended.

The appointment of John Wizenreid as a special policeman by Mayor Fisk was confirmed by the Council, and this concluded the business of the evening.

PASSING COMMENT.

Things that Are Not Exactly News, but Just as Interesting.

Uncle Sam has in his employ at Asheville, N. C., as mail carriers two brothers, both of whom are blind. They travel to surrounding mountain towns over rough roads without any guides, trusting entirely in the intelligence of their horses, and in the four years of their service neither has met with an accident.

Roundsman Christian Frederickson, one of the best officers in the police department, served eighteen months in the German Navy before coming to this country. He enlisted at the age of 22 years, and for eleven months was aboard a man-of-war in the West Indies. He says that many times the sailors have placed raw eggs on the deck, and the intense heat would cook them in a short while. Mr. Frederick son says that he enjoyed the life on ship board and that the men were well clothed and had the very best of everything to eat As soon as he served the eighteen months and was discharged he came to this country, where he has lived ever since.

The New York Dramatic Mirror, on which Gen. Taggart, formerly of this city, is one of the principal writers, recently published the following:

The big stores of Greater New York and Chicago have been left behind in the race for supremacy in the novel advertising line by a dry goods dealer in the town of Plainfield, N J. This twentieth century merchant had a grand opening a few nights ago, and he engaged a grand army of talent, consisting of "Happy Thompson and his Marine band, a brass band to entertain his customers. The Plainfield Press in its criticism of the performance, contained the following: "The feature of the evening's entertainment was the appearance of the two famous leaders of minstrelsy, George Thatcher and his old friend, Edward Marble. They had a new string of jokes and songs for the occasion, and they kept their hearers in a perfect roar of delight. They rattled off funny stories for nearly an hour, and their good evening amid a grand burst of applause.

Postponed on Account of the Storm.

On account of the very stormy weather Sunday morning, Rev. Cornelius Schenck, Ph. D., pastor of Trinity Reformed church, did not preach the sermon on "The Blessings of the Present War." It will be delivered at some future date. Notwithstanding the weather there was over 50 persons present at the service, and the pastor gave a discourse on the help and strength that comes from attendance at the sanctuary.

Episcopal Confirmation.

Right Rev. John Scarborough will perform the rite of confirmation in the Church of the Heavenly Rest Sunday evening next at 7:45 o'clock. Six candidates will be presented by Rev. William R. Harris, of Bound Brook. The choral service will be rendered in the afternoon at 4 o'clock, weather permitting.

Must Lay Sidewalks.

Chief Marshal Wilson, of the borough, is busily engaged these days looking up his property-owners who have failed to lay their sidewalks. He has a long list of owners, and he is personally calling on each one. In the meantime the work of laying walks goes steadily onward.

Want the Sermon Repeated.

Rev. J. W. Richardson, of the Park Avenue Baptist church, preached a sermon upon the war Sunday morning. It was such an excellent sermon and there were so few to hear it, that his congregation have asked Mr. Richardson to repeat the sermon next Sunday night.

Children Throw Stones.

Mrs. Annie Erbeck, of Arlington avenue, made a complaint to City Judge DeMeza Monday against one of Mrs. Annie Richter's children, who live next door to her, who, she says, threw a stone through one of her parlor windows and broke it.

How the Weather Runs.

James C. Pope, of East Front street, has for sometime past kept a record of the clear and stormy days, and Monday he startled his friends by telling them that during the past forty-five days there have been twenty-one clear ones.

A Small Theft Reported.

David Sharp, of Somerset street, claims to have had $3 stolen from his house and he does not know who took it. The matter has been reported to Chief Wilson and an investigation will follow.

SPORTS

AROUND THE BASES.

The Y. M. C. A. baseball team will play the second High School team Saturday afternoon on the LaGrande avenue grounds.

The Young Champions would like to arrange games with teams averaging thirteen or fourteen years of age. Further arrangements for games can be made with B. Edwards, 419 LaGrande avenue.

Manager Mumford is trying to schedule another game with the Seventh Regiment boys. They are anxious to come and if the team is not broken up before that time they will probably appear on the Oval July 4th.

McLarty will occupy the box for the Crescents Saturday afternoon. Mac is much improved over his last year's form and that means that he is playing a great game. Mac has a faculty of batting well that few pitchers show.

Metz, the new shortstop of the Crescents, was a decided success even if he was credited with one of the two errors made by the home team. He is a hard hitter and a clever base runner and it is a hard ball indeed that can get away from his grasp when it comes anywhere near him.

It is probable that Discoway, who occupied the box for the Seventh Regiment team in last Saturday's game, may fill that position for the Crescents before the season is over. It is probable that he will be added to the Crescent team about July 1st and that he and McLarty will alternate in the box. Discoway is a remarkably steady pitcher, hard to rattle and good for nine innings of hard play. He has a reputation of being one of the heaviest hitters on the Seventh Regiment nine.

Next Saturday afternoon will see the continuation of baseball at the Crescent Oval. On that day the Plainfield Crescents will play the All-Stars, of Brooklyn, the Catholic Protectory team, one of the best on Long Island. The team is composed of rattling good players who have been together long enough to understand the details of team work and to be thoroughly conversant with them. The game is called for 3:30 o'clock. Stages will run to the Oval from the North Avenue station, beginning at 2 o'clock.

CYCLING COMMENT.

Mrs. Lindsey Woolley, of New street, has purchased a new bicycle.

Wm. Martin won the road race to Metuchen last night, making the distance in eighteen minutes.

Dr. Ard, of Park avenue, is now riding a new Eldridge wheel, purchased of the local agent, Thomas Cuming.

Edgar I. Serrell, of Myrtle avenue, has purchased a '98 Cleveland wheel of the F. L. C. Martin Cycle Co. It is the road-racing model and is enameled dark green.

Among the recent purchasers of Eldridge wheels are Hon. Charles A. Reed, L. R. Miller, of West Third street; Ole Johansen, of Scotch Plains; H. C. Runyon, of West Front street, and C. G. Wood, of the borough.

East Front street, between Richmond street and Scotch Plains, is now in excellent condition, better, in fact, than it has been for a long time. The wheelmen have discovered that fact and many nop choose that road for a short spin during the morning or evening.

THEATRICAL.

Current Dramatic Attractions That Plainfielders Can Witness.

Music Hall this evening will undoubtedly be filled to repletion in aid of the Red Cross Society funds. A splendid programme is prepared and to add to its brilliancy, engagement was made yesterday with the Queen City Band for patriotic music. The leader, Mr. Benjamin LaVere, promises a fine selection. A few choice seats remain unsold on the lower floor and can be secured today at $1.00 each, but that all may have an opportunity to attend, seats remaining unsold tomorrow morning, will be sold at regular prices, 75, 50 and 35 cents, and at night the general admission will be 50c. on lower floor, and 20c. in balcony.

Two Ounces of Blood Daily

Are added to your veins by taking with each meal one of the natural iron Capsuloids made from the fresh blood of young, healthy bullocks.

The days are lengthening, the sun growing warmer, the air is being filled with particles of dirt when the snow melts, because the dirt of all kinds has been mixed with snow during the winter. You breathe in these foul particles, and these particles, and germs of disease which go with them, get through your lungs into your blood, and you become languid and bilious.

STOP AND THINK. To cure this languid, bilious state, you must have plenty of good, rich, red blood; that is, you must fill the blood with natural iron or Haemoglobin, then the germs already in, die off, and the new ones are killed the moment they enter the blood. To enrich the blood you must take Iron, for rich blood is only another name for blood loaded with natural iron. Do not take hard Iron pills and strong acid mixtures that ruin your teeth and injure your stomach and bowels. Instead, take the only known natural iron medicine—that is, Dr. Campbell's Red Blood Forming Capsuloids. This is Nature's own iron, being extracted from the fresh blood of healthy young bullocks. It is exactly the same as that already in your blood. This natural Iron passes straight from the stomach into the blood, making it rich and pure, destroying the germs, oxidizing and removing the foul particles, and thus making your liver and stomach work perfectly, and so getting rid of all your biliousness and languid condition. They are the greatest blood enrichers ever prescribed by a doctor or offered to the public.

WAR NEWS!

THE SECOND CALL FOR 75,000 TROOPS.

President McKinley Took Action After Long Deliberation.

Spanish Fleet at Santiago While Schley Waits Outside —Sampson to Bombard Havana—The Invasion of Cuba to Start This Week—Spain Can Get No Funds Abroad.

MORE VOLUNTEERS WANTED

The President Issues the Second Call For 75,000 More Troops.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

Washington, May 25, 1:50 p.m.—The second call for volunteers has come, as predicted by many, as denied by some. The call is for seventy-five thousand more volunteers.

It has been known that the President has had a second call under advisement for several weeks and that the call was the subject of numerous conferences in the war department.

The call will be divided among the States in the same ratio as the first call. It is understood that in most States the call for volunteers will be made direct and that the militia will not be formally called out.

SPANISH FLEET TRAPPED.

Official Reports That it is Bottled Up in Santiago Harbor by Americans.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

Washington, May 25, 9 a. m—Rumors of every kind have been current for the last twenty-four hours, but the Navy Department has settled many of them by an announcement that the Spanish fleet is positively at Santiago de Cuba.

It was positively announced this morning that the fleet was there and further that the American fleet had cooped up the Spanish squadron in it.

The first meeting of the joint commission to settle the Alaskan boundary question and the dispute over the seal fisheries was held at the State department today.

The representatives of the other powers are watching the proceedings closely for signs of an Anglo-American alliance.

President McKinley intimated today that the plans for the invasion of Cuba were no longer being held in abeyance. Secretary Algar practically confirmed the news of an early movement against Cuba.

The ordinance department reports that there is an ample supply of ammunition ready for the invading army, and that it can be handled at once and without delay.

The ram Katahdin sailed this morning from the Charleston navy yard under sealed orders.

New York, May 25, 12:10 p. m—The Mail and Express correspondent at Port au Prince positively confirms the arrival of Admiral Cervera and his Spanish ships at Santiago de Cuba.

PLANS FOR THE WEEK.

The Movement to Transport Troops to Cuba to Start This Week.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

Washington, May 25, 2:05 p. m—It is authoritively asserted that the administration plans that Schley shall hold Cervera at Santiago. Sampson is to bombard Havana while Gen. Miles attacks it in the rear.

The smaller vessels are to assist in the transportation of troops which will begin at the end of the week. The regulars will form the vanguard, with the volunteers following as fast as possible.

Tampa, May 25, 10:07 a. m.—Thirty transports are reported to be loading for Cuba this morning.

NO MONEY FROM EUROPE.

Spain's Financial Situation Is Desperate Indeed With No Chance of Betterment.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

Madrid, May 25, 12:10 p. m—The financial situation in Spain is desperate. There seems no practical solution to the question as to where she is to obtain financial aid.

The Ministry is making desperate efforts to raise funds among the populace but with little success. The people have no money to give. The Ministry now admits that a foreign loan is impossible.

OREGON AT JUPITER.

Lieut. Davis Tells of the Exciting Voyage Home from Bahai, Brazil.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

Jupiter, Fla., May 25, 1:10 p. m—The Oregon has anchored off here for a short time. Lieutenant Davis, of the battleship, came ashore.

He told the story of their daring voyage from Bahia, Brazil. A strict watch was kept on all sides for any suspicious craft.

Captain Clark steered the Oregon and her two consorts, the Marietta and the Buffalo, as far as possible outside of the regular course of vessels.

Jupiter is a prominent but small part on the east coast of the peninsula of Florida, ten miles north of Palm Beach and a hundred miles north of the northern extremity of the peninsula.

Washington, May 25, 11:32 a. m—Secretary Long of the Navy Department received this morning official confirmation of the report that the Oregon's arrival in Jupiter Inlet, Florida.

MILITARY TO GOVERN.

Insufficient Police Protection and Numerous Outrages Arouse Indignation.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

Key West, May 25, 11:30 a. m—The increasing disorder here has caused a demand for the immediate establishment of martial law on the Island.

The latest outrage was discovered this morning. James J. Dorcy, an expert machinist, aged fifty-five, was found dead at an early hour.

He was lying within half a block of the Key West Hotel, and his head and face were bruised almost beyond recognition. He received his wages last night, and when found they were gone. He was undoubtedly murdered for his money.

This murder, coupled with the murderous and probably fatal assault upon Seaman William Caine, of the gunboat Morrill, has aroused general indignation.

There are only two policemen here, drawing $25 a month each, and they have notified the authorities of their

TEMPERANCE WOMEN ARE AGAINST YALE.

Union County W. C. T. U. Pass Resolutions of Censure.

WON'T LET SONS GO THERE.

THE ACTION TAKEN BECAUSE THE FACULTY ARE TOO LIBERAL.

The Women are Opposed to the Students Having Wine at Their Banquets and Also to Permitting Inter-collegiate Sports Being Held in Towns Where Liquor is Sold—Several Addresses Given at the Afternoon and Evening Sessions Yesterday, and Better Attendance Than in the Morning.

The session of the School of Methods of the W. C. T. U. was brought to a close last Tuesday. The afternoon and evening sessions were better attended than the morning session, and the programme was a little different. The afternoon session began at 2 o'clock with devotional exercises, after which came addresses by the ladies on important topics.

Mrs. Ella M. Thatcher, national superintendent, of Florence, N. J., gave a talk on the work among the soldiers and sailors. This was followed by a memorial service in honor of Miss Frances E. Willard, the dead president of the National Union. Several ladies took part in this, and one told about Miss Willard in the home, another about her school life, and another about her temperance work.

Mrs. C. S. Valentine, of Cranford, told about Miss Willard in her home; Miss Anna M. Ramsey, of her school life, and Mrs. L. H. Demarest, the State corresponding secretary, told how Miss Willard conducted her temperance work.

The members of the Loyal Temperance Legion, under the direction of Mrs. Thomas Moore, gave songs and demonstrations which showed the faithful training of their teacher.

When the report of the committee on resolutions came, there were several resolutions offered. Among them was one for the ladies as members of the W. C. T. U. to use their influence with their representatives at Washington and at Trenton to have them do all in their power to prohibit the sale of liquor among the soldiers and sailors in our army and navy.

Another one was aimed at Yale College, because of alleged leniency on the part of the members of the faculty in regard to the students using intoxicating liquors and having liquor at their spreads. Resolutions were passed to discourage the attendance of young men who are seeking a college education at that institution until more stringent rules are made there in respect to the drinking habit.

The women also desired to protest against the "canteen system," which which they claim is in use in our army, and which they say is only another name for the traveling saloon.

Thanks were expressed for the services of the young ladies of the Christian Endeavor Society for their service at the tables; to the board of trustees of the First Presbyterian church for the use of the church, and to the city union of the W. C. T. U. for so lavishly entertaining the delegates.

The evening session of the School of Methods began at 8 o'clock. It consisted principally of an address upon "Why I Belong" by Mrs. Isabella Demarest, the corresponding secretary of the W. C. T. U., of Closter, N. J.

Roundsman Flynn at Sea Girt.

Roundsman Flynn, of the police department, was a visitor at Sea Girt Tuesday. He says that he had a fine time. Regarding the soldiers not having enough to eat, he says that is not true. The men have plenty of good food and it is cooked and served nicely. The Plainfield boys, he says, are doing well, but are anxious for a change of programme.

Relic From the Flagship.

Mr. Bennett, of Lincoln place, has received a letter from his son, Fred Bennett, assistant past engineer on the flagship New York. The letter was mailed last week from Key West and it states that he is well and getting along nicely. He sent along a small piece of a shell which struck the New York when fired from a Spanish ship.

LIBERTY POLE ERECT.

IT TOOK JUST AN HOUR AND A HALF TO RAISE IT.

Work Done Under the Supervision of Charles Runyon and Captain Hand—Big Crowds Witnessed the Pole Go Up.

A great portion of Plainfield stood around the corner of Park avenue and Front street all day Tuesday, watching the raising of the immense flagpole in front of Schsed's clothing store. From the time the pole first started on its upward journey until it was safely in place was just one hour and thirty minutes. W. W. Coriell, of West Front street, started a faint hand clapping as the pole settled into place, but as no one else joined in, Mr. Coriell soon desisted.

The hole for the pole was started Monday, but on account of the rain could not be finished until Tuesday. The hole was dug nine feet deep, and the dirt in the bottom had to be lifted out with a bucket.

The guide pole was a newly cut tree, strong and straight, and hardly bent with the weight of the flagpole. Officers Cash, McGee and Gless kept the crowd back, and prevented the passersby from getting under the poles.

Charles Runyon, manager of the New York and New Jersey Telephone Company, with a gang of expert linemen, assisted by Captain Hand and several of his employes, had charge of the pole raising. The neatness and dispatch which they displayed in the work showed that they thoroughly understood their work. Though the job was worth $75, and that is what out-of-town workmen would have charged, the work was done gratis, and the men deserve great praise for their services.

The lower part of the pole only was raised Tuesday; the top was put up yesterday morning. Many people were wondering how this was to be done, but they were soon to see. A tackle was rigged on the top of the pole, and Linemen Green and Chamberlain, of the Telephone Company, climbed to the top. Men below began to haul on the ropes, and in a short time the pole was together. While the pole was being raised the ball, weather vane and eagle were placed on top.

CLERKS STILL MISSING.

LOSEY AND VAN ARSDALE STAY IN A PUZZLING MANNER.

Said They Were Going to Morristown Saturday Night, But Evidently Did Not Go—No Shortage Yet Discovered.

Up to the time of going to press no news has been received from the missing dry goods clerks, Hudson Losey and Isaac V. Van Arsdale, of Woodhull & Martin's store. When they left town on Saturday night, they were as completely lost as if the earth had swallowed them up.

Losey, who boarded at McVey's restaurant, has left a heavy trunk at the hotel. No one knows what is in it, but it is very heavy, and seems to be filled with something of weight. Mr. McVey said to a reporter yesterday morning that he always considered Losey a model boarder, and was very much surprised when he heard of his sudden disappearance. Mr. McVey says that every Monday morning as regular as clock work Losey used to pay his week's board, and this he never missed during the year and a half that he boarded there, until this week.

Mrs. McVey says that Saturday night Losey told her that he was going to Morristown to spend Sunday, but he was seen in town long after the last train had left to connect with another for that place. There is no shortage reported in the accounts at the store, but the men did not handle very much cash.

Petit Jurors Dismissed.

Somerville, May 25—There being no more cases to come before the Somerset County Courts that require the attendance of the jurors the Court Tuesday dismissed them with thanks, stating that it concurred in the several findings of the panel. John Ernied, who was found guilty of assault and battery, was sentenced to pay $50. The case of North Plainfield against Warren township was postponed till tomorrow.

Joined the Army.

William Stewart, of the West End, has successfully passed his examination to join the army. He has been assigned to the Sixth Cavalry now located at Georgia, and he left Trenton Tuesday evening for the South.

Decoration Day Tea.

An afternoon tea will be held at the clubhouse of the Hillside Tennis and Golf Club, Plainfield avenue, Monday afternoon next, Decoration Day, commencing at 4 o'clock.

MAPS SHOWING ROUTE OF COUNTY TROLLEY

County Engineer Hubbard Has Furnished Fourteen of Them.

GIVE A GOOD IDEA OF PLAN.

DESCRIBES THE CHANGES THAT WILL HAVE TO BE MADE.

These Maps are Now on File at Mr. Hubbard's Office Where They May be Inspected—Estimates of the Cost of the Road, Bridge and Track Building Will be Completed in a Week or Two, But Work of Placing Correct Valuation on Property Will Take Several Weeks to Complete.

The preparation of the estimates for the building of the proposed Union county boulevard and trolley road is rapidly going forward despite the movements in several towns along the line to defeat the plan. A series of fourteen elaborate maps have just been completed by Engineer Frank J. Hubbard, of this city, showing the route of the proposed boulevard, the roads and properties as they are at present and the proposed changes. The maps are well and carefully drawn and give a very good idea of just what changes will be necessary.

These maps are now on file in Mr. Hubbard's office in the Babcock building where they can be seen by anyone interested in the proposed county trolley scheme.

The estimates of the cost of the road, bridge and track building will probably be completed in a week or two at most, but the work of placing a correct valuation on the property will occupy three weeks at least. Then the estimates will be ready to be placed in the hands of the Freeholders.

There has been a general impression in this city among those who have not looked carefully into the county boulevard and trolley road scheme that the boulevard would follow the line of the present county road its entire distance from Elizabeth to Plainfield. Such is not the case, however. While it is completed to remain with present county road from Elizabeth to Westfield, further than that the proposed trolley line will take the course now marked by North avenue. The reason for this is so that the great boulevard will not have to cross or pass under the tracks of the Jersey Central Railroad.

CHEERED CRACK 69TH.

THE BRAVE SOLDIER BOYS ON THEIR WAY TO THE SOUTH.

Three Trainloads Went Through on the Central—69 Torpedoes Exploded on the Rails—Incidents of the Demonstration.

Three trainloads of soldiers, consisting of the 69th Regiment of New York troops, passed through this city Tuesday at 8 p. m. bound for the south. Sixty-nine large railroad torpedoes were placed on the track, and as the trains passed over them there was a loud noise. The racket frightened three hack horses standing in front of the depot and made them run away. The horses ran as far as Park avenue when they were stopped and brought back. No damage was done.

At Bound Brook the trains slowed up, and one of the soldier boys went out on the train platform to cheer and wave his cap. A sudden lurch of the train threw him off and he fell to the depot platform. He was not hurt, and was picked up and taken inside the car where one of the surgeons examined his body for injuries. The trains did not reach Philadelphia until nearly 12 o'clock on account of a wreck, and were held at Wayne Junction for several hours.

The trains passed in three sections, and as the third section reached Dunellen it had to be sidetracked to allow a Philadelphia express to pass. Everybody turned out to give the soldier boys a rousing welcome, and received a piece of hardtack for a memento of the occasion.

Working on Railroad Property.

A gang of Central Railroad workmen are busy laying a stone sidewalk along the railroad property on the north side of East Fourth street. This is a much needed improvement, and will make a continous line of flagging all the way from the western part of the city to Watchung avenue with one or two breaks. The railroad company will also construct a driveway from Fourth street to the track so that commuters can drive right up to the station mornings and evenings. It is not known just how soon the work on the new station will be begun, but each new movement in this direction is hailed with delight on the part of the commuters.

ENTERTAINED SINGERS.

MR. AND MRS. W. A. FREEMAN HOSTS FOR GRACE CHURCH CHOIR.

The Affair Given in the Parish House—Many Musical Numbers Given—Prizes in Games Were Awarded to the Guests.

Mr. and Mrs William A. Freeman, of 52 Sandford avenue, entertained the members of the Grace Church Choir at the parish house last Tuesday. The entire choir, with one or two exceptions, attended, and a very pleasant time was enjoyed by all. There were a few outside guests, Rev. and Mrs. E. M. Rodman, Rev. Floyd Appleton, Mr. and Mrs. Francis Moore, and William Moore.

William Moore brought his phonograph with him, and entertained the young people with selections. The choir stood together and sang Guonod's anthem which Mr. Moore took and reproduced afterwards from the phonograph. The experiment was a great success.

Fletcher Hallock was present with his banjo and played and sang. The evening wound up with games in which all joined. Prizes were awarded as follows: The first lady's prize, which was a set of gold shirt-waist studs and buttons, was won by Miss Eleanor VanDeventer. The first boy's prize, a silver pocket knife, was won by Lyon Adams. The second lady's prize, a gold hatpin set with rubies, went to Miss Mabella Smith. The corresponding boy's prize, a gold charm, went to VanWyck Brooks. Miss May Collier also drew a hatpin set with amethysts.

Miss Eva Noe took the third lady's prize, which was a gold hatpin. Harry Messersmidth drew a gold enamel pin with the battleship New York. The fourth lady's prize was a gold patriotic medal and this was taken by Miss Lottie Messersmidth. Frank Housman got a boy's pin. The fifth lady's prize was a silver-mounted rabbit's foot which was taken by Miss Mary Rodman. The fifth boy's prize was an enamel flagpin. Miss VanDeventer got the consolation prize.

ENTHUSIASTIC FOR GOLF

THE PARK CLUB TO LAY OUT LINKS IN THE BOROUGH VERY SOON.

Board of Governors Completed the Arrangements Last Night—Expert to be Employed to Prepare the Course.

The board of governors of the Park Club held an adjourned meeting last Tuesday and received the final report from the committee on golf. The appointment of Meredith Dryden, Walter McGee and B. A. Hegeman, Jr., completes the board of trustees which now consists of B. A. Hegeman, Jr., chairman; Meredith Dryden, secretary; Walter McGee, treasurer; S. St. John McCutchen, Charles A. Reed, George P. Dupee and William J. Roome. The latter was elected in place of Pierre Malll, who cannot serve.

A committee, consisting of Charles W. McCutchen, W. J. Buttfield and Mr. Hibbard, were appointed to look after the grounds and course, and arrangements have been made to have the course laid out at once and a small clubhouse erected on the grounds. The clubhouse will be a model one in every particular, although it will not be an elaborate affair.

An expert in laying out a golf course will be secured at once and the grounds will be put in shape for playing as soon as possible. Other committees will be appointed in a short time to look after the club membership and other important details in connection with club affairs.

Judging by the people who now compose the club there is no doubt but that the new organization will be a great success. It has been arranged that persons not members of the club can join the Park Golf Club. Another meeting of the trustees and members will be held soon to complete all arrangements, and when the course is completed there will be a grand opening event.

Seniors and Juniors to Meet.

A union meeting of the Senior and Junior Christian Endeavor Societies of the Park Avenue Baptist church will be held Friday evening at the church. The meeting will be led by Mrs. W. S. Lowry, the Junior superintendent and the president of the Senior society. The topic of this meeting is "Christ our Model." A quartette from the Junior society will sing.

Flowers for Decoration Day.

The members of the various churches in the city have been asked to donate flowers for the observance of Decoration Day. The flowers can be left at G. A. R. headquarters Saturday, when the rooms will be open.

DETAILS OF G. A. R. FOR MEMORIAL DAY.

Commander I. L. McVoy Will Be Marshal of the Day.

FLAG RAISING IN MORNING.

VETERANS, CADETS AND SCHOLARS TO BE IN THE PARADE.

How the Order of the Exercises Will Be Carried Out During the Day—Assignment of Speakers for Patriotic Exercises in the Public Schools—After the Unfurling of the Flag the Parade Will Take Place—Address of the Day in Music Hall in the Afternoon—Will March on Main Streets.

The programme for the observance of Memorial Day to be carried out by the members of Winfield Scott Post, No. 73, G. A. R., is now completed. E. O. Morse, commander of the post, has issued his orders for that day. They are as follows:

First—The post will assemble at headquarters on Friday, May 27th, at 9 a. m., in uniform, or dark clothing, for the purpose of attending memorial exercises in the public schools. Former Mayor L. V. F. Randolph will speak at the Stillman building at 8:30; W. W. Coriell at the Irving building at 8 o'clock; I. L. McVoy at the Bryant building at 8:30; W. C. Smith at North Plainfield school at 11 o'clock; M. C. Dobbins at St. Mary's school at 1 p. m.; W. W. Coriell at North Plainfield school at 1:30; William Hand at Franklin building at 2 p. m; M. C. Dobbins at Washington building at 2 p. m. Each of the above comrades will be accompanied by details.

Second—The post will assemble May 29th, at 7 p. m., at post headquarters, for the purpose of attending memorial service to be held in the Methodist Episcopal church, in accordance with the invitation from Rev. Mr. Snodgrass. Comrades will report in dark clothing, uniform hats, gloves and canes.

Third—In accordance with request of the memorial detail, Comrade I. L. McVoy has been appointed marshal of the day and will be respected and obeyed accordingly.

Fourth—The post will assemble at post headquarters Monday, May 30th, at 7:30 a. m., for the purpose of decorating the graves of departed comrades. S. V. Com. James B. Clarkson will take charge of detail to decorate the graves in the Seventh day and Hillside cemeteries. Detail will take stage promptly at 7:30 a. m, and perform the duties and report at headquarters at 9 a. m. J. V. Com. Wm. Hand will take charge of the detail to decorate the graves in the Quaker and Catholic cemeteries. Will take stages promptly at 8 a. m., go to the Catholic schools, get the children and go to the cemeteries and perform the duties and report to post headquarters at 9:30 a.m. P. Com. S. W. Reese will take charge of the detail to decorate the graves at Westfield. Comrade W. B. Moore will take charge of the detail to decorate the graves at Mt. Bethel and Mt. Hope. Comrade Samuel Ball will take charge of the detail to decorate the graves at Scotch Plains. All details will report to officer of the day W. C. Smith for their position in line at the flag raising at 9:30 a. m., at which time the flag will be unfurled with the proper ceremonies, and to decorate the graves in the Presbyterian and Evergreen cemeteries. All comrades will report in full uniform. Those not having uniforms will report in dark clothing, uniform hats, white gloves, memorial badges and canes throughout the day.

Fifth—Flowers and markers will be furnished details at post headquarters.

Sixth—The post will reassemble at post headquarters at 2 p. m. prompt to attend memorial services in Music Hall.

The parade will move at 10:30 a. m., and the line of march will be as follows: Through East Front street to Elm place; through Elm place to Chatham street; through Chatham street to Presbyterian Cemetery, where Post exercises will be conducted and graves decorated; through Chatham street to Somerset street; through Somerset street to Front street; through West Front street to Plainfield avenue; through Plainfield avenue to Evergreen Cemetery, where Post exercises will be conducted and graves decorated; through Plainfield avenue to Seventh street; through Seventh street to Park avenue; through Park avenue to Front street; through East Front street to place of formation, and then be dismissed.

Public services will be held in Music Hall at 2:30 p. m., and the public is cordially invited to attend.

JUGGLED THE SPINAL CORD.

Remarkable Feat of a Surgeon Performed to Remove the Effect of a Bullet.

Dr. J. W. Norris, of Palmyra, Mo., is able to say that his spinal cord has been lifted entirely out of place, examined and put back again without permanent injury resulting.

An instrument of the most powerful X ray type had failed to locate a bullet which had been fired into Dr. Norris's back, and so he was taken to the Baptist Hospital in St. Louis. Here the doctors said the chances were that his life could be saved if he could endure the operation to which medical science has given the frightful name of laminectomy. Dr. A. C. Bernays performed the operation.

The patient, although he knew the operation was a life and death matter, was cool and collected. An anaesthetic was administered. Gently the patient was placed in position, and in less time than it takes to tell it the keen knife in the hands of Dr. Bernays had made its way through the flesh. Finally the backbone was reached and the flesh on each side of the long cut was laid back, exposing seven or eight inches of the vertebrae to view.

The delicate work of removing quarter sections of the joints in the backbone so as to expose the spinal cord began. With an instrument made for the purpose Dr. Bernays cut out a thick wedge-shaped section of one of the backbone joints, leaving exposed plainly to view the spinal cord, inclosed in its filmy sac. Another and another of these wedge-shaped pieces were taken out, until about five inches of the spinal cord were exposed to view, sections of bone having been taken from four of the vertebrae.

The bone and tissue were both perceptibly affected, and the patient for a time seemed on the point of collapse; but the dangerous symptoms ceased, and the operation was then proceeded with. It was found that the damage done by the bullet resulted from the passage through the bone, and that the ball itself was not affecting the patient in any way. Finally, Dr. Bernays lifted the spinal column entirely out of its bed in the bone a distance of five inches.

It was found that the ball, in its passage, had pressed a portion of the bone into the spinal canal in such a way as to press heavily against the spinal cord and was the probable cause of the total paralysis of Dr. Norris's lower limbs. The obstruction, which was about the size of a pea, was removed with a sharp bone chisel and forceps. As the bullet was not thought to be doing any damage, it was not removed.

After the bony obstruction in the spinal canal had been removed, the spinal cord was put back into place, the vertebrae were replaced, the flesh put back and the incision sewed up. The operation took just one hour and a quarter. Queen Vitality is now the patient recovered sufficiently from the shock to carry on a conversation.

SOME QUEER FUELS.

In Egypt Dried Mummies Are Used for Running Trains.

Some of the queer fuels used for fuel in various parts of the world seem extraordinary. In certain shoe-making towns in Massachusetts, such as Lynn, there are some very poor people who burn nothing else but leather chips from one end of the year to the other. They get them from the factories by the wheelbarrow load.

Such chips, of course, smoulder with a great deal of smoke. They form incandescent masses which have to be broken up from time to time with the poker.

In Egypt it is said that mummies, chiefly those of cats, ibises and other animals held sacred by the ancient inhabitants have been employed for running trains between Cairo and Alexandria.

Dried fishes, particularly the salmon, have been, and perhaps are to this day, employed to some extent as fuel by the Indians in parts of British Columbia. They contain enough oil and muscular fibre to burn well.

A Rich Gift to the Queen.

The Parsees of Bombay have sent as a gift to Queen Victoria a casket representing, in rich gold and silver embossed work, an old Persian palace. On the palace are seen in relief Persian figures in ancient national costume, while rich antique bows or maces with bull's heads, the old-fashioned war clubs, form the extreme corners of the casket, which is about twenty inches long, half as wide and half as high. The miniature palace is crowned with three figures symbolic of Parsee worship. They are pure gold. A Parsee king is praying before a fire altar, and in the center is seen an angel. Kneeling elephants form the four feet of the casket, tracing an allusion to the period when, driven from Persia by the worshippers of Islam, the Parsees found a resting place in India.

Timely Items.

Combs are best cleaned with brushes; washing them causes the teeth to split and the tortoiseshell becomes rough.

The following is a soothing lotion to be applied with an eye bath several times a day: 1 grain borax, 1 oz. camphor water.

When the hair has become dry the following mixture should be well rubbed into the roots: 4 oz. oil of sweet almonds, 4 oz. glycerine, 4 oz. lime-water, 1 oz. tincture of cantharides; shake the bottle well before using.

Carbonate of soda is the best of all remedies in cases of scalds and burns. It may be used on the surface of the burnet place, either dry or wet. When applied promptly the sense of relief is magical. It seems to withdraw the heat, and with it the pain, and the healing process commences. It is the best application for eruptions caused by poisonous ivy and other poisonous plants, and also for bites and stings of insects.

Strong tea applied with a sponge several times a week will darken faded hair.

A few drops of oil of cloves added to paste will prevent paste from turning sour.

Patent leather shoes should be cleaned with sweet oil applied with a piece of flannel, and afterwards polished with a soft duster.

A little powdered borax added to the water in which red material is washed, will keep it from losing its brightness.

Ringworm in children can be cured by applying a strong solution of common salt and water every night to the affected parts, and then washing off in the morning with a solution of boric acid.

Saucepans should never be put away with their lids on, or the smell of the last thing cooked in them will remain. Turn the saucepan upside down on a shelf with its lid hung above or below the shelf on a nail in the wall.

Mind How You Walk.

Did you know that your own particular was indicative of some trait in your character? If you have a slow manner of walking it shows you are not energetic, but if you turn out your toes it indicates a thoughtful mind.

In the case of determined, energetic people, their walk is marked by rapid, long steps, which are the same under all circumstances; while the fops and the careless portion change the style of their walk to suit the prevailing weather. One hour they will walk one way, and the next hour their manner of walking will be entirely different, and at all times uncertain and unreliable.

On the other hand, those who walk easily and gracefully are very apt to be easy and careful in everything they do. A heel walker is generally a solid kind of a character, while those who do the most part of their walking on the forward part of their feet are fond of sport, and incline strongly towards sentimental things in life.

For the Master Bride.

Now as the season of weddings approach there is always a demand for neat and dainty bridal gowns suitable for the home wedding. A pretty model is made of cream white satin, although silk could be substituted if preferred. Over the back of the skirt falls a circular train of medium length, while down the left side the skirt is trimmed with a cascade frill of lace, and also orange blossoms. If there is any lace which is an heirloom in the family this would be an excellent way to use it, as it would not be necessary to cut into it.

The bodice is made with a tight-fitting back. The front is covered with pleated chiffon, which is draped and fastened with a bow on the left side below a small frill of ribbon. Sleeves quite tight fitting puffed on the shoulder.

Mutton Pie.

This is a very good and economical family dish, and is made with the remains of a cold leg or loin, or any other joint of mutton, from which nice, neat slices of rather lean meat can be cut. These should be put, with a good seasoning, in alternate layers with thinly sliced potatoes, into a pie dish, commencing at the bottom with some of the meat, and finishing at the top with potatoes. Parsley, savoury herbs, onion or shallot, with a little mace, white pepper, and salt, may be used at discretion. A cupful of good gravy from the meat should be poured into the pie before the crust is put on.

A New Fabric.

Among the new fabrics seen in the stores is the elorinda, a new weave in a piece-dyed material that is at once a plain fabric and a novelty. Dunoon plaids seemingly forsake clan colors, and retaining Scottish designs take on the colors that fashion favors. The plaids come in six beautiful colorings. In one type two shades of blue in the ground are overshadowed by broken lines of brown and tan, and a dash of gold adds brilliancy to the material.

Preserving Cut Blossoms.

To preserve cut blossoms of hard wood trees or shrubs, such as lilac, laburnum, apple, blossoms, roses or hydrangea, the stalks should be stripped of the bark a good way up at the ends so that they can suck up the water, and the water in which they are placed should be warm.

A NEW WAR INVENTION.

Wonderful Liquid Air Gun, Smokeless and Noiseless.

A rifle, fired by liquid air, is the latest invention for war. The inventor is a Frenchman named Paul Giffard, and his new weapon, if all that is claimed for it be true, will revolutionize the whole theory and practice of gunnery, for cannon, as well as for small arms. In the conflicts of the future, gunpowder will be dispensed with.

Air liquefied under enormous pressure is the explosive used for M. Giffard's new rifle. It is loaded into a reservoir beneath the barrel. The trigger is pulled, causing a little valve to open and permitting a single drop of liquid air to escape from the reservoir. The magazine is full of conical bullets, and one of them always lies in the barrel of the rifle until fired and succeeded by another. The liberated drop of air instantly expands in a small chamber behind the bullet, and the pow'r of its expansion is so tremendous as to discharge the projectile with a velocity approximating half a mile a second. No combustion having occurred, there is no smoke, of course. Stranger yet, there is no sound—no report to give notice that the gun has been fired. In the battles of the future men will fall without knowing from what direction they are struck. The magazine holds 150 bullets, and can be refilled in six seconds. The projectile can be discharged in a steady stream.

JAPANESE IMAGES IN FAIRMOUNT.

"Devil Scarers" for Sleepy Old Philadelphia's Park.

Visitors to Fairmount Park, Philadelphia, receive something of a shock as they unexpectedly come upon two monstrous, grotesque, writhing, menacing images that stand before one of the doorways of the permanent museum buildings erected for the Centennial Exposition and known as Memorial Hall.

The figures were recently purchased in Japan by the Museum Commission. They are supposed to be over 300 years old, and for three centuries stood sentinel like at the gate of Toshiogu, a temple at Nra, the ancient capital of Japan. They were placed at the gate to prevent the devils from getting in.

The images are each six feet six inches high, and with the pedestal, eight feet four inches high, being carved from wood and painted.

In the olden days, when Buddhism and superstition ruled Japan, the "devil scarers" were held in great awe and veneration by the simple people. That they could be purchased and taken away to a foreign land for exhibition as mere curios speaks volumes for the progress that has marked the land of the rising sun during the past quarter of a century.

Japan is to-day absolutely free from the thraldom of the priesthood that once held its people bound in superstitious chains.—New York Journal.

SLEPT IN A BEAR'S DEN.

In Order to Win a Husband a Silly Young Woman Performed this Act.

Mrs. Augustus Sheutzenbach, of Lopez, Pa., is the heroine of a real life drama that may fitly be called "The Lady and the Bear." Mr. Sheutzenbach being unable to choose between Postmaster Fisher and Miss Sarah Fisher, the girls themselves decided to have a test of courage, the winner to become Mrs. Sheutzenbach. They decided that a night in a bear's den should be the test. The bear was the property of Dave Brown, a Lopez woodsman. Miss Fisher first went into the pen, but her courage forsook her in less than an hour, for Bruin was in a surly mood. Miss Mary McDonald the next night entered the pen, neatly clapped a muzzle on Mr. Bruin's snout, tied him to a post and took with a clothes line, toppled him over, and then used his great shaggy body as a pillow. Thus she went to sleep, and stayed there the night through. And so it was that Miss McDonald is now Mrs. Sheutzenbach.—New York Journal.

Cause for Thoughtfulness.

"An' hoo's the guid wife, Sandy?" said one farmer to another as they met in the market-place and exchanged snuffboxes.

"Did ye no hear that she's dead and buried?" said Sandy, solemnly.

"Dear me!" exclaimed his friend, sympathetically; "surely it must have been very sudden!"

"Aye, it was sudden," returned Sandy. "Ye see, when she turned ill we hadna time to send for the doctor, nae I ged her a bit pouther that I had lying in my drawer for a year or twa, an' che! I ged a gey fine doctor mysel', but hadna ta'en. What the pouther was I dinna verra weel ken, but she died soon after. It's a sair loss to me, I can assure ye, but it's something to be thankfu' for I dinda tak' the pouther mysel'."—Spare Moments.

Parasols are Smaller than Last Year.

Never were parasols so sumptuous as those now being exhibited for early summer. The style seems to be to have them much smaller than in former seasons and many of them are tub shaped. Another fad of the moment is for grotesque handles for umbrellas and parasols. Heads of animals are especially high in favor and these are realistically colored, are only the cat, that feline example finding expression in a pretty brown stained wood.

Among the novelties one of the most attractive is of white silk with ruching of black chiffon around the edge. Another style which is very popular is of pale pink silk trimmed with tiny white satin ribbon ruffles all the way up to the top. A pretty parasol is of cream duchesse lace made over a bright foundation. Coaching and carriage parasols are made to match the dress with which they are worn and are certainly very dainty and smart.

A pretty rosette usually finishes the top of these parasols and another is put inside to match the outer one. On the best made models the rods are covered with narrow silk ribbon.

Hints for the Home.

Mattresses, pillows, and bolsters should be periodically sent to the cleaners to be taken to pieces and cleaned. It is not good for health to use them for more unCleaned, as most people have them.

Do not let your neighbors have to complain of your gate squeaking for want of a few drops of oil applied to the joint. It is a most aggravating noise.

No other large city is as quiet as Berlin. Railway engines are not allowed to blow their whistles within the city limits, and the man whose wagon gearing is loose and rattling is subject to a fine. Strangest of all, piano playing is regarded in Berlin. Before a certain hour in the day and after a certain hour in the night, the piano must be silent in that musical city. Even during playing hours a fine is imposed for mere banging on the piano.

New Use for Bird Cages.

A gentleman who went out with Stanley to Africa, took with him a number of bird cages, in which he hoped to bring back some specimens of the rare and beautiful birds of the interior. Owing to the death of his canary he was obliged to throw away the bird cages with a number of other articles. These were seized by the natives in great glee, though they did not know what to do with them; but they eventually decided that the small circular cages were a kind of headgear, and, knocking off the bottom, the chiefs strutted about in them with evident pride. Another chief, thinking himself more wise than the others, and having seen a white man wear a hat, with a band of fishes, thought they were receptacles for food, and took his meals from one, ceremoniously opening and shutting the door between each mouthful.

Spiral Railway Towers.

A spiral railway tower is being planned as one of the features of the forthcoming Pan-American Exhibition at Niagara Falls. The building will be erected on the Canada side, and the general design is as follows: A steel skeleton tower, about 500 feet high and 90 feet diameter at the base, and 50 feet in diameter 400 feet above the base. Around the erection, supported by strong brackets, a spiral railway will be constructed, which will pass ten times round the tower in reaching the 400 feet platform. The motive safety appliances will be used in connection with the track. The spiral railway will be so constructed as to afford independent up and down tracks, 20 feet apart. It is estimated that this

Tulle Veils for the Bride.

The bride who cannot wear an heirloom of lace for her wedding veil may console herself that inexpensive tulle is much more effective and becoming. In arranging this, one point should be born in mind by the hair-dresser of the bride, as she professionally or the delinquent sister or friend who often elects to perform this gracious service on that momentous occasion. No matter what the prevailing coiffure is, the tulle should be dressed high to hold the veil. A low arrangement may be more becoming without the veil, but it will so found that only a high effect is possible with the tulle drapery.

To Remove a Splinter.

A bit of home surgery practised when a splinter is driven into a child's hand particularly deep is its extraction by steam. A bottle with a sufficiently wide mouth is filled two-thirds with very hot water, and the mouth is placed under the injured spot. The suction draws the flesh down when a little pressure is used, and the steam, in a moment or two, extracts inflammation and splinter together. This is very efficacious when the offending substance has been in for several hours, long enough to have started up some of its evil consequences.

A French doctor has invented an electric helmet, inside of which is a small motor that vibrates strips of steel, the motor making 500 turns per minute. This whizzing is supposed to stay nervous headache, and put the sufferer to sleep.

HISTORY OF THANKSGIVING DAY.

How It Grew from the Earliest Colonial Times.

The earliest record which we have of an American Thanksgiving Day is found in the New England annals of 1621. In the autumn of that year Governor Bradford, so saith the chronicler, sent out men to procure some game, in order that the New England Colonists might properly enjoy a day of thanksgiving in remembering of the fruits of their labors during the year that had passed. Another day of rejoicing was set apart and "solemnized" as "a day of thanksgiving unto the Lord," after an abundant harvest in 1632. It is stated that, on this occasion, Massasoit and his council of braves were invited to participate in the festivities, and that they did so, spending three days in feasting. Evidently the Indian friends of the Colonists found Thanksgiving Day a day to be made the most of.

These Thanksgiving Days were not, however, of official character. The first official public Thanksgiving Day was not until the year 1631; and even this day was not at first intended to be a day of rejoicing and thanksgiving. It was then officially changed by the authorities from a day of sorrow to a day of thanksgiving. This was the first real Thanksgiving Day of the American people.

Thanksgiving days were occasionally observed also in the New Netherland after this date; but it was not until February, 1644, that another official Thanksgiving Day was proclaimed. That year Governor Kieft proclaimed "a day of general thanksgiving," the occasion being the victory of the Colonists in the Pequot wars. At the conclusion of the peace, in 1645, another Thanksgiving Day was proclaimed. We are not told that the Indians were invited to this ceremony.

The first National Thanksgiving Day was, by proclamation of President Washington, set for Thursday, November 26, 1789.

Other presidents, after Washington, issued Thanksgiving Day proclamations, from time to time; until now it is become the annual practice of the President of the United States to name the last Thursday in November as a day to be observed by thanksgiving and prayer. Governors of States issue their proclamations to correspond, thus making the observance uniform throughout the land.

In the New England States Thanksgiving Day has been observed annually for over a century. The custom has extended to other States, one at a time, until, to-day, it prevails almost everywhere in the country, and is observed by Americans in foreign lands with a sentiment that is not only religious but patriotic. It is a legal holiday also. According to the official reports on the subject in 1893 there were, at that date, but eight sections of the country where Thanksgiving Day was not recognized—Arkansas, Colorado, Delaware, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, Oklahoma, Utah. The rest of the Union had adopted the general custom. Latest reports (1897) show that there are now but three sections in which Thanksgiving Day is not officially recognized—Alabama, Louisiana, Mississippi.

Respect Paid to Turkish Women.

On the Bosphorus their saloons are a great resource to the Turkish ladies, but in Constantinople, where they can only go out, in closed carriages, to the Sweet Waters, occasionally accompanied by their husbands on horseback. But they may speak to no one while driving; their husbands and sons cannot even bow to them as they pass, and no one would venture to say a word to his own wife or mother when the carriage pulls up—the police would at once interfere. The highest mark of respect is to turn your back on a lady, and this is signed to every new member of the Imperial harem passes.

Formerly a man never saw the face of his intended until after the marriage ceremony, when they withdrew into a room and the veil was lifted for the first time. Now it is generally conceded that the bridegroom-elect shall see his future wife for a moment unveiled. —Exchange.

A Rare Coin.

While engaged in digging under his farm house, near South Windsor, N. Y., a short time ago, George Buell found a curious copper coin. The obverse side of the coin has upon it a sun and a sun dial, the date of coinage, 1787, and the inscription, "Mind your own business." The reverse side has thirteen links above the margin and an inscription in the center, "United States, one cent. The coin is known as a "Franklin cent," and is the first coin authorized by the United States. It is rare and valuable, and sells at from $25 to $100. Mr. Buell has already been offered $20 for his find.

Apropos of my remarks on the sometimes conflicting ideals of religion and gentlemanliness, says the Private Diarist, in Cornhill Magazine, a lady sends me an amusing anecdote of a friend who bewailed to her the loss of a somewhat ill-bred, but extremely wealthy, neighbor who had been very liberal in his help to her country charities. "Mr. X is dead," said she. "He was so good and kind and helpful to me in all sorts of ways; he was so vulgar, poor dear fellow, we could not know him in London, but we shall meet in heaven."

Tucked Batiste Waist.

The popular shirt waist continues to blossom out daily in all manner of novel and dainty forms. Tucks are particularly effective on these waists; a dainty blouse recently seen of fine cream batiste, tucked, and worn over a slip of pale pink silk formed a very lovely model for wear with a white pique or woolen skirt. The sleeves were the regulation shirt waist model. A stock of pink silk with an accordeon pleated bow under the chin gave a pretty finish.

Silk waists are much worn at this season. Taffeta is too warm, but many charming styles are of China silk fashioned in the same way as the cotton ones with the exception that the box pleat in the front is more elaborately trimmed.

A Barbaric Custom.

Although Russia is rapidly advancing in civilization many barbaric customs still exist, and that of choosing a wife is amongst the most curious. It is chiefly prevalent in country districts, and is really a game played at Christmas-time. A prominent person in a village announces that this annual feast will take place in his house, and all the young men and women of the place flock there at the appointed time. First there are dances and songs and games just as at any other ordinary party, but when these are over the hostess takes all the girls into one room where they sit upon benches all round. On with one completely muffled up in large white sheets. In the meantime the young men have been drawing lots, and when the girls are all rolled up in their sheets, and looking more like mummies than human beings, they enter the room one by one, their order being decided by the number each draws. It is impossible to distinguish any one girl, and the young man, having finally made his choice, unveils her, it being the unwritten law that he should marry whomsoever he may pick out. If either the girl or the man refuse to marry, they must pay a heavy forfeit. Strange as it may seem, this extraordinary game of marriage is said to lead to many happy unions.

Experiments in Inverted Vision.

Professor George Stratton, of the University of California, has made a novel experiment in inverted vision by wearing for eight days a mask fitted with lenses which invert the visual image, thus projecting it upon the retina in an erect instead of the normal inverted position. He soon learned to refer all objects to their correct positions, in other words to see things right side up; but, on removing the apparatus at the expiration of eight days, everything appeared to be upside down at first. He therefore concludes that the seeing of objects right side up is due to a mental rectification of the visual image actually projected upon the retina.

Unique Work Bag.

A useful bag may be made of two silk handkerchiefs, or two pieces of silk or cretonne, measuring about 27 inches square. If plain silk is used, and a handsome bag is required, the inner square may be worked in cross-stitch or embroidered to make it firm. Eight dozen rings about the size of a ten cent piece are sewn on at regular distances. The corners and sides are turned down equally so as to form a circle. When the rings are down on ribbon or cord is run through the double top and draw up and close the bag with. Brown Holland bound with red braid makes a strong work-bag.

Useful Information.

It is highly dangerous to leave a gas-burner turned low unless surrounded by a globe, as even a draught of wind may blow out the flame and leave the gas escaping.

Cupboards and storerooms should periodically have the doors set open for air and light to penetrate, and the shelves should be cleaned or at least brushed out once a week.

Sponges should never be used for applying a lotion to an open wound.

To keep a quill pen soft, have it always in the ink and do not let it get dry.

Celery Soup.

Ingredients.—One head of celery, two onions, one pint of water or stock, one quart of milk, one bay leaf, one blade of mace, six white peppercorns, two tablespoonfuls of cream, salt.

Method.—Prepare the vegetables and slice them; put them in a saucepan with the stock, bay leaf, mace, peppercorns and salt; cook gently until tender, rub through a sieve, return to the saucepan, re-heat, add the milk (warm) and then the cream. Do not let the soup boil after the cream is added.

GIVE THE BOYS A CHANCE.

Don't Handicap Them with Undesirable and Inappropriate Names.

The practice of naming children after distinguished or prominent men who may be in the public eye for the nonce, while usually springing from patriotic enthusiasm, does not always have so worthy an origin. Of course, where fathers continue to call their young hopefuls after George Washington, Henry Clay, Abraham Lincoln, Henry Ward Beecher and such shining lights, there is no suspicion of mercenary intent, as there is evidently no hope of pecuniary recognition of their acts, for obvious reasons. But now and then this sort of tribute of admiration to the great and good is abused, and mercenary motives are apparent, or at least suspected. Yet, while most men prominent in public life have vulnerable spots about them and are easily reached with a shaft of this kind—"touched" the expressive phrase of the day has it—now and then the mercenary man finds himself badly left out in the cold, as he deserves, because of his unworthy motives.

As illustrative of this point a morning paper prints an amusing instance, for which it appears to vouch, as it is a "special" from Washington, in which a Pennsylvania farmer complains to his member of Congress that, having eight months ago named his "12-lb boy" McKinley, "he being a large Bill fellow," he wrote him, as per request, "But," says the father, "he never so much as answard my letter. I felt completely beet. I did not no he was a stingy grown man."

Still worse—a cousin of the complainant once named a son after "Mr. Bliss," and "Mr. B. sent him a check for $25," and wrote him a very warm letter, thanking him for the name. He further complains that even Mr. Bryan sent one infantile namesake in Homestead "a 10 dollar cloke and a ck for some money," besides a "very warm letter." The upshot of it all is that the complainants neighbors are poking fun at him. His name is Smith, he says, and there are lot of Smiths around his neighborhood, and he would like to have the Congressman do something for him to stop the neighbors' "gaes."

It would seem as if Mr. McKinley was the only level-headed man in this naming business. Why should a good and great man have his name bestowed upon a boy who may, when he grows up, make everyone sorry he was named so? Or why should an innocent least don't handicap him with true-ness. In the meantime the young men have been drawing lots, and when the girls are all rolled up in their sheets, and looking more like mummies than human beings, they enter the room one by one, their order being decided by the number each draws. It is impossible to distinguish any one girl, and the young man, having finally made his choice, unveils her, it being the unwritten law that he should marry whomsoever he may pick out. If either the girl or the man refuse to marry, they must pay a heavy forfeit. Strange as it may seem, this extraordinary game of marriage is said to lead to many happy unions.

SYMPATHY OF THE BIRDS.

They Did Not Live Long After Their Little Mistress Was Buried.

The last scenes of a pathetic little drama and tragedy, in which canary birds were conspicuous actors, was recently enacted in a little city. Three canaries are under the sod in one grave at Ekerty, Ind. Some time ago Minnie Fay, a charmig little girl, died. She had been sick for some time, and death came as a relief. During her long sickness the three feathered friends had been three canary birds, which occupied a cage jut over her bed where she could see them.

There they sung to her their best songs, and there she watched them with the kindliest devotion. As she became weaker and weaker the birds seemed to notice that something momentous was at hand. As she neared death she became very nervous, and the little songs of her canaries, instead of pleasing her, annoyed her. At last one day she became very nervous, and when the birds began to sing she interrupted them by exclaiming nervously: "Oh, hush, Dick." The birds seemed to understand either the look, tone or words of their mistress and immediately stopped. The little girl died the next day.

Either the harh command or the loss of their mistress affected them so seriously that Dick died three days later, a week later another died and a few days later the last one dropped from his perch and was dead the next morning when found. They had hardly touched food since the command to stop singing. They were laid to rest in little graves made on top of the mound. There always seemed to be the very closest bond between the birds and the invalid, and all think that the birds understood her command and that it caused their death.—Louisville Commercial.

NEW YORK FASHIONS.

The girl of the summer of '98 to be strictly up-to-date must have a separate outfit for every occasion, whether it's for golfing, bicycling, boating or any of the numerous sports now included in the athletic girl's category. Not only must the suit be different but all the accessories, including shoes and hat, are made on altogether separate lines for the various occasions.

But in spite of this outlay of sporting togs which constitute such a large part of the wardrobe, it is the dainty gowns to be donned for the ball or dance in the evening and which are included in the trunks of even the most masculine girl, that certainly get the most attention.

These gowns are not by any means a small item. The materials which compose them are so gauzy and perishable that it takes quite a number to get through a season at mountain or seaside. But the girl of high ambitions and slender purse need not tremble at this prophecy, for there are many materials which can be bought at quite a reasonable figure and when daintily made and trimmed prove quite an excellent substitute for the filmy confections of chiffon and gauze.

And certain it is that on no garment does the present mode of lavish decorations show to better advantage. Whether tucks, flounces or embroideries are employed, all are in good taste and lend to make the gown more attractive.

The skirts of these frocks are all made dancing length, and when composed of some very transparent material have an underskirt of soft silk. Stiff linings are never employed as the rule, or nearly all the summer gowns and especially those intended for evening or party wear, is to have a graceful, clinging effect. In many cases fine lawn skirts in dainty shades take the place of the silk petticoat and prove very effective. These skirts are always gored; when they are made with the Spanish flounce, the latter is cut on the straight while the very narrow ruffles are on the bias.

The round waist is the style most preferred this season for dancing dresses, though this style is not very becoming to a full figure. The fullness is all brought to the front leaving the sides and back perfectly smooth. These corsages are in nearly all cases made decollete while small puffs or merely straps over the shoulders are used in lieu of sleeves. White suede gloves reaching nearly to the shoulder are considered in best taste, although any of the dainty shades matching the gown are allowable.

A great variety of girdles are worn and in spite of the fact that the long sash has been doomed it is safe to predict that many of these accessories in chiffon and net will be worn this summer with the lovely evening gowns.

A very simple gown of embroidered chiffon has the bodice made in surplice fashion, the material arranged in narrow pumngs and trimmed with bouillonnes of white chiffon. Plain white chiffon is also employed to fill in the top of the corsage. The small puffs which constitute the sleeves have ruffles of the material over them and a smart bow of orange colored ribbon is fastened at the left shoulder. The skirt mounted on a silk lining is finished at the bottom with three ruffles headed with a chiffon ruche.

Another lovely gown or rose colored crepe de chine has the corsage made perfectly plain and with full pouches in front. A crushed belt of black velvet girdles the waist and gives the finishing touch.

A pretty model is of soft cream silk sprigged with coral. The gored skirt is made perfectly plain and is worn over a silk petticoat. The corsage has a round decolletage and is trimmed on the right side with three overlapping revers of coral satin covered with cream lace. A sash of black chiffon girdles the waist and flares at the left side with a knot and graceful long ends.

Fans for the summer are medium sized and of spangled mousselaine de soie in white and colors. The dainty Empire fan is still very popular and the pretty Watteau fans made of white boiling cloth on which are Cupids flying, with wreaths of flowers strewn here and there are particularly fascinating.

Fashionable Dress Goods.

Vienna cashmere in exquisite tones and semi-tones, as fine and soft of surface as India silk, is made into ideal gowns for demi-dress wear. Some of the models are combined with faille or taffeta the shade of the cashmere, others are decorated with silk gimp, ribbon, milliners' folds, ruches, or gathered or pleated frills, and most of the newest gowns of this material have knee-deep skirt trimmings. For a figure not too tall, a skirt of fine sheer cashmere accordion pleated its entire length in black, gray, or cream white, is a very pretty and graceful one to select to wear with fancy waists of every kind and color.

A Good Suggestion.

The suggestion was made by a teacher at a housekeeping class that an old scrap or peach basket lined with paper muslin, whose smooth finish would shed the dust particles easily, is of great value to the chambermaid as she goes through the rooms brushing up a little here and there. Into such a basket the dustpan can be frequently emptied, and the former can finally be carried off without losing its contents, as often happens where a roll of paper is used.

An old rusty pen left in the ink-bottle will be of service in attracting the corroding matter from other pens in use.

A Stylish Calling Gown.

Embroidery continues to be greatly in favor on many gowns, and few costumes are complete without a touch of it.

An effective visiting gown is here shown, composed of a medium shade of gray smooth faced cloth, elaborately embroidered. The skirt has the popular dip in the back, which is left perfectly plain. Panels of embroidery decorate either side of the front and are bordered with bands of velvet, which grow wider toward the bottom of the skirt. This mode of trimming is also carried out on the bodice, forming a jacket effect. The close fitting sleeves are elaborately embroidered and finished with a cuff of black velvet. Black velvet also constitutes the girdle which fastens on the left side with a dainty buckle.

Where Needles Are Made.

English needles are now sold all over the world, but their manufacture, after being kept secret for many years, is thought to us in 1898 by Christopher Greening. At Redditch alone twenty thousand people make more than one hundred million needles in a year, and, as they are made and exported so cheaply, England has no rival in the industry, and to all intents and purposes monopolises the trade. In the old days needle-making killed tens of thousands of operatives owing to their inhalation of fine particles of steel, but an invention by which an air-blast drives away the filings from the grindstone, has removed this danger, and the occupation has in consequence become absolutely safe. One of the most interesting of the processes is needle-making is the drilling of the eye, and it is the boast in one factory that one of the drillers is so expert that he can perforate a hair and thread it with itself. Another very interesting fact in connection with the industry is that whilst all the ordinary needles used in America are supplied by Great Britain, nearly all the sewing-machine needles used in Great Britain come from America.

Why Rain Falls.

The reason why rain falls is that whenever warm, vapour-laden air arrives in positions where it gets rapidly chilled, the vapor fails through the cold air to the earth, cold air being unable to support as much floating vapor as warm air. A hundredth part of a grain of aqueous vapor over the amount that the air will support is sufficient to cause rainfall. Any chill will produce rain. It occurs when a moist warm wind blows in from the ocean upon cold stretches of land, where dense vapor-laden winds are pressed up the slopes of abruptly-rising hills, and whenever warm moist winds are saturated with cold blasts in the various movements of the atmosphere. Even a cold dry wind may bring on rain, if it blows suddenly upon a mass of warm and vapor-saturated air.

The Triple Cape.

The triple cape promises to be very popular this season. Besides being a very handy garment it has a natty, stylish appearance. These capes are made quite short, barely reaching to the elbow.

An attractive model of tan smooth faced cloth has each cape outlined with a narrow couching. Three rows of stitching is also employed for a trimming. The capes could be either lined with silk or for summer wear it would be better to merely face the edges.

The hat worn with this cape of black straw has a rolled brim and is turned up at the left side and trimmed with three tips and an aigrette.

Gas-burners should now and then be cleaned out with a piece of wire or a long pin to clear out any impurities or dust accumulation.

ONE KIND OF COURAGE.

It Gained Two Enemies for a Lieutenant in the Confederate Army

"Courage on the battlefield is not the only thing that makes a soldier," said an ex-Confederate officer. "It is very easy for a man to be brave when he is shoulder to shoulder with his comrades, but it is different on other occasions. It reminds me of an incident that came under my notice during the late war. One day the Captain of a company received word that Union soldiers had taken possession of a big mansion, and it was thought that some of the soldiers had been left behind concealed in the building. A Lieutenant and two privates were immediately detailed to make an investigation. They reached the place easily. The lower floor was examined, but nothing appeared to be wrong further than the removal of a few valuables. The family had fled at the approach of the enemy. The men crept up the stairs and looked over the second story. It was the same as on the first. In the hall, however, there was a ladder leading to a trap door in the garret. The door was swinging down and it was evident that some one had climbed up to the ceiling. The Lieutenant said that the garret would have to be searched. He told a private to go first.

"The privats refused absolutely. He said it was certain death and that if he was a soldier he did not expect to have his head smashed open simply to look for a Union spy. He said he would take his punishment at camp, but he would not stick his head through the trap door. The second private was told to close the swinging door. He refused. His reason was that he had a wife and children at home and it was not brave-ry to stick his head in the fire.

"Without a word the lieutenant climbed the ladder and poked his head in the doorway. It was very dark and he shut his eyes, expecting every moment to have a big axe slash out his brains. He remained there a half-minute and then went down, closing the door after him. He told the privates that he would not report their cowardice to the Captain, but during the remainder of the war those two privates were the bitterest enemies the Lieutenant ever had. It was human nature, I suppose, for them to hate him."—New York Sun.

CHAMPION LADY SHOT.

She Hits Quail on the Wing and Rabbits on the Jump.

Miss Maude May, a charming young lady of Joplin, Mo., can justly lay claim to being the champion huntress of the Southwest, and is one of the most expert lady shots with the shotgun in the United States. Although only in her teens, Miss May can easily drop the fleetest flying quail or prairie chicken at long range, and her work in the field would make many an old hunter envious of her wonderful marksmanship, steady nerve and quick eye. She is also a great rabbit killer, and has yet to miss her first rabbit. In a hunt with her father, Capt. Ben May, last winter, this young huntress killed thirty-four rabbits without a miss, all of them being on a dead run when hit.

Miss May is just finishing her course in school, but often takes time to accompany her father on his hunts, with her well-trained setter, and never fails to give a good account of herself in the field. She has yet to kill a deer, but is preparing to go with her father to the Indian Territory next season, to try her skill with deer and bear.

DESIRE OF THE DRUG CLERK.

Parting Request to a Customer in Search of a Mixture to Cure a Cold.

The Long Acre drug clerk was coughing and sneezing when the young lady with the astrakhan cape hung carelessly over her arm stepped in.

"I want something for a cough," she said.

The clerk sniffed and sneezed and then wiped the tears from his eyes.

"I see you have a cough too," she ventured.

"O yes, horrible," he replied, and then he showed her a bottle labelled "Our own cough mixture, guaranteed to cure the most stubborn cases of cold or cough of years' standing."

"Is that good?"

"Best in this market," he answered. When he had finished another attack of coughing and sneezing she asked the price.

"One dollar a bottle."

"You may wrap me up a bottle."

He did so, and after she had paid the money she emerged from the door he called her back.

"Madam," he said, "it that should help you any I would be pleased to have you come back and let me know."

And then he began coughing again.

A JAPANESE WALT WHITMAN.

A Budding Poet of the Orient Accused of Imitating Our Western Sage.

Yone Noguchi, a young Japanese living in California, and educated in this country, is beginning to be recognized as a true poet. He has been accused of imitating Walt Whitman; but as the Chrysanthemum, a Japanese-American publication of San Francisco, says "Coincidence is not necessarily plagiarism, and Poe and Walt Whitman borrowed from the vague Orient."

Noguchi's muse is much influenced by Buddhism, and naturally he has the spirit of the Far East. The poetry of the young Japanese shows every now and then the crudities of youth and *breaks out occasionally into a morbid*ness such as is found in the poems of all young men with the "divine afflatus," whether they are born in Japan or London.

Noguchi is a prolific writer; perhaps it would be better if he wrote less and leveled more time to "polishing up" what he did write. An example of how much young poets fall over the world is the lavish praise bestowed by a recent poem of Noguchi's called "The Night Revenie in the Forest," recently published in the Chrysanthemum.

He begins as follows:

Thou my tears that I sucked from the breast of Truth—tears, sister spirits of Heaven's smile!" sobs the Wind.

Thou pale Wind, tear-vender of the hideous sight, who welcomes thee with thy unsold tears!

Thou Gypsy-Wind, my fellow-wanderer of years light, cease thy plaintive strain of the sweet home, ever lost!

At the end he wails:

Make my grave under the greenest grass, and carve this line: "Here sleeps a nameless poet."

Now there never was a youthful poet in the world who at some time did not express a like desire. Of course the fulfillment of the wish is the last thing he young man wants, but he takes the greatest possible satisfaction in pervading himself that he does.

Yone Noguchi has the true poetic ouch and apparently a future before im which will prevent his self-selected pitaph from appearing on his tombstone. Here is a poem of his from he Chrysanthemum called a "Frag ment":

h, weariness, where my soul sobs in ecstasy! The gray-robed fogs stray as fairies from a forgotten grave.

h, my heart carols on in fantastic dream as when my love's shadow sweetens me!

he sun has sunk. The unresting silence fills the heart of Eve, who begins to sob under the mantle of night.

Wouldn't Take His Case.

When Lincoln became a lawyer, he carried to the bar his habitual honesty. His associates were often surprised by his utter disregard of self-interest, while they could not admire his conscientious scruples, they all considered right. One day a stranger called to ecure his services.

"State your case," said Lincoln.

A history of the case was given, when Lincoln astonished him by saying,—

"I cannot serve you; for you are wrong, and the other party is right."

"Now, Mr. Lincoln, that is my business, if I ire and pay you for taking the case," etorted the man.

"Not my business!" exclaimed Lincoln. My business is never to defend wrong, if I am a lawyer. I never undertake a case that is manifestly wrong."

"Well, you can make trouble for the ellow," added the applicant.

"Yes," replied Lincoln, fully aroused, "there is no doubt that I can gain the ase for you, and set a whole neighborhood at loggerheads, I can distress widowed mother and her six fatherless children, and,thereby get for you dx hundred dollars, which rightly belongs as much to the woman and her children as it does to you; but I won't to it."

"Not for any amount of pay?" continued the stranger.

"Not for all you are worth," replied Lincoln. "You must remember that some things which are legally right are not morally right. I shall not take your case."

"I don't care a snap whether you do or not!" exclaimed the man angrily, starting to go.

"I will give you a piece of advice without charge," added Lincoln. "You seem to be a sprightly, energetic man. I would advise you to make six hundred dollars some other way."

THE BETH BOOK.

The Author of "The Heavenly Twins" Writes Another Novel.

"Madame" Sarah Grand, for somehow we do not say "Mrs." Sarah Grand has, as far as the name goes, a kind of imperative sound, because it is associated with that pompous King Louis XIV., called in history "le Grand."

If, however, Sarah Grand as a writer of very remarkable romances is known to the world, her individuality is not.

Francis Elizabeth Cook was born in England, and, strange to say, her family were Irish Quakers. Her girlhood was spent in Yorkshire. At a very early age she married an officer in the English Navy, who was a widower with two children. As Mrs. McFall she followed her husband's fortunes and spent her young married life in various foreign countries. As a girl she wrote verse and stories. Her first accepted story was for an English juvenile publication, "Aunt Judy." Sarah Grand as a pen name she assumed at the start. "Ideala" was published in 1888, followed by "Singularly Deluded." There is good evidence that although at the outset her fiction drew attention, Sarah Grand found some difficulty in placing "The Heavenly Twins" with a publisher. In 1893 the fastidious Spectator wrote a full column about "Ideala," and in the same year The London Chronicle gave "Singularly Deluded" much praise. This latter book was published by the Blackwoods. The romance which brought the author most conspicuously before the public was "The Heavenly Twins," issued first by Cassell in 1893. Sarah Grand's last work is "The Beth Book," just issued by the Messrs. D. Appleton & Co.

Sarah Grand is a remarkably handsome woman, with light hair, blue eyes, and of a commanding presence. The name she has selected is the one used exclusively by those who are her intimates, and she signs "Sarah Grandt" to all her correspondence.

EIDER DUCK FARMS IN ICELAND.

About 10,000 Pounds of Eiderdown are Collected Annually in Iceland.

All accounts formerly given about elder ducks say that nests are robbed of their down twice, the duck supplying it each time from her own body; The third time the drake gives his white down, and this is allowed to remain. Now it is stated, however, that by low this custom no longer but wait until the little ones are hatched. It has been found that the birds thrive better and increase faster when they are allowed to live as nature meant them to do. So now the poor mothers are no longer obliged to strip themselves of all their down to refurnish their despoiled nests. Sometimes if the quantity is very great a little may be taken, but enough must be left to cover the eggs when the duck leaves her nest for food.

About 10,000 pounds of eiderdown are gathered annually in Iceland, 7,000 being exported to foreign countries. Formerly the peasants used to receive over 21 shillings a pound, but the price has now fallen to less than amount. The peasants seldom receive money and are obliged to barter their down for merchandise furnished by the Danish merchants at the little settlements at the fjords. A pound and a half of down is enough to fill an ordinary bedquilt. Thicker and more comfortable articles are found in the guestroom of every Icelandic farm, however poor and small it may be.—Good Words.

The Czar's Car.

The height of luxurious traveling has been reached by the czar and czarina. The empress' private car is upholstered in pale blue satin. The electric lamps are all in the form of lilies, and it contains writing and tea tables made of mother-of-pearl. There are dining rooms and drawing rooms and several sleeping apartments; in fact, this train is a miniature palace. The wheels are covered with india rubber tires.—Tit Bits.

ATE WHEN AND WHAT HE WANTED

And Has Lived to the Great Old Age of One Hundred and Two Years.

"What advice would you give to people who want to live long?" The question was popped at the oldest veteran in the world, Captain Jack Haynes, of St. Louis, who, on Christmas, was 110 years old.

"I would advise them to eat everything they like, as I have done," was the sturdy reply. If there is any secret of his long life, it is to be found in his cheerful disposition. He doesn't worry, and never has done so. He is ready to go from earth at any time. Asked "Do you want to live longer?" he replied, "It is all in the hands of my Heavenly Father. If He wants me to live longer, I am contented to stay. If He wants me to come up higher, I am ready."

Captain Haynes still keeps his interest in the affairs of the world, but events pass before him as in a dream. He sees what is going on, but it doesn't affect him. Although he doesn't expect to be here to see whether his prophecy is fulfilled or not, he predicts that the next ten years will bring forth an industrial revolution, "unless the present trend of things is stopped."

The captain is unable to account for his long life. "I never had any ideas about how to live," he says; "I never have taken unusually good care of myself. My work often subjected me to exposure, but that doesn't seem to have hurt me. I never had a bad spell of sickness until I had the grip here last year, and when I was a boy they used to call it 'jail fever.' I always have many times I have been where there was contagious disease, even yellow fever on the Mississippi boat on which I was running, but I never was caught.

"As to eating, I always ate whenever and whatever I wanted, and when I was a child at times I lived pretty high. I never have smoked, but up to five years ago I used 10 cents worth of chewing tobacco a day. When I came to the home I gave up that habit, because it is so dirty. I always have drank when I felt like it, but never to excess."

Captain Haynes volunteered in his little Tennessee town for the War of 1812, and, was with Jackson when the veterans of Pakenham were hurried back from the cotton ramparts of New Orleans. "It was there," he said, "that I got my nickname of "Captain Jack. General Andy Jackson gave it to me, and it has clung to me ever since. The General and he were left alone. Since then his disposition has been melancholy.

Perhaps from disappointment, perhaps from a morbid taste imbued by his solitary life, Fritz at two years old began to attend funerals. No one objected, his behavior was above reproach, and gradually the picture of the little black and white dog, walking mournfully along in his favorite position just behind the coffin, grew familiar. Now it has come to pass that no funeral is complete without Fritz. Just as soon as the chapel bell rings, no matter where Fritz is, he rushes to the spot from where he knows the coffin will be taken. However excited he is, he never barks, and once inside the walls of the cemetery, he never barks at all.

Usually, also, he lies down by the gravedigger when a grave is being opened, and a story is told of him by one of Superintendent Reef's men that during one rainy night Fritz's loud yelping, not barking, but wailing, was heard continually. No one paid any attention to it, but next morning Fritz was found beside a grave which had been made the afternoon before, and which had caved in during the night on account of the rain.

The best thing about Fritz is that no matter whether it is a $25 funeral, with just a hearse and no carriages, or a $250 funeral, with twenty carriages, he shows just as much respect for the dead in one case as the other. He is not a snob by any means.—Philadelphia Press.

A Heroic Remedy.

There is a little boy in Colorado Springs who, according to Facts, likes to help entertain his mother's visitors, and eagerly listens to the conversation. Tommy also has an aunt of whom he is very fond and who has a bad cold, causing him much anxiety. A few days ago, while his mother was comparing notes on housekeeping with a friend, Tommy thought he heard something which would cure Aunt Susie's cold. About supper time he disappeared, which, however, did not excite any comment. The family sat down to supper and one by one the dishes were tasted and set aside until each member began to wonder what ailed the cook. Tommy's expression convinced them that he could throw something, which, however, did not excite any comment. The family sat down to supper and one by one the dishes were tasted and set aside until each member began to wonder what ailed the cook. Tommy's expression convinced them that he could throw something, which, however, did when cornered had to admit that he had put red pepper into every dish while the cook was out, because Mrs. ——— said red pepper was good for the ants, and he wanted to cure Aunt Susie.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat

A Child's Philosophy.

The children had come home from Sunday-school, where they had heard something, they did not know very clearly what, but something which made them think there might be something very unusual happening soon in the way of a sudden cessation of worldly activities and a putting on of celestial garments, the latter taking form in their minds as wings. So they went to mamma to talk it over.

"I don't think it would be nice at all," said the oldest little girl, referring to the wings; "just think of having to fly and not walking at all."

"But you could walk," said the practical little sister, "don't chickens have wings and don't they walk?"

Fritz is a Graveyard Dog.

Fritz is not a prepossessing dog by any means. He is not a thoroughbred, and is not well groomed, but in his own line there is not a dog in the whole country like him. That line is graveyards, and Fritz is a "graveyard" dog. He has been to over 2,000 funerals, and will probably see as many again before he himself joins the great majority of dead canines.

Six years ago Fritz was born in the American Mechanics' Cemetery, at Twenty-second and Diamond streets. The exact place of his birth was under the little chapel where the last prayers are said over the dead, and in this melancholy atmosphere Fritz grew up. Fritz's mother disappeared after his birth and he was left alone. Since then his disposition has been melancholy.

Perhaps from disappointment, perhaps from a morbid taste imbued by his solitary life, Fritz at two years old began to attend funerals. No one objected, his behavior was above reproach, and gradually the picture of the little black and white dog, walking mournfully along in his favorite position just behind the coffin, grew familiar. Now it has come to pass that no funeral is complete without Fritz. Just as soon as the chapel bell rings, no matter where Fritz is, he rushes to the spot from where he knows the coffin will be taken. However excited he is, he never barks, and once inside the walls of the cemetery, he never barks at all.

Usually, also, he lies down by the gravedigger when a grave is being opened, and a story is told of him by one of Superintendent Reef's men that during one rainy night Fritz's loud yelping, not barking, but wailing, was heard continually. No one paid any attention to it, but next morning Fritz was found beside a grave which had been made the afternoon before, and which had caved in during the night on account of the rain.

The best thing about Fritz is that no matter whether it is a $25 funeral, with just a hearse and no carriages, or a $250 funeral, with twenty carriages, he shows just as much respect for the dead in one case as the other. He is not a snob by any means.—Philadelphia Press.

A Heroic Remedy.

There is a little boy in Colorado Springs who, according to Facts, likes to help entertain his mother's visitors, and eagerly listens to the conversation. Tommy also has an aunt of whom he is very fond and who has a bad cold, causing him much anxiety. A few days ago, while his mother was comparing notes on housekeeping with a friend, Tommy thought he heard something which would cure Aunt Susie's cold. About supper time he disappeared, which, however, did not excite any comment. The family sat down to supper and one by one the dishes were tasted and set aside until each member began to wonder what ailed the cook. Tommy's expression convinced them that he could throw something, which, however, did when cornered had to admit that he had put red pepper into every dish while the cook was out, because Mrs. ——— said red pepper was good for the ants, and he wanted to cure Aunt Susie.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat

A Child's Philosophy.

The children had come home from Sunday-school, where they had heard something, they did not know very clearly what, but something which made them think there might be something very unusual happening soon in the way of a sudden cessation of worldly activities and a putting on of celestial garments, the latter taking form in their minds as wings. So they went to mamma to talk it over.

"I don't think it would be nice at all," said the oldest little girl, referring to the wings; "just think of having to fly and not walking at all."

"But you could walk," said the practical little sister, "don't chickens have wings and don't they walk?"

An Arctic School.

The schoolhouse that is nearest the north pole of any on this globe belongs to the United States government. It is at Point Barrow, in that far northern latitude where the American whalers are imprisoned in the ice and where there is only daylight for a couple of hours in midwinter.

The interesting native people called the Innuits live in villages scattered through northern Alaska. They are not a swarthy, squat people like the Eskimos of Greenland. On the contrary, they are a noble looking race, many of them more than six feet high and finely formed. They used to be prosperous, but the white man has invaded their country, captured the food and fur bearing animals and the whales and is were depleting their waters of the fish which form so large a part of their subsistence. The idea of Dr. Sheldon Jackson is that the introduction of great herds of reindeer through Alaska will preserve the Innuit race. They ought to be preserved certainly for their virtues, for a more honest, gentle and at the same time brave and manly race never lived. In winter they inhabit caves dug in the warm earth.

When the school was opened at Point Barrow, it became very popular almost at once. Old and young Innuits swarmed to the building. They came between 6 and 7 in the morning and remained all day, so anxious were they to learn. The teachers find that in one winter the Innuit children learn to read, write and speak English. It is to be observed, however, that a winter up there is considerably longer than it is in this part of the country. The young Innuits are very clever at drawing and on the whole are quite as intelligent as the average white American young one. These people can be far more easily civilized than the red Indian. We must not let them perish.

In the Sudan.

The stirring times in our own land have caused us to almost lose sight of the brilliant progress made by the British up the Nile and the consequently nearing doom of the Mahdi. The job General Gordon should have been helped by the British government to finish 14 years ago will be completed this year. Stranger even than the spectacle witnessed in the fighting on the Afghanistan border was that in the battle in which dervish camp was attacked and routed by the English. The prophet's forces had come out from Khartum in the name of God to defeat the infidel invader. On the dervish side the hordes of fierce, swarthy barbarians waited in camp. On the British side the army marched up the Athara river to meet the dervish. The attacking army was picturesque in the extreme. It was made up almost equally of three races of men, and they all were full of valor and steadied by discipline. There were the British force with its serried ranks of white men, next the slender brown Egyptians, whose ancestors drove Moses into the Red Sea, and finally the native Sudanese, thick lipped, woolly haired negroes. The trouncing this three branched host of fighting men gave the Mahdi is one he will not forget. Before midsummer the railroad to Berber will be completed. Then the final fall of Khartum will be only a matter of a little time.

An invention has been perfected for use among army bicyclists that is available and most desirable for civilian wheelmen also. The one thing lacking in the construction of the bicycle is that when a rider wishes to stop to admire the scenery along the road or to swallow a cooling soda he must always be at the trouble of dismounting and mounting again, which in a small space is not always easy or convenient. The invention mentioned consists of a rest which can be utilized in a moment and which will keep the wheel steady in its place without falling over while the soldier cyclist can without leaving his seat load and fire his rifle as long as he likes. With this attachment one need not brace his bicycle against the curbstone, lean it against a tree or the side of a house or lay it sprawling upon the ground. He will simply adjust the said rest, which when not in use is fastened to the crank axle, and sit firmly and safe upon his bicycle till he is ready to move. The rest weighs a pound.

Changing Inauguration Day.

The joint resolution which passed the senate making presidential inauguration day May 4 instead of March 4 will meet with much favor throughout the country. It passed the senate by more than the necessary majority. It will be two years at least, however, before the amendment to the United States constitution becomes part of the supreme law of the land. After being put through congress and, receiving the president's signature, it must be ratified by the necessary majority of all the states. Many of them have only biennial legislatures and next winter will be the off year with a number of them.

The reason for the change is the very bad weather which frequently afflicts presidential inaugurations on the 4th of March. Custom requires that the president in taking the oath shall stand bareheaded at the east front of the capitol in the presence of 200,000 of his fellow countrymen, more or less, who wait to see how he does it. If the skies weep, these must stand under dripping umbrellas and run the risk of getting colds and pneumonia. It is not uncommon for deaths to result from the exposure to weather endured by zealous citizens anxious to see the show. This was especially noted following Cleveland's second inauguration, when the rain was heavy enough to flood an ark.

March is the gemster month in the worst month in the year in this Union, even in localities so far south as Washington. We ought to have sunshine and blue skies for our presidents when they are inaugurated to make up for some of the disagreeable things they have to encounter afterward. The American people will therefore quite largely favor changing inauguration day to the merry month of May. The only objection we have heard offered is from a disappointed man who said that making May 4 inauguration day would keep congress hanging around Washington two months longer.

Unique Military Company.

On the whole, one of the most remarkable military companies in the volunteer army is that organized in New Orleans under the name of the Times-Democrat Rifles. The war editor caught the staff of this able journal from the city editor down to the office boy. With the modesty characteristic of newspaper men every where, The Times-Democrat staff elected themselves officers, leaving outsiders to come in and occupy the two or three places left for private soldiers. The captain of the Times-Democrat Rifles is the night editor of the paper, while the city editor is the first lieutenant of the company. The mail clerk, telegraph editor and machinist are the three sergeants in the order mentioned. There seemed thus no officer's place left for the reporters, but they elected themselves corporals to a man and all are happy. There is in connection with this gallant company one fact which will make it invaluable on the field apart from the manly qualities of the men themselves. This is that the members are every one yellow fever immunes. They can go alike with the native Cuban into the most dangerous districts and escape infection.

In all the army there will be no braver, shrewder troop than this, and their newspaper brethren hope they will come back safe and every one a colonel. But who is going to get out the paper? Will they lock up the office and put this notice on the outside, "Closed till after the war?"

We are making history so rapidly now that events even of a month ago are far away back numbers. Still a bit of back history which is intensely interesting is recalled by Dr. Shaw in The Review of Reviews. The people of this country believed that the president's war message was going to congress for certain Wednesday, April 6. It did not go till Monday, April 11. Dr. Shaw claims it to be a fact that the message was held back at the request of Pope Leo, who earnestly desired to make one more effort to bring Spain to time. There was nothing discreditable in our government's granting this request. The point objected to by Dr. Shaw, however, is that the American people were kept in ignorance of the real reason for the delay. There was no reason why they should not have been told, especially as the bankers of Wall street and the money centers of Europe knew of the fact and used it to their advantage. The Review says: "European governments are adepts at the game of diplomatic mystery, but our government at Washington is not organized for that kind of business. With us nothing succeeds half so well as downright frankness."

The leading character sketch in Stead's next Review of Reviews will do up "Uncle Sam." 'Tis well. Stead's most brilliant historic faculty is his imagination, and here it will have boundless play, unhampered by clumsy facts. W. T. Stead's heart is right; his imagination is as brilliant and roaring as the vasty deep, his discriminative faculty not worth a Spanish promise.

When a man makes a place for himself, a place is always immediately made for him. Thus an additional rear admiralship, making the whole number seven instead of six, was created by congress for George Dewey.

At any rate Spain goes down fighting like a rat every inch of the way.

Prize Ring Murders.

Since the beginning of this year two men have been killed while engaged in prizefight exhibitions and two others nearly so. Both the killings were attended with circumstances peculiarly horrible and revolting to any mind except that of a brute. The first prize ring murder of this year, that of Henry Braun, occurred in March at Trenton. The second prize killing came off at Columbus, O., where the "Omaha Kid" beat the life out of George Stout by the application of Jim Sullivan's favorite blow, which the ex-champion himself describes as "hitting him under the jaw." The thump which finished Stout was so awful that it caused blood clots on the brain. The murdered man's head hung limp and wabbly while his friends rubbed and slapped him and tried to brace him up and make him fight again. Nothing more ghastly or frightful was ever witnessed anywhere. Yet this fight was strictly a "given contest," in which the men never hurt each other—oh, no!—and it occurred, moreover, under a permit from the mayor of the capital city of Ohio.

Whether prizefights are more bloody, brutal and dangerous than they used to be or whether mankind is growing weaker one cannot say, but it is certain that prize ring killings are becoming more and more numerous. Eight men met their death in the prize ring in 1897, all of them but one in the United States. This was two more than in all the three years before. In 1893 there were five. For five years previous to 1893 there were, all told, seven. Up to 1876 deaths in the prize ring were comparatively unknown, but since then they have been increasing so rapidly that it is time for civilized people to put the weight of a powerful public opinion upon these contests and suppress them altogether.

Gambling and drunkenness attend these exhibitions on the outside of the ring and beastlike ferocity inside. We consider a Spanish bullfight as the most savage spectacle witnessed among the entertainments of civilized people, but it is no whit worse than a prizefight between human beings. It is not even as dangerous to human life as an American prizefight, if recent contests between human animals in this country are fair samples. Such contests are no proof, either, of manly courage or power.

So far as can be judged on the face of it, the agreement entered into between Russia and Japan concerning Korea is quite as favorable to Japan as to Russia. By this protocol both nations mutually engage to refrain from all interference in the internal affairs of the Hermit Kingdom. Neither will give advice or assistance to Korea, even if applied to by her, without notifying and consulting the other contracting power. Recognizing the heavy commercial and industrial interests of Japan in Korea, Russia further binds herself alone to do nothing that will prevent the growth and development of this trade. This is not at all magnanimous on the part of Russia when it remembers that Japan is fairly whipped China and was as fairly entitled to take on herself the whole suzerainty of Korea. Still, considering that Russia might have driven Japan out of the kingdom altogether, the concession is something. We may now hope that the civilizing and industrial development of Korea will proceed henceforth by orderly stages.

It is not well or wise for England and Russia to quarrel. From present indications there are to be three great nations on the globe. They are England, the United States and Russia. Awakened Russia is making such strides in civilization that it will not be long till she is abreast of us. The United States does not want to fool that in order to be friendly with her good friend Russia she must show the cold shoulder to England. It has been long since we have heard much of Russian political cruelty and outrage, and these will become less and less as the people become enlightened and the authorities learn that neither violence nor trickery is necessary to govern a civilized nation. There is plenty of room in Asia for both Russia and England. It is manifest that they will divide it between them practically if not by actual annexation. Let them now agree to do so in a friendly way and cease to watch each other with hostile suspicion.

A woman writer suggests that where men clerks, telegraph operators, etc., desire to enlist and serve their country in the ranks their places be filled with patriotic women who will discharge their duties while they are in the field and turn their desks over to them when they return. There is much in this suggestion. Patriotic women always wish to do something for their country, and here seems an efficient way of gratifying their desire. During the civil war hundreds of places were opened to women that their sex had never filled before, and the same course can be taken with equally good results now.

A cable dispatch says that James Gordon Bennett's yacht was chased by a Spaniard while bearing its owner on a pleasure cruise along the Mediterranean shores. How dare the Spaniards chase James Gordon Bennett's pleasure yacht? Do they not know they might be called to account for violating the law of neutrality? None could mistake James Gordon Bennett for an American.

A Yukon Craft.

We do not know whether the St. Louis company that built the boat will realize 500 per cent on their investment, as they expect to, but they certainly have constructed something unusual in the way of a light draft steamboat. St. Louis builders have had much experience in light draft boat making, and their craft ought to be a success. The vessel is 150 feet long and 26 feet wide. She will carry 275 passengers and 500 tons freight and her hull is double. With all this it is declared that when fully loaded she only draws three feet of water.

Her unusual buoyancy is produced by a double hull arrangement. If she is a success, her model will be a good one for the United States government to follow in constructing lightest draft gunboats. Inside her outer steel hull of 26 feet beam the St. Louis steamboat has another one of 20 feet beam. The space between them is occupied by airtight compartments, which are expected to lift the vessel like a feather. The hull and machinery will be very powerful.

A feature highly illustrative of the American way of doing things is the fact that this unique craft is built in sections and will be shipped thus to St. Michael's. There the sections will be put together and the boat set to plying up and down the Yukon. If, again, the United States could only have acted some time ago on the suggestion here given and have had several first class cruisers thus built in sections which could be packed up and shipped from Philadelphia to San Francisco right quick, it would be a great help just now. Perhaps we shall be able to do that by and by.

Japanese Labor Troubles.

If any proof were yet wanting that Japan is learning the ways of civilization, it would be afforded in the fact that she has her hands full of strikes and labor troubles. One of the first effects of the opening of Japan to foreign trade was a general rise in the prices of living. Why this should be so it is hard to see, but it is always thus when a place comparatively out of the world suddenly comes into public notice.

With the rise in prices of living Japanese laborers, who worked for a few cents a day, found they could no longer get even their humble food and clothing with such pittances as they had formerly received. Then the disturbances began. Another factor helped on. As the Japanese became accustomed to foreigners and their styles the little brown men and women themselves began to want this, that and the other. Used to be dissatisfied with the poor, hard standard of living which had been their lot so many centuries. This, while really a sign of progress, increased the labor troubles. The factory operatives that have been put to work on the cotton and other machinery imported from Europe and the United States are the hardest to manage. The long, intense strain which the hand of man puts on labor, which western operatives are so familiar with, stupefies and breaks down the simple Jap at first. In old Japanese days the workman took a quarter hour's rest every two hours, and he cannot at first accustom himself to the new order of working straight through without stopping. Therefore he rebels or breaks down.

The Annette islands are one of the little groups along the Alaskan coast. A number of years ago Mr. William Duncan, a missionary, settled there with some Metlakahtlan Indians. There have been found in the far northwest tribes of so called Indians who are of a different race from our red savages and who have proved themselves capable of civilization. The Metlakahtlans are such a tribe. A few years ago the islands were given to these Indians by the United States for their allotted home. They began under the guidance of Mr. Duncan and built houses and entered on various industries. They have a church and school house, a town hall, and, what is much more, a soap factory. Any people that possess and run a soap factory are in a very advanced state of civilization indeed. These people are mechanics, merchants and agriculturists, and their place was granted to them by the United States government. They occupy their land in common. Now some blatant Americans in congress with more zeal than sense want to enter into this Eden and split up the lands and throw them open to settlement. It is an outrage. The Metlakahtlans are among the best citizens of this country and should be left alone as long as they live. A system which was the approved one among the early Christians is good enough today where it has proved its success.

An often quoted remark from General Sherman is this: "War is hell." While he knew this he recognized that if war had to be made at all the hotter it was made the better and the sooner it would be over. He believed in no delay or hesitation once a thing had been decided on. The energetic manner in which this war has been opened and conducted thus far by the United States would call forth the enthusiasm and admiration of the old hero if he could know about it.

"Spain fights for glory, the Americans for money," says a Spanish newspaper. Spain is certainly welcome to all the glory she will get out of this war.

A FIGHT FROM WAR TALK

NICK KELLY WAYLAID AND BEATEN SATURDAY NIGHT.

Kelly Thought to Have Struck Lewis Durand Several Days Ago for Having Said Something About England and Ireland.

Because Lewis F. Durand was outspoken in his loyalty to the United States, and made use of an expression more forcible than polite in regard to England and Ireland, he was struck in the face by some hot-headed foreigner in a saloon a few nights since. Durand was not able to tell the City Judge who had struck him, when he was arraigned in the City court Monday morning, but Nick Kelly accused him and Thomas and Phil Sheridan with waylaying him in the Boulevard Saturday night and assaulting him on the supposition that Kelly was the guilty one.

It was about eleven o'clock when the alleged assault occurred. Officer Myers was patroling his beat near Plainfield avenue and Third street. Suddenly he heard the sounds if a struggle, and then he saw Kelly on his back on the ground with the two Sheridan boys and Durand on top of him. All four were arrested and locked up to await the arrival of the judge this morning.

Durand was loud in his denials of having been anywhere near the fight, and claimed that he had nothing to do with it. But Kelly and Myers both declared that Durand was the one who struck the first blow as Judge pronounced him guilty. The two Sheridan boys were fined $10 each, and sentence in the cases of Kelly and Durand was reserved for one week.

Annual Decoration Day Outing.

The Central Railroad of New Jersey is again in touch with the public pulse by coming out with the best at traction for next Monday that any seeker after a holiday jaunt could select. It comes in the shape of the annual Decoration Day outing to Mauch Chunk, Glen Onoko and the Switchback Railroad, a truly economical trip for respectable people that love wild scenery, combined in mountain, valley, river and stream, not to speak of the fair Glen Onoko, the queen of all the fairy glens in this region of marvellous scenic attractions. Mauch Chunk is very well known as a resort patronized by high-class people, and there is so much to be seen that each recurring visit finds the visitor face to face with something new. These excursions are personally conducted and patrons are directly under the company's protection. They may be assured of a pleasant time. Attached to special train will be a lunch car, from which food and refreshments can be procured at reasonable rates. Train will leave Plainfield at 9:28 a. m. and return about 8:30 p. m. Adults round-trip tickets are $1.75 children's, $1.31. On sale at company's station.

Decoration Day Excursion to Niagara Falls.

The Lehigh Valley Railroad will sell on May 28th, tickets from South Plainfield to Niagara Falls and return at rate of one fare for the round trip. Tickets good to return to and including May 31st. Consult Lehigh Valley Ticket Agents for further particulars. W 19-26 5 12-16-20-24-26-27

MRS O'DONNELL GUILTY

CONVICTED OF SAME CHARGE HER HUSBAND IS NOW IN JAIL FOR.

Accused of Selling Liquor Without a License—Too Poor to Hire a Lawyer—Judge Will Sentence Her in a Week.

Mrs. Margaret O'Donnell, of South Second street, was tried Tuesday in the City Court for selling liquor without a license and was found guilty. Sentence in her case was deferred for a week.

The two witnesses against the defendant were Joseph Block and Hugo Wlertz, who each swore that they went into Margaret's place on a Sunday, and while one called for a round of drinks the other bought five bottles of beer. Mrs. O'Donnell was not represented by a lawyer and said that she was too poor to hire one. The City Judge listened to the evidence carefully and pronounced her guilty. Mrs. O'Donnell's husband is now serving a term in the county jail for the same offense.

Mrs. O'Donnell was arrested some time ago charged with a similar offense, but the case was never brought to trial.

BAIL JUMPER CAUGHT.

Was Just About to Eat Supper With His Wife When Arrested.

Last October Edward Kober, of the borough, was arrested for beating his wife. He was tried and held for the Grand Jury. George Ball furnished bail in the sum of $100 for his appearance before the Grand Jury. Soon afterward the jury found an indictment and about the same time Kober jumped his bail. Since that time a search has been in progress for Kober. Tuesday evening Chief Wilson received word that Kober was at Muhlenberg Hospital, where his wife is employed. The officer in company with Chief Grant and Patrolman Myers went to the hospital and arrested Kober. They found him just ready to partake of some supper. He was surprised to see the officer and told him that he thought the difficulty had been settled. He was informed that it was not and that he was wanted. He was then placed in the borough lockup.

DR. MANNING'S FUNERAL

TRIBUTES PAID IN WORDS AND TEARS TO A WORTHY MAN.

Medical Association Attended in a Body—Dr. Yerkes Said that He Had Baptized, Married and Buried Dr. Manning.

The last sad words were said and all that was mortal of the late Dr. Andrew Manning was laid to rest in Hillside Monday afternoon. His funeral was held from the house and was largely attended by friends and relatives of the deceased from Somerville, Bound Brook, Westfield and Newark, who came to pay their last respects to the departed.

Seventeen members of the Medical Association, of which Dr. Manning was a member, attended in a body. Before Dr. Manning's death there were twenty-one members of the association. Their offering at the bier was a broken column, typical of the life which was broken in its very prime. A large pillow from the fatherless daughter was also conspicious. The other floral pieces were beautiful, and came from those who had known the doctor intimately and well.

Rev. Dr. Yerkes had charge of the funeral, and his remarks were wonderfully comforting to the widow and those of the doctor's family. Dr. Yerkes said that he had baptized Dr. Manning, had given him the right hand of fellowship and welcomed him into the membership of the First Baptist church, had married him, and now was called upon to perform that saddest of all offices, to bury him. Dr. Yerkes said that in a conversation that he once had with Dr. Manning the latter expressed a desire that Dr. Yerkes would officiate at his funeral.

Dr. Yerkes said that at the time, there being such a difference in their ages, he had no idea that he should out live Dr. Manning.

Dr. Yerkes went on to say that he had known the young intimately, and that he knew of whom he spoke. He spoke highly of the upright christian character which the doctor had always shown, and said that he had understood the heart.

During the services Mrs. Ward, of Elizabeth, sang two solos, "Nearer My God to Thee." and "Abide With Me." The bearers were six cousins of Dr. Manning, James Manning, Howard Randolph, Walter Manning Fred Manning, Warren Randolph and Albert Manning.

A PARLOR ENTERTAINMENT.

Young People of First M. E. Church Gathered at the Pastor's Home.

The young people of the First M. E. church gathered at the parsonage on Central avenue last Monday to a parlor entertainment given by the Young Ladies' Mission Circle, of the church. The programme was an informal one. It consisted of a piano solo by Miss Maud French, a vocal solo by Mrs. Jones, singing by the choir and several readings by the pastor, Rev. Dr. W. C. Snodgrass. The choir sang the patriotic air, "Columbia, the Gem of the Ocean."

The programme was arranged by a committee chairmaned by Miss Persis Snodgrass. Miss Elsie Horne was chairman of the committee that prepared the refreshments that followed the entertainment.

WOULD BURN SOLIDS IN THE SEWAGE FLOW

How Eddy J. Clark Would Do Away With Offense to Nostrils.

HAS PLANS DRAWN UP:

CLAIMS THE SCHEME CAN BE PUT IN OPERATION AT NOMINAL COST.

He Would Build Two Large Vats in the Plant of the Sanitary Company, to be Fed by the Sewer Pipes, and in Which the Solids Would be Allowed to Settle and Then Burned—The Liquid Would be Flowed Onto the Disposal Beds, But Without Bringing an Offensive Smell to Neighborhood.

Eddy J. Clark, the well known civil engineer, has an idea which will be hailed with delight by all Evona and Dunellen citizens, and which, if carried out, may deliver Plainfield from any more suits such as Mrs. Sarah Milligan has begun as a result of the operations of the sewage disposal beds.

Mr. Clark was the engineer under whose supervision and direction the garbage disposal plant of the Plainfield Sanitary Company was erected, and by the aid of this plant he believes he can successfully eliminate the disagreeable and unpopular features of the city sewage disposal as now operated.

He has prepared elaborate plans by which the sewage can be made to flow through the crematory plant of the Sanitary Company, the solids extracted from the liquid and cremated, and then the liquid allowed to flow on to the sewage beds as at present, but without any material to emit such a stench as it is claimed now arises from the beds to offend the nostrils of residents in the vicinity.

Mr. Clark's plan can, it is claimed, be put in operation at a slight cost. They provide for the construction of two large vats at the sanitary plant, which will be fed with sewage from the main sewers by two lateral pipes to be connected somewhere near Girard avenue. The liquids and solids would be run into the vats, each being used twelve hours alternately. In this way the solids would be allowed to settle to the bottom, then the liquid run off into the main sewer again, and after that the solids cremated in the same manner as the garbage is now.

Mr. Clark believes his plans to be entirely practicable and possible of being put in operation at a nominal cost, though they have been completed for some time he has never made any attempt to have them presented to the public, and only a few city officials have been made acquainted with the details.

OBJECT TO TAXES PRIOR TO 1881.

That is the Principal Contention of Those Affected by the Martin Act.

At the report of the Martin Act Commissioners before Judge VanSyckle at Elizabeth Monday, the lawyers who represented the taxpayers contended that the taxes assessed prior to 1881 could not lawfully be collected.

The chief objection to the report is that it holds unpaid taxes prior to 1881 as a lien against the property. It seems that, whereas the law specifies there shall be public tax sales of property in arrears for taxes within a period not greater than two years from the time these arrearages were contracted, there was no tax sale held in Plainfield until 1883, and that was for the unpaid taxes of 1881. People who purchased property since then had no way of knowing that there were unpaid taxes due on it prior to 1881, as the property was not exposed for sale as the law expressly directs it should have been. They got what were supposed to be clear deeds.

After the counsel for each side had made their arguments, Justice VanSyckel told them to prepare briefs and present them to him, and he will render a decision later. It may be several weeks before a decision is reached.

The lawyers who represented the Plainfield people were R. V. Lindabury, W. R. Codington, J. H. VanWinkle, Nelson Runyon and J. B Coward. Craig Marsh represented the city.

U.S. BECOMES A POWER BY SPREADING GOSPEL

Rev. J. W. Richardson Preaches a Strong Sermon.

ATTACKS MONROE DOCTRINE

SAYS THAT IT STANDS IN THE WAY OF CHRISTIAN PROGRESS.

In This War God's Design is Shown in the Victory of Dewey, and Out of the Conflict a Republican Form Government Will be Shown the Superior of a Monarchy—He Says "For the Sake of Gospel the time Has Come for Us as a People to Lay Aside the Monroe Doctrine and Become a Power."

Rev. J. W. Richardson, of the Park Avenue Baptist church, preached such an excellent sermon pertinent to the present situation of affairs existing between Spain and this country, May 15th, that at the earnest request of the members of his church he repeated the sermon last evening. The pastor chose his text from the Book of Jeremiah, and made some startling statements as to the future of this land. Mr. Richardson spoke somewhat as follows:

"The law of divine action upon nations has undergone a material alteration since the time of Jeremiah. Every nation has a character just as an individual has, and under the control of infinite justice will come under the judgment of a just mercy seat. National destruction is the culmination of all wicked nations, but if a nation repents and turns to God she averts the punishment. Human history demonstrates these facts. Egypt had that chance, but the empty plains and deserted cities testify to the fact of God's wrath.

"That God is still guiding the keels of ships and the movement of armies is shown on every side. Prior to 1861 how the pulpit and the politicians lifted up their voices against war; but there had been a series of crimes committed and the cry was for justice. In 1861 we as a people were politic but not repentent. Some impulse stirred the South and they fired the first shot. Until Lincoln issued the emancipation proclamation our armies were not victorious.

"Emerson truly says that America is only another name for God's best opportunities, and it is because of this condition that America is engaged in another war. The hour has struck and God takes hold of the national instrument and guides the ship of state.

"In this war God's design is shown. Spain became the mother of superstition and fostered evil traits for centuries. She has perpetuated the cock and bull fight; she laughed at a reaping time. In 1800 Spain possessed a great portion of the world; in '98 years she has lost all except Cuba and Porto Rico, and by 1900 it is possible that she will have lost even the home land.

"In that battle at Manila the mines were exploded before the American ships had reached them, and the Spanish gunners shot wide of their marks. The hand of God managed the men in that battle, who were but instruments in His hand to carry on a purpose for which he has been fitting the world through this country for ages. Out of the present war God's hand will weave a divine pattern. We can put eleven millions of men in the field and in a few years could build a fleet that would defy the world. In this war God is going to show the superiority of the republican form of government over the monarchial. The nations of Europe are on the eve of a gigantic struggle against the power of monarchs, and we are to be a terrible example, especially as in a few hours, as it were, America took her place at the side of the Six Powers.

"Then again this war comes just as the door of the world is about to be shut against the Christ, and we will have a part in spreading the Gospel to those nations that know Him not. For the sake of the Gospel the time has come for us as a people to lay aside the Monroe Doctrine and to become a power in the world."

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflammed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflammed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

FINISHED THE WORK WHICH COY CUPID STARTED

Two Employes of the United States Wedded at the Same Moment Sunday Afternoon to the Girls of Their Choice

Cupid makes his appearance in some very strange places sometimes and during the past few months has been lurking around the United States Express Company's office in this city. During his stay there he captured two hearts, and Sunday afternoon there were two weddings as a consequence. The grooms were William J. Hartpence and William Albert, both drivers for the company.

The hour set was 3 o'clock, and at that hour two ministers were officiating and two pairs of hearts were made to beat as one.

The wedding of Miss Christina C. Svenson to William Albert was solemized at the home of the groom, 340 East Fourth street, by Rev. Cornelius Schenck, pastor of the Trinity Reformed church. The bridesmaid was Miss Kittie Albert, a sister to the groom, and the best man was Randolph Giles, one of the groom's fellow workmen. The bride was prettily dressed in white satin and chiffon and the bridesmaid wore white organdie over blue. The bride carried white bridal roses and the bridemaid lilies-of-the-valley.

The couple have taken up their residence with the groom's family. The presents given to the young couple were very nice. Chief among them was a handsome clock which the employes of the express office gave.

William J. Hartpence and Miss Edith May Weigman were married by Rev. W. C. O'Donnell, at the home of the bride's mother, 681 West Front street. The bridemaid was Miss Lillie Weigman, a sister of the bride, and the best man was John Utzinger. The bride was dressed in white, as was the bridemaid, and both carried white flowers. Mr. and Mrs. Hartpence will live at the home of the groom. Mr. Hartpence has been employed by the express company for three years.

A PATRIOTIC PRIEST.

FATHER M'CORMICK ANXIOUS TO BECOME AN ARMY CHAPLAIN.

The Reason He Wanted to Leave Plainfield—Father Smyth Has Had Five Assistants in Fifteen Years.

Another chance has been made in the assistant to Father Smyth at St. Mary's church. Father McCormick, who has been the curate there for the past few months, has been transferred to Jersey City and Father Westman, who has been curate at All Saints church, at Lafayette, has been sent here.

Father McCormick is anxious to go to war as an army chaplain, and has had communication with Vice-President Hobart to that effect. Besides Father McCormick had grown tired of the country, although not of Plainfield people, and was anxious to get back to Jersey City, his old home.

On the other hand Father Westman had grown tired of the city, and his health demanded a change. Therefore the change was very acceptable to both and was easily effected.

Although Father Smyth has been priest at St. Mary's church for about fifteen years, not one of the curates who have been his assistants have stayed more than five years. Father Stafford was the first to be stationed in this city, then came Father Murphy, who stayed several years. Father McCormick was the next, and now comes Father Westman.

JOINED THE U. S. CAVALRY.

Willard L. Case Now a Corporal at a Recruiting Station.

Willard L. Case, of this city, for some time a member of Essex Troop, the famous cavalry organization of the New Jersey National Guard, that is located at Newark, has joined the regular United States cavalry. Temporarily he has been assigned to the principal recruiting station in New York city as assistant to the captain in charge of the office. He has been given the rank of corporal He is at liberty to be sent at any time to such troop as he may be detailed.

Funeral of Little Edna.

The funeral service of the late Edna Bailey, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Bailey, of Westervelt avenue, were held Saturday afternoon from the house at 2 o'clock. Rev. C. E. Herring, of the First Presbyterian church, officiated. The attendance of relatives and friends was large. A beautiful floral tribute from the drivers in the department was displayed. The bearers were Herbert Randolph and Andrew Jennings. Interment was in Hillside cemetery.

—The Twilight Social Club of this city will give a grand picnic in the Crescent Rink May 30th, (Decoration Day), afternoon and evening, and the committee in charge will use every effort in their power to make it pleasant for all who attend. The music will be under the direction of Prof. Rogers

WORTHY WOMEN WILL HELP THE SOLDIERS

Daughters of the Revolution To Be Assessed $1 a Piece.

MAKE ARMY LIFE BRIGHTER.

PATRIOTIC RESOLUTIONS PRESENTED BY MRS. FLORENCE HOWE HALL.

The New Jersey Daughters Believe This to Be a Just War, Waged in the Cause of Liberty and Humanity—Great Pleasure Expressed With the Friendly Relations With Great Britain —Mrs. Donald McLean Urges the Women to Aid in the Work of Making Life Easier for the Men as They Did in '76.

The Daughters of the American Revolution from all over New Jersey came to this city Thursday afternoon to attend the annual spring meeting of that organization which was held in the Casino of the Union County Country Club. Dames with the bluest of blue blood coursing through their veins, whose ancestry can be traced back to remote times in American history, mingled freely, and the gay patriotic symbols displayed on every side of the hall corresponded well with the illustrious people congregated there.

The guests from out of town began to arrive at 1 o'clock. The delegates were met at the station by Mrs. J. B. Dumont and Mrs. Frederick G. Mead, of Continental Chapter, this city, and taken to the Casino, where they were received and shown to their places by a committee of ushers consisting of Mrs. F. H. Lindsley, Mrs. John Gray Foster, Miss Dumont, Miss Ethel Holmes and Mrs. Frank Clawson. Luncheon was served it 1:30, after which the convention was convened and called to order by Mrs. D. A. Depue, of Newark, State Regent.

The most important item of business to come before the meeting was the adoption of a set of resolutions, but before they were presented, Mrs. Donald McLean, Regent of the Daughters of the Revolution, of New York city, spoke. Mrs. McLean's address was brimming over with patriotism, and was applauded again and again. In speaking of the present war, Mrs. McLean said that the Daughters ought to be willing to endure a heartache and a headache occasionally, because they are engaging in work for the loved ones at the front.

"Were this war a fair one between Spain and her colonies," said the speaker, "the United States would not think to interfering. My sympathy goes out to every mother whose son has gone to the front, but what mother would refuse to send her boy, if she knew he was to come out a hero?

"Every individual daughter and mother wants to do her duty here at home. It is for the women to spring forward now, and wave the flag over the heads of our noble soldiers. This is not a war for dominion. Liberty was the place of the Boston harbor enlighten only New York, or these United States, but the entire world. Let us not forget that Cuba has a flag, even though it is a little one with few stripes and only one star. Are they to be left alone because the big flag has no sympathy for them?

"We must show the world that the spirit of our Revolutionary heroes is still alive. The women of New York and New Jersey are to glow in a subburst of humanity until we attract the attention of the world to that highest glory, the stars and stripes."

Mrs. Florence Howe Hall said that "We have marked with sorrow that set of people who seem to have lost faith in their country, is policy and its officials. At this time we admire the British lion, and would feel honored to shake his lordly paw instead of twisting his tail as we did a century ago. America has said to the oppressor, 'Thus far shalt thou go and no further.'"

Mrs. Hall then introduced the resolutions which were debated upon and passed. They are in substance as follows:

Resolved, That the Daughters of the American Revolution feel the deepest sympathy for the oppressed of all nations, especially the Cubans, and while they deplore war, feel that this is, on the American side, a just and lawful one. Resolved, That we do all in our power to mitigate the evils of war, and that we ask our State regent to take such steps as she sees proper for this purpose, and that each chapter be asked to contribute at least one dollar a head, to be sent to the State regent and forwarded to Washington for the relief of sufferers. We express great pleasure at the friendly attitude of Great Britain, and the valor of our officers of the army and navy.

General William S. Stryker, adjutant general of New Jersey, was expected to be present, but was detained at Sea Girt. Mrs. Stryker was present, however, and spoke a few words.

The session was opened with the singing of "America," and closed with the "Star Spangled banner. During the afternoon a chorus of ladies, Mrs. Brooks, Miss Hardenburg, Mrs. J. K. Meyers, Miss Ethel Holmes, Mrs. Frank Clauson and Miss Emma Schoonmaker sang, and Mrs. Brooks and Miss Hardenburg rendered a duet.

The decorations of the Casino were very elaborate and called forth much praise. The stage had been completely hidden by a great American banner, arranged so as to represent a tent, and the electric lights, which were half hidden by the folds of the flag, lent a subdued light to the scene. In front of the tent there were stacked muskets, a sword and two antique looking drums. Beside these the walls were bright with flags and spring blossoms. All the ladies present wore the colors, bronze and blue.

The guests came from all over the State. Foremost among them was Miss Eliza Sandford, of Bloomfield, and of Nova Caesarea Chapter, a daughter of a genuine soldier in the Revolution. Among the other regents present were Mrs. D. A. Depue, of Newark, State regent; Mrs. Borchelin, of Newark, regent of Nova Caesarea Chapter; Mrs. John Moses, of Trenton, regent of General David Foreman Chapter, and vice-president of the Colonial Dames; Mrs. Alex Moder Jamieson, of Lawrenceville, regent of Trenton Chapter; Mrs. Moore, of Haddonfield, regent of the chapter from that place; Mrs. J. K. Myers, of this city, regent of Continental Chapter; Miss Geshler, of New Brunswick, regent of Jersey Blue Chapter; Mrs. Burman, regent of Morristown Chapter; Miss Doughty, of Obsecon, regent of Lafayette Chapter; Miss Mecum, of the Camden Chapter; Mrs Putnam, of Elizabeth, regent of Hendrinot Chapter; Mrs. J. P. Beedle, of Jersey City, president of the Colonial Dames and regent of Jersey City Chapter; Mrs. Margaret H. Mathers, of Somerset county, and Mrs. E. F. C. Young, of Jersey City.

NEW KLONDIKE TOWN.

MISS BOARD EXPLAINS ABOUT HER GREAT SCHEME.

The Venturesome Motuchen Lady Will Establish and Name a Town After Herself—No Liquor to be Sold There.

Miss Mary M. Board, the woman lawyer, of Motuchen, who is organizing a party of women to invade the Klondike region and help establish Board City, named after herself, has interested a number of venturesome Plainfield women in the scheme and Saturday night she delivered an address in the Revere House before an audience that contained the wives of a number of influential and wealthy New York business men. Though it is said that there are several Plainfield women who are contemplating joining Miss Board's expedition, there are others who will not go but will lend financial aid and influence to the scheme.

Miss Board displayed maps of the proposed Board City, situated in the Copper river region, and explained how she intended to make the place a model and successful one for a mining region. Miss Board said that it was her intention to populate Board City with the better class of people and to keep out the rough element. One of the strict regulations of Board City, she said, would be the prohibition of the sale of intoxicants, as she considered that the sale of liquor was one of the most evil effects of towns established in mining countries. It was her plan to organize a public school the first thing on her arrival in the Klondike region, and thus make it a center of the respectable and substantial gold hunters.

ONE YEAR MORE TO A DECADE.

Ninth Anniversary of Epworth League Society at Grace M. E. Church.

The ninth anniversary of the Epworth League of Grace M. E. church church in an appropriate manner, was celebrated Sunday evening in the The platform and pulpit were prettily decorated with flowers and plants of various kinds. The exercises were in charge of Charles Hummer, president of the League, assisted by Rev. Mr. Gardner.

During the exercises there were four papers presented by members of the League. The first paper was on "Spiritual Department," by Andrew Wilson, first vice-president of the League. Mr. Wilson stated that during the year there had been an averaged attendance of twenty-eight at each meeting, and during the four winter months the attendance was forty-eight. The paper suggested that a monthly consecration meeting be held similar to the one held in the Christian Endeavor Society. An excellent paper on "Literary and Social Work," prepared by Miss Steiner, was read by Miss Della Voohl. The paper on "Mercy and Help Department," by Miss Hoagland, was interesting, as was also the paper on Junior League work by Mrs. Taft.

Rev. Mr. Gardner, pastor, made a short address at the close of the exercises which was helpful and interesting. He admonished the members of the League to do better things, to attend the meetings and assist as much as possible.

CONSTABLE STEWARD COULDN'T BE FOOLED.

Arrested a Man Who Has Been Long Sought For.

IS CHARGED WITH ASSAULT.

SAID HIS NAME WAS TOM GREEN WHEN IT IS TOM CALLAHAN.

In Company With James Kelly He Assaulted Two Hebrew Peddlers and Then Escaped Through a Back Door While the Officers Entered the Front of the Building in Which They Were Working at Stirling—Constable Steward Couldn't be Deluded and so the Assailant is Now Awaiting Trial.

Last summer two harmless Hebrew peddlers were assaulted without provocation near Washingtonville. They were coming along Somerset street which leads to Plainfield when two men sprang at them and gave them a severe beating. The two perpetrators of this crime were alleged to be James Kelly and Moder Jamieson, of Laurenceville, regent of Trenton Chapter; Mrs. Moore, of Haddonfield, regent of the chapter from that place; Mrs. J. K. Myers, of this city, regent of Continental Chapter; Miss Geshler, of New Brunswick, regent of Jersey Blue Chapter; Mrs. Burman, regent of Morristown Chapter; Miss Doughty, of Obsecon, regent of Lafayette Chapter; Miss Mecum, of the Camden Chapter; Mrs Putnam, of Elizabeth, regent of Hendrinot Chapter; Mrs. J. P. Beedle, of Jersey City, president of the Colonial Dames and regent of Jersey City Chapter; Mrs. Margaret H. Mathers, of Somerset county, and Mrs. E. F. C. Young, of Jersey City.

Last summer two harmless Hebrew peddlers were assaulted without provocation near Washingtonville. They were coming along Somerset street which leads to Plainfield when two men sprang at them and gave them a severe beating. The two perpetrators of this crime were alleged to be James Kelly and Moder Jamieson, of Laurenceville, employed at Stirling. Ever since then the Somerset county authorities have been on the lookout for the two men but they have succeeded in evading them until last week. Now both are lodged in the county jail here.

After the victims of the unprovoked assault had recovered sufficiently, they appeared before Justice Speer at Washingtonville and warrants were issued for Kelly and Callahan. It was not until last October, however, that an attempt was made to arrest them. Constable George Steward, of Washingtonville, took the warrants and went over to Stirling where the men were employed on the new silk mills. The men were said to be desperate characters and so Squire Havey, who indorsed the warrant, rallied a little force of constables and marched to the mills. As the little band of the representatives of the law marched bravely up to the mills Kelly and Callahan saw them and departed by the back entrance. After searching the premises, the Squire finally sighted them disappearing down the railroad track, waving a taunting farewell.

The loss of the culprits has rankled in the mind of Constable Steward ever since, and so, last week, having heard that Callahan was in Bernardsville, he determined to catch him all alone. He drove over to that place and found where Callahan was working. Somebody pointed him out, for steward had never seen him before.

The steward walked into the building where Callahan was working and dropped his hand on the carpenter's shoulder.

"Look a here, Tom Callahan, I want you," remarked the constable.

"You're got the wrong man, boss," blustered forth Callahan. "I ain't Tom Callahan. I'm Tom Green."

"Come off, Tom," laughed the constable, "You can't fool me that way. Why, I've known you all your life."

The constable's little game worked to a charm and Callahan succumbed.

"Well," he ruefully remarked, "I suppose my jig's up." He told his employer that he had to go to Somerville, and departed, quiet as a lamb.

Friday, Constable Steward located Kelly at Summit. He drove over there and with the assistance of the local authorities, captured him without trouble. He was taken to join his companion in the county jail.

They will probably plead non vult to the charge of assault and battery and will be sentenced this week.

CHANGE OF CURATES AT ST. MARY'S

Father McCormick Exchanged Places With Father Westman at Jersey City.

Father McCormick has had comunication with Vice President Hobart concerning his appointment as chaplain on one of the battle ships, and while nothing definite has been settled in regard to it, it is thought that Father McCormick has gone to Jersey City the idea of being near the navy yard in case the appointment comes.

Sunday Father Westman, of Jersey City, has been sent to take Father McCormick's place, as curate of St. Mary's Roman Catholic church, officiated at the services of the church. Father McCormick has been sent to a parish in Jersey City.

A Bad Tumble.

Frank Denckiau, of Hall's pharmacy, met with a serious accident Sunday morning while wheeling on Watchung avenue near Fifth street. Several spokes in the front wheel of his bicycle broke, which threw Denckiau almost directly under a rapidly-moving trolley car. He was unconscious when picked up, but soon regained his senses and patched up the cuts on his face and wrist with court plaster.

Cost $250 to Plead Non Vult.

It cost John Kavanaugh just $50 Monday to plead non vult to the charge of illegal liquor selling at his restaurant on Grant avenue, or the prospect of spending sixty days in the county jail. The City Judge warned the defendant that another charge of a similar character, followed by conviction, would mean a term of five months in jail.

WITTY IN INTRODUCING.

E. E. ANTHONY'S BRIGHT REMARKS AT A CHURCH CONFERENCE.

Unique Supper Given to the Workers, After Which Came Entertaining Addresses—Rev. Mr. Schenck's Remarks.

A unique supper and conference was held by the officers and teachers of the Sunday-school of Trinity Reformed church Friday evening in the lecture room of the church. A routine business meeting was the first thing on the programme, after which all present were invited to partake of a Biblical supper, so named because the names for the good things provided were selected from the Bible.

About twenty-five persons sat down to the table. Superintendent E. E. Anthony presided at the head of the festive board. At the conclusion of the repast, Mr. Anthony made a few happy remarks and introduced the speakers on the programme by his original wit and humor. Rev. Cornelius Schenck, pastor of the church, was the first speaker. He congratulated the officers and teachers for the very excellent work accomplished in the past. He said he appreciated the earnest efforts put forth to assist him in the work of building of the kingdom of God. Other speakers were F. C. Adams and J. P. Laire.

Mr. Anthony introduced F. E. Smith as his right hand man, although he sat on his left at the time. Mr. Smith spoke words of congratulations and remarked the feeling of unity existing among the workers in the school.

Mr. Anthony said there was only one Tier in the school and it was not the desire of any to shed that one. He then introduced Mr. Josephine Hay. The man who said by reason of being the oldest member in the school she ought to be excused from making any remarks. After a few more pleasantries Mr. Anthony made a few closing remarks, and the officers and teachers adjourned to the church parlors where a consecration and praise service was held.

Those who arranged the supper and served it were Miss Mabel Wilson, chairman; Miss Backer, Miss Mobus, A. K. Willett and Fred Horn, while Mrs. E. Anthony assisted greatly in making the affair a success.

CHURCH FREE OF DEBT.

FIRST M. E. SOCIETY CLEAR AWAY A $2,000 OBLIGATION.

Besides That Sum the Members Also Contribute $1,000 With Which to Make Some Repairs That Have Long Been Needed.

The indebtedness of the First M. E church was entirely cleared away Sunday and a sufficient amount raised to also provide for a number of necessary repairs. An indebtedness of $2,000 has been hanging over the church for some time and it has been the wish of the members of the church to raise enough money to pay it off for some time.

About three weeks ago, it was deemed that the proper time had come and the matter was agitated. The trustees decided that it was necessary to make some improvements in the building itself. The church is one of the most poorly lighted in the city. It was the wish of the trustees to substitute electricity for gas. It was also considered necessary to wire Vincent chapel for electric lights at the same time.

Heretofore hand power has been used to move the organ pump. It was in the line of economy to put in a water motor. At the same time the church will be connected with the city water system. Necessary repairs will also be made to the organ when the motor is placed in position.

The committee of the trustees has been at work among the members of the church securing subscriptions. The repairs were estimated to cost about $1,000, making a total of $3,000, which they wished to raise.

At the close of the service yesterday morning, the matter was brought before the congregation. Already over $1,000 had been pledged. A number of new subscriptions were given, making a total of $2,067.25 pledged. There are still several more of the congregation who are to be heard from and it is expected that the amount will reach $3,100.

The committee in charge of the repairs will then issue specifications at once and the contract for the repairs will be given out.

DR. RAYMOND PREACHED.

Former Plainfield Pastor in the Crescent Avenue Church Pulpit.

Dr. V. V. Raymond, president of Union College, formerly pastor of the Trinity Reformed church, preached in the Crescent Avenue church Sunday at morning and evening services. For his morning sermon he had a double text taken from John: "Come, let us go hence," "Many things have I yet to tell you which ye cannot bear to hear now." A number of his Plainfield friends were present at both services and were glad to greet him at the close of the service. He expressed his pleasure at being in Plainfield once more and referred to the many happy times that were associated with the place in his mind. He was looking well.

THE WRATH OF SPAIN MAY EVEN PRAISE GOD

Blessings of The Present War Dwelt on in the Pulpit.

REV. MR. SCHENCK'S WORDS.

TREATMENT IS SEVERE, BUT BENEFITS WILL COME TO SPAIN.

The Reverend Speaker Says That Spain's Cup of Iniquity is Full—Her Victims Cry Not in Vain Now, and in Losing Some of Her Land Spain May Find Its True Life and Bring About a Happy and Contented People—Blessings Will Come to Cuba in Her Independence and Freedom.

"The Blessings of the Present War" was the subject of a soul-stirring and patriotic sermon preached by Rev. Cornelius Schenck, Ph. D., pastor of Trinity Reformed church, yesterday morning. The edifice was filled with worshippers who listened attentively to the earnest words of the reverend gentleman. Dr. Schenck's text was the 10th verse of the 76th Psalm, "Surely the wrath of man shall praise thee; the remainder of wrath shalt thou restrain."

In opening the discourse the speaker said that there is no more definitely proven fact than that God is able to make the wickedness of man illustrate His mercy. The wrath of man gives occasion for great deeds on God's part—deeds which will bring Him praise and honor. The fall of man was most disastrous, but it became the occasion of redemption. The fact that he who said that by reason of being the oldest member in the school she ought to be excused from making any remarks. After a few more pleasantries Mr. Anthony made a few closing remarks, and the officers and teachers adjourned to the church parlors where a consecration and praise service was held.

knitting together in friendly relations the two great English speaking people of the world. England is the truest friend that America has today.

Finally, the world as such will be blessed. The example of self-abnegation which America has set cannot be lost on the other nations of the earth. Her mission is the mission of the Gospel, which is "to heal the broken-hearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, and to set at liberty them that are bound." The war will compel wider recognition of the truth of a controlling Providence. The wonderful victory in Manila harbor demonstrates that God is in this war. It was the sword of the Lord and of Dewey.

The war will forward the movement looking to the conquest of the world for Christ. Westward the star of Christian empire takes its course, Leaping the bounds of the Rockies and Sierra Nevadas, the ensign of this great Christian nation has been planted on the isle which fronts the great strongholds of heathenism. The hour of the world's redemption draweth nigh!

$1000 FOR NEW CHURCH

SUCCESS OF FAIR GIVEN BY CHURCH OF REDEEMER WOMEN.

The Receipts Were $1,100 and Expenses Estimated Not to Exceed $100—Most Popular People Determined by Votes.

The fair and bazaar held last week for the benefit of the Church of the Redeemer came to a close Saturday evening. It was a great wonderful success throughout. The attendance during the various days was large. There were about three hundred suppers served in the dining room. One of the great successes of the affair were concerts given by Mr. Moore on his phonograph. These concerts netted about $46.

In the contests there was much excitement. Mrs. Phillips was presented with the painting by Mr. Jefferson, she being voted the most popular woman in Plainfield. E. L. Buffern was voted the most popular man and was presented with the pastel donated to the fair by John Wanamaker.

In the bean guessing contest Mrs. Charles Meldrew won the handsome picture of the battleship Maine. In the contests in guessing the names of dolls, Mrs. Clapp secured one doll whose name was "Mabel." Mr. Audley secured the other doll by guessing the name of "Alice." The large doll being voted for was won by Miss Kate Barlow. She received over three hundred votes. About $75 was realized at the doll booth. In all about $1,100 was taken in at the fair, and it is believed that $1,000 will be profit.

Saturday evening the vestry of the church gave a dinner to Bishop Scarborough. There were several Plainfield clergymen and their wives present. At the service in the Church of the Redeemer yesterday morning Bishop Scarborough was present and gave the collection toward the New Church building fund. The new church is now practically an assured fact and the workers feel well repaid for their earnest efforts and labors.

PROF. CONDE'S CONCERT

Some Fine Music Heard by a Critical Audience in Y. M. C. A. Hall.

The annual concert given at the Y. M. C. A. last Saturday evening by P. Ludwig Conde, of this city, was a great successes. The programme as published Saturday was given complete and every number was rendered with perfection and skill. The hall was prettily decorated with American flags and bunting. The opening selection, "The Stars and Stripes Forever," by the orchestra, was enthusiastically received as was also the closing selection, "The Star Spangled Banner." The appearance of Miss Blossom Fitz Randolph, who rendered several violin selections, received an ovation for her excellence in playing. She was recalled, as was also Miss Clyde Burnett, who gave several piano selections. Her playing was marked with carefulness and precision. The double duet for violins by Miss Randolph and Florence Wohlfert, Miss Elizabeth Cahoone, Miss Charlotte Cave, with Miss Burnett at the piano, was delightfully given, as was also two selections given by Messrs. Conde and Fischer, violins; Mr. Suenderhaft, viola; Mr. DeNike, 'cello, and Mr. Weber, bass.

Another feature of the programme was the zither playing by Mr. and Mrs. Nebel, and the zither solo by Mr. Nebel, accompanied by the orchestra. The playing of a 'cello solo by W. Paulding DeNike was a treat. This popular player always wins fresh laurels in Plainfield and his appearance Saturday evening was no exception.

The playing by the orchestra of twenty-five pieces, under the direction of Mr. Conde, was fully up to the standard. Every piece was given perfectly and won merited applause throughout. Mr. Conde and his assistants deserve unlimited praise for the very excellent concert given.

As an accompanist, Bert Harold, was excellent. His work received favorable comment.

COUNTY TROLLEY PLAN IS DELAYED.

Experts to Estimate the Cost of Widening Avenue.

$400,000 MAY BE REQUIRED.

CONSIDERABLE DIFFERENCE OF OPINION AS TO THE EXPENSE.

Board of Freeholders Will Appoint Three Experts on Property Valuations, Who Shall be Independent Citizens in No Way Connected With County Affairs, to Go Over the Route and Make an Impartial Estimate—Names to be Submitted at Next Meeting—Director Names Committee.

The Board of Freeholders, at its meeting held Thursday afternoon, took up the subject of the county trolley road from Elizabeth to Plainfield. There seemed to be a difference of opinion as to what the cost of the undertaking would be. The citizens' committee seemed to think it would cost about $400,000 to widen Westfield avenue to 160 feet and pay for the property that would have to be condemned to furnish the additional land needed.

Finally a resolution was passed instructing the Road Committee of the board to select three experts on property valuation, and also on road building, who shall be independent citizens, in no way connected with county affairs, to go over the route and make an impartial estimate of the cost of the contemplated improvement. The names of these experts are to be submitted to the board at its next meeting, and the latter reserved the right to accept or reject the selections made by the committee.

It now begins to look as if the proposed widening of Westfield avenue would not be commenced before next fall, owing to the way the matter drags along.

Freeholders resolved to levy a tax of $200,000 to meet the expenses of the year, divided as follows: Lunacy, $38,000; expenses, salaries, etc., $10,000; coroner's fees, $500; elections, $12,000; stationery, $2,000; advertising, $3,000; soldiers' monument, schools, etc., $12,000; hospitals, $5,800; payment bonded debt, $25,000; interest on debt, $19,500; loans, $1,000; repairs to county roads, $17,500; improvements public buildings, $7,000; election and repair bridges, $23,000.

The following committees for the year were appointed by Director Hubbard: Collector's bond, Adams, Miller, McCandless; publication, Hulskamper, Adams, Swain; settle with collector, Poll, King, Brucklacher; auditing account, King, Poll, Burnet; lunacy, Miller, Tier, Swain; stationery, King, Wahl, McCandless; discharged prisoners, Wahl, Robison, Higgins; public grounds and buildings, Farrel, Tier, Scudder; jail improvements, Tier, Wahl, Higgins; bridges, Burnett, Robison, Tier, Scudder; miscellaneous, Hulskamper, Erlich, Scudder; legal questions, Erlich, Robison, King; appropriations, Farrell, Hulskamper, Poll, Brucklacher, Burnet; county roads, Poll, Hulskamper, King Swain, Burnet.

It is resolved that the poor committee report at the next meeting the names of three experts to ascertain the cost of moving houses, establishing grades, etc., in the proposed widening of Westfield avenue for the purpose of selling the franchise to build a trolley line from Elizabeth to Plainfield, a distance of twelve miles. The three commissioners when selected will act in conjunction with the two engineers already appointed.

Mr. and Mrs. B. A. Hegeman Are Home Again.

Mr. and Mrs. B. A. Hegeman, Sr. of Sycamore avenue, who have been at Haddon Hall, Atlantic City, for several weeks, are home again. Mrs. Hegeman was quite ill with throat trouble while at the seashore, but is somewhat better now. Mr. Hegeman was benefited by the change and was able to attend divine service at Trinity Reformed church Sunday and enjoy, for the first time, the remodelled church, and hear again the voice of his pastor, Rev. Cornelius Schenck.

"Probably no single drug is employed in nervous diseases with effects so markedly beneficial as those of cod-liver oil."

SPANISH ARE IGNORANT

OUR ENEMIES VIEWED IN A NEW LIGHT BY A MISSIONARY.

Mrs. Gulick Has Labored Among Them for Years and She Says Religious Bigotry Prevails Among the People.

Those who were present at the Congregational church Friday, listened to a very interesting address by Mrs. Alice Gordon Gulick, upon Spain, and were acquainted with some facts about that country which were new to them. Mrs. Gulick, who is an American, was sent to Spain by the American Board in 1871, and since that time has been laboring among the Roman Catholics there.

Mrs. Gulick spoke somewhat as follows: "At the present time Spain is continually in our thoughts. For twenty-six years we American missionaries have been trying to make American people think of Spain, but with varying results. But now I am sure, from the interest being awakened in the people of that country, that we are to receive that help for which we have long prayed, and that Americans, who stand before the world as her sworn enemies, will yet gladden the heart of the Lord by a great work of evangelization there.

"When we first reached Spain we found dence ignorance, principally among the women, but also extending to the men and priests of the Roman Catholic church. The Virgin Mary is worshipped almost exclusively, and thirty years ago it was a curse in Spain to possess a Bible. These last thirty years have been ones of deep spiritual growth, and the year 1868, when religious liberty was declared, was like a second reformation.

"Spaniards are not the cruel and blood-thirsty people American generally believe them to be. There are thousands among them who deeply deplore the condition of things in Cuba, and many of them bemoaned their lot when they were sent to that island with Butcher Weyler, who, by the way, is part German. These people would be willing to sacrifice Cuba if war could have been averted. The men in Spain are mostly all free thinkers. They are breaking away from the church, leaving the women to stand by it."

Mrs. Gulick told several incidents connected with her work, which is especially among the children, whom the missionaries get into their schools, and while giving them an education, instill into their hearts a love for pure religion. Mrs. Gulick said that the American teachers have been very successful with their pupils, and many of them, among the girls, have taken high honors.

Preceding the talk Mrs. M. E. Dwight read an account of the work done by the Women's Association, under whose auspices the speaker was present, which was very interesting. Mrs. B. T. Barnes and Mrs. Dwight also rendered a duet on the organ and piano.

THE CIVIL WAR FEVER.

PRESENT ENTHUSIASM IS WEAK COMPARED TO THE EARLY SIXTIES.

Spirit of the People in Those Days Was Much More Intense Than Now—Graphic Descriptions of Stirring Scenes.

Accurate, concise and decidedly entertaining was the lecture on "A New York Boy's Recollections of the Last War Fever" delivered by Dr. Robert B. Doherty, of Jersey City, in Vincent chapel last Friday.

Dr. Doherty recalled many of his personal experiences to illustrate his talk. He told of the open fields then where the Fifth Avenue Hotel stands now and how cows were pastured there. He told of the great gathering places, Castle Garden, the Academy of Music and Cooper Union.

The spirit of the people in those days he described as being very different from that of the present day. Nobody, he said, would believe at the beginning of the Civil War that there really would be war. They did not believe that any State would secede until Carolina did. Then they did not believe that the others would follow until it really came to pass. The present war enthusiasm, as compared with that of '61, he characterized as the "milk and water" order. There was a sternness and gravenss in that day that was not to be seen now.

He told of how the different regiments marched through New York at the beginning of the war, and how he as a lad had watched them go. He described the march of the Ellsworth's Zouaves down Broadway in a very graphic manner, and told how women, and even men, had rushed out and embraced them as they marched gallantly by.

His lecture was listened to with great interest. At is close a collection was taken up for the benefit of the Sunday-school library.

Death of Elisha Sheppard.

Elisha Sheppard, well-known to many Plainfielders, died at his home near Bound Brook Friday after a short illness. He was about fifty-five years of age.

A TENTH ANNIVERSARY.

WARREN CHAPEL ENDEAVORERS IN EXISTENCE A DECADE.

Chapel Hung With State Society Colors—Addresses by Active Christian Workers—Gift for the Organist.

The Christian Endeavor Society of Warren chapel celebrated its tenth anniversary Thursday, and made the occasion a pleasant one.

The chapel was hung with the State colors, black and yellow, and the colors of the local union, white and green. American and Cuban flags were displayed, and a group of potted plants and blossoms were arranged in front of the pulpit platform. The speakers were Rev. J. O. McKelvey, Rev. John T. Keer, of Elizabeth; Mr. Lake, of Dunellen; Miss Florence G. Hawkins and E. E. Anthony. President Theodore Martin opened the meeting.

Rev. Mr. McKelvey welcomed the Endeavorers and their friends, and then said he had been delegated to present Miss Margaret Sheppard, the organist, with a little token of appreciation from the members of the society. The gift was a sum of money. Miss Cortwrigt gave a piano solo, and Miss Catherine Doloke read the secretary's report. The treasurer reported that the receipts during the past year had been $27.65; the expenditures $20.03, leaving a balance of $7.62. R. C. Martin, of Putnam avenue, rendered a pleasing vocal solo, and after this Miss Jennie Smith, president of the Junior Band, gave a brief sketch of the society, in which she said they had 64 members and that they had given $48 during the past year for missions.

Miss Hawkins spoke upon the lookout committee, which she said was the most important committee of all. E. E. Anthony's theme was the prayer meeting committee, in which he urged prayer meeting committee members to insist upon the meetings being begun at 8 o'clock. Mr. Anthony was followed by Rev. Mr. Kerr, who delivered the address of the evening, and spoke about the necessity of living up to the Christian Endeavor pledge During the evening a choir of young lady members of the society sang several hymns, and Mr. Smith rendered a violin solo. The sociable which followed was attended by nearly all who were present at the exercises. Ice cream and cake were served.

An Arcanum Visit.

The semi-annual visit of the grand officers of the Royal Arcanum to Greenbrook Council took place Thursday evening. A very pleasant evening was enjoyed. Speeches were made by most of the visiting officers, and the home council. The honored guests were Grand Orator James Bodger, of Cranford; Grand Warden Wm. E. Collins, of Fanwood; Grand Sentry James Abbott, of Arlington; Deputy Grand Regent Samuel Drummond, of Bound Brook; Deputy Grand Regent S. K. Messick, of Cranford; Horace I. Bowne, of Hoboken, member of the grand committee on state of the order; Past Regents A. W. Rand and M. L. Bullock, of Plainfield Council.

Married in New York.

The marriage of Miss May Hubbard, of East Second street, to Charles Deuscher, is announced. The marriage was celebrated May 15th in New York city. The bride and groom are now enjoying a wedding trip in New York State. The groom is employed by Cobb & Williams, steam fitters, of New York, and both he and his wife are well-known young people in this city.

Free Medical Advice

You need a doctor many times when you don't call one. You suffer pain in fifty forms and yet won't call the doctor, because you hope that the pain "will go away after a while." IN THE PRIME OF LIFE DEATH CAME SUDDENLY

Dr. Manning Passed Away After an Hour's Illness.

FATAL STROKE OF APOPLEXY

HAD BEEN BUSY WITH HIS PRACTICE UP TO TIME OF ILLNESS.

He Had Been Complaining of a Slight Illness, but was Feeling in Good Health When Stricken With Fatal Malady—Some Delay in Securing Medical Attendance—Blood Vessel Bursted at Base of Brain—Dr. Manning Born on Plainfield Avenue and Received a Fine Education—Leaves Widow and Daughter.

A sad and sudden death occurred last Thursday when Dr. Andrew Manning, of Madison avenue, passed away after an illness of only an hour. His death was wholly unexpected, and the sorrowing household has the sympathy of a large number of friends, who feel deeply the bereavement to the wife and the Doctor's family, which for the first time has been broken thus.

Dr. Manning was in excellent health Thursday. About three weeks ago he had an attack of the grip and a little neuralgia, but was not ill long, and had been attending his patients as usual. Thursday evening about 8:30 he complained to Mrs. Manning of an intense pain at the base of the brain, which, becoming more painful, at last compelled the Doctor to yield to his wife's entreaties, and to lie down on the lounge. As Mrs. Manning helped the Doctor to a comfortable position on the lounge, he seemed to collapse, and immediately became partly unconscious, which was no doubt due to the intense pain he had been suffering.

Mrs. Manning became alarmed, and a message was sent for Dr. M. S. Simpson, who lives opposite. Dr. Simpson was out, but Mrs. Simpson telephoned to Doctors Boone and Endicott, and sent for Dr. Manning's brother-in-law, Postmaster John M. Hatfield, who lives on West Fifth street. When Mr. Hatfield arrived, the physicians had not yet come, so he went for Dr. M. B. Long.

The physicians soon arrived, but could do nothing to save the patient's life. He lingered in a partly conscious state until 9:44 o'clock when he breathed his last. Death was due to apoplexy, say the doctors, by a blood vessel bursting at the base of the brain. The case is a peculiar one. It was remarkable that the deceased lingered so long.

Dr. Manning was born January 6th, 1861, on Watchung avenue, where his father, Joel D. Manning, his mother and two sisters still live. He was educated partly in Rutgers College at New Brunswick, studied medicine with Dr. Burlingham, a former Plainfield physician of prominence, then entered the College of Physicians and Surgeons, New York, where he graduated in 1883. He was head surgeon in Charity Hospital, New York, for some time.

Dr. Manning established a practice here, being formerly located on the corner of Park avenue and Fourth street, in the old house situated where Bockfellow's grocery store now stands.

In June, 1894, he married the youngest daughter of the late Levi Hetfield, and has lived in the old Levi Hetfield house on the corner of Madison avenue and West Fourth street, for several years. He leaves one child, a daughter two years old.

About two years ago Dr. Manning had a stroke of apoplexy, which made him an invalid for several months. Since that he seemed to have improved, and to have regained his proper health.

FUNERAL OF AN OLD FIREMAN.

Obsequies of Late George Butsche Held Sunday Afternoon.

The funeral of the late George Butsche was held Sunday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock from the home of John T. Odam, of Lyman place. The funeral was in the charge of the Odd Fellows, and was also attended by the members of No. 2 Company, of which Mr. Butsche was a member, and the driver for many years.

The floral decorations were very beautiful, and consisted of a large pillow from the Odd Fellows and a pillow from the members of the engine company. Interment was in the North Plainfield cemetery.

Rev. Cornelius Shenck officiated at the house, and Chaplain C. M. Raybert and Noble Grand Fred Becker took charge of the services at the grave. The pall bearers were Charles Frederickson, W. G. Smith, W. Brokaw, I. Sheppard, N. Pennington and J. Kutzhall.

Delegate to General Synod.

The Particular Synod, of New Brunswick, has honored Plainfield by the appointment of one of her citizens, George L. VanEmburgh, elder of Trinity Reformed church, as delegate to the General Synod of the Reformed church, which meets in Asbury Park June 1st, and usually continues in session about ten days.

RED CROSS BENEFIT WAS A GREAT SUCCESS

Music Hall Filled With a Fashionable Audience.

PATRIOTIC DECORATIONS.

MULTITUDE OF LITTLE AMERICAN FLAGS HELD BY AUDITORS.

The Theatre Filled With an Aristocratic Audience Who Made the Affair, Given Under the Auspices of Mayor Fisk and a Large Number of Prominent Citizens, a Great Social and Financial Success—Many Soul-Stirring Features of the Programme and the Audience Frequently Deeply Stirred.

It was a great concourse of the good folk of Plainfield that assembled in Music Hall last Thursday at the Red Cross Benefit entertainment. All society stepped in to help out such a worthy cause and made the occasion one for a patriotic display. It is, indeed, many moons since Music Hall has seen such a dress parade of fashion's foremost followers. Socially and financially the benefit was a grand and glorious success.

With such a patronage as the Red Cross benefit received, it is not difficult to understand its decided success. Society circles took up the movement, backed as it was by Mayor Charles J. Fisk and a score of the leading citizens of the town, and that ensured an attendance that filled the hall.

The new city flag, the gift of Edward White, and an immense flag that once waved over the Standard Oil Company's building in New York, and is now owned by C. T. Waring, were draped to the sides of the proscenium. Smaller flags were used to cover the front of the boxes in artistic folds, while a great array of tri-colored bunting was stretched about the railing to the balcony.

But the greatest decoration of all was the multitude of little American flags fluttering in the erratic breeze of the numerous fans that tried vainly to reduce the humid warmth of the atmosphere. Everybody was given a little flag on entering the hall and they were universally worn. Then, too, the National colors were worn in other ways by many.

The orchestra and dress circle were filled even before the appointed hour. It was a decidedly warm evening. Outside the lightning flashed warningly, but the rumble of the thunder was drowned by the busy hum of conversation and the rustle of silken gowns and lace fans. The balcony was comparatively empty and the "gallery gods," who so often make their presence decidedly felt, were conspicuous by their absence.

The entertainment itself was very good. It was given by a troupe of Weber & Field's specialists who include some of the best talent on the vaudeville stage in New York. The performance was essentially of the vaudeville order. There was an abundance of fun, some of it of a rollicking variety and the audience was treated to a good laugh.

The Queen City Band was present and rendered an overture and several other selections. The band gave one medley of patriotic songs that touched the popular chord. When the inspiring strains of the familiar "Star Spangled Banner" rang out, the audience rose as one being and remained standing until it was completed. Some of the spectators so overflowed with patriotism that they joined in the chorus of some of the stirring airs.

The rain providentially slackened just before the entertainment came to an end, and when the large audience left the hall and hastened homeward, they found the air clear and cool and the rain over.

Gen. Miles Knows Him.

Gen. Nelson A. Miles, commanding the army of the United States, was asked during his recent visit to Cleveland if he had ever met Pawnee Bill. "Oh, yes," he replied, "I have met him frequently on the frontier. Gordon W. Lillie, or Pawnee Bill as he is better known in the west, now has a large ranch in Oklahoma, at which I was once a guest. He was made White Chief of the Pawnees and commanded a company of Pawnee scouts who did splendid service for the Government. Afterwards, as Maj. Lillie, he was given a battalion of Indian police, or cavalry. The Major is one of the most noted characters of the west."—Cleveland, O., World.

Mischievous Boys Those.

A. E. Bushnell, of 104 West Fourth street, has complained to Chief Grant about a gang of young hoodlums who persistently annoy him and his family by ringing the door bell and stopping up the key hole with putty. Mr. Bushnell lives in one of the flats over Bockfellow's grocery store. One lad was caught playing his pranks some time ago, and was warned not to repeat them. The police will watch the lads, and arrest the first one they catch up to any such mischief.

A TEN-TRIP TICKET WILL BE AGITATED.

Thought That the Central Officials Will Grant It.

BOARD OF TRADE ASK FOR IT.

LOWER FREIGHT RATES WILL NOT COME VERY SOON.

Transportation Committee Made a Report Thursday and said That Plainfield was Well Treated by the Central Railroad—It is Believed That the Ten-Trip Ticket for $3.75 will be Granted After Further Consideration—Committee on Sanitation Reported That the Plumbing Ordinance is All Right.

The question of city ownership of the water works opened up a lively discussion at the Board of Trade meeting Thursday evening. There was little done at the meeting, however for many of the committees failed to present any report on important matters that had been referred to them.

The meeting was called to order by President F. C. Lounsbury There were about twenty members present. A communication was read from the Grocers' Association saying that they would vacate their present quarters June 1st.

The first committee to present a report was the transportation committee. Former Mayor B. A. Hegeman, Jr., chairman of the committee, presented a verbal report. He stated that there had been a meeting of the committee last week when the various questions referred to it were discussed. In regard to the freight rates between Plainfield and New York, the committee was of the opinion that Plainfield was very favorably treated by the Jersey Central railroad. As regards the passenger rates, the committee thought that the Board was progressing too fast to ask so much of the Central at one time. The proposed ten-trip ticket for $3.75 the committee proposed to follow up, and believed that when it was presented to the railroad company again in the right light, the company would change its decision and grant the request.

Regarding the ordinances on plumbing, the committee on sanitation reported that each section was founded on sound principles. The committee reported that they had been unable to find the many things in the ordinance that had been objected to by the members although they had made diligent inquiry.

Harry C. Runyon stirred up the question of the opening of Madison avenue and called the attention of the Board to the fact that the committee to which the matter had been referred had done nothing. He was instructed to notify the committee.

President Lounsbury opened a discussion on the question of the city ownership of the water supply. He greatly favored it. Former Mayor B. A. Hegeman, Jr., spoke in favor of the Plainfield Water Supply Company and said that the company had always done the right thing, and when its contract with the city expired, he believed that just as an advantagious contract could be made as before. The situation in Westfield was referred to and Mr. Lounsbury said that Plainfield did not want to get in the same position as that place and have the water shut off. Mr. Hegeman declared that a charter for a water works had been lacking on Plainfield for twenty years and nothing was done with it until outside capital stepped in and gave Plainfield the best water supply of any city or town in the State.

There was a lively discussion in which Mr. Lounbury said that while Plainfield was getting its water at favorable terms it could do even better if it owned its own water works.

After a little discussion of the approaching hearing of the Martin Act objectors, the meeting adjourned.

Past Four Score Years.

Miss Eliza Anderson, aged 86 years aunt of Dr. A. Willis Anderson, of East Second street, died at her home last Friday. She was an aunt of former Street Commissioner R. A. Meeker, and one of the few charter members of the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church, now living. She had a host of friends and acquaintances in this city, and she was highly esteemed by all. The funeral services were held last Monday afternoon from the house on East Second street.

The Prosperous Epworths.

The annual State convention of the Epworth League Societies, held in Millville last week, showed the young Methodists to be in a very prosperous condition. The number of Chapters within the two Conferences is 491, an increase of 36. The membership is 21,154, which, including the Juniors, makes the total nearly 30 000. Miss Ida Angleman, of Plainfield, was elected a fourth vice-president.

Plainfield is Healthy.

The Board of Health report that at the present time this city is very free from contagious diseases.

MECCA OF ENDEAVORERS

INTERNATIONAL CONVENTION AT NASHVILLE IN JULY.

The New Jersey Delegates Will Travel in a Special Train, and After the Convention Will Visit Historical Places.

A lively interest is being manifested in the coming International Convention of the Christian Endeavorers at Nashville, Tenn.

The new Jersey delegation are particularly favored in having the best of all the trains that will run to Nashville. They will leave Jersey City at noon of July 4th, stopping at the principal cities on the line to pick up passengers. The train will be composed of sleeping cars, dining cars and a day coach. All meals en route will be served in dining cars.

The convention sessions will be held in the exposition building, located in the beautiful Centennial Park, and the programme as outlined promises the best convention yet.

Among many other points of interest to be seen in or near Nashville are the Vanderbilt and Fisk Universities, Fort Negley and Hermitage, the home and tomb of President Andrew Jackson.

The New Jersey party will travel both ways through the beautiful Shenandoah Valley, not only the most beautiful, but by far the coolest and most comfortable route to Nashville.

On the return the following stops will be made: A whole day at Chattanooga, where the entire party will be taken in the morning in carriages to visit Orchard Knob, Mission Ridge and Chickannauga. The latter not only famous for the great battle fought there and the beautiful monuments erected by the various State, but also of great interest because of the vast body of troops that will be encamped there. Perhaps our own Jersey boys will be there at that time. After luncheon at the hotel, Lookout Mountain will be ascended by either the incline or railroad and a grand Christian citizenship meeting held on the summit of the mountain.

The next morning Natural Bridge will be visited, ample time being given to view the Bridge, Lost river and the numerous beautiful spots in the gorge. In the afternoon the famous Luray caverns will be visited. These alone are worth a journey across the continent to see. It is claimed, and justly, too, that in no other cavern in the world are such varied and marvelously beautiful formations found.

The entire trip will occupy ten days, which involves only an absence of eight days for business men. The trip will be a liberal education in itself. No one need be deterred from going by fear of excessive heat, as the statistics for the last ten years show an average temperature at Nashville, approximately the same as New York and Philadelphia, with a much less degree of humidity.

Plainfield Endeavorers and friends are fortunately within easy access of information, as the chairman of the transportation committee is E. E. Anthony, a resident of this city, and having been over the ground is thoroughly conversant with all the details.

GREAT DAY FOR THE EXEMPTS.

Pleasurable Visit to the State Convention at Perth Amboy.

The State Exempt Firemen's Association met in Perth Amboy Thursday, and held one of the most enjoyable conventions. About 200 delegates were present.

The Plainfield delegation, composed of President Augusts Saltzman, Chief Doane, Edward Mosher, Edward Vermule, Daniel Littell, Edward Flannery, G. Thorn and Joseph Blumm, went over in a stage leaving early in the morning, with the exception of V. W. Nash and E. M. Laing who drove over in a buggy.

The election of officers resulted as follows: President, August Salzman, of this city; vice-presidents, B. L. Bower, Montclair; H. C. Scrott, Trenton; Joseph Burns, Perth Amboy; Theodore Eyers, Morristown; Walter Moore, Hackensack; Alfred Radler, Newark; James F. Bard, Guttenburg, and Cornelius K. Laslie, Trenton; treasurer, Thomas Leather, Jersey City.

This makes the third term for Mr. Salzman as president. D. Littell was made chairman of the Legislative committee.

After the election the committee took a recess. Dinner was served to all the delegates and city officials.

A big parade followed the dinner, which was an elaborate affair. President Salzman and Chief Doane were honored with seats in a coach along with the members of the Common Council. The city was decorated with flags and bunting, and had put on a holiday appearance. A grand ball closed the day, but the Plainfield delegation did not remain to this.

A June Wedding.

Gen. and Mrs. Eli Long, of Grove street, have sent out invitations for the marriage of their daughter, Sara Louse, to George Colcord Worth, on Wednesday evening, June 1st, at eight o'clock in the Holy Cross church. An informal reception will follow at the home of the bride, 74 Grove street.

MARRIAGE BELLS IN MAY.

CHARMING CHURCH WEDDING AT SCOTCH PLAINS LAST NIGHT.

Miss Sadie Walpole, Daughter of Robert Walpole, Wedded to William Edwin Bacon, of Haverstraw, Business Man.

All Scotch Plains turned out last Thursday to do honor to one of her most charming daughters, Miss Sadie Walpole, who was joined in wedlock to William Edwin Bacon, of Haverstraw, N. Y.

The bride is the youngest daughter of Robert Walpole, and has a host of friends here and in Plainfield. The groom has visited here frequently and is also well-known.

The ceremony was performed in the Methodist church at 7 o'clock. The friends and relatives crowded the sanctuary which was fairly transformed with its profuse floral decorations, which mainly consisted of palms.

At the appointed hour the bride entered the church leaning on the arm of her father while the wedding march was played by Miss Eva Baker. Her gown was of white organdie over white silk, entrain, while the bridal veil was caught up with a bunch of lilies-of-the-valley. She carried a handsome bouquet of white roses.

The bride was preceded by the bridesmaids, Miss Bertha Berry, of Brooklyn, and Miss Emma Clark, of Scotch Plains, and the two flower girls, the Misses Edith and Flossie Demarest, of Plainfield. Miss Berry was prettily gowned in white organdie over pink silk. Miss Clark's gown was of white organdie over blue silk. The flower girls, who were nieces of the bride, were dressed in white organdie and carried baskets of white carnations.

The bridal party was met at the altar by the groom and the best man, De Witt Bacon, of Haverstraw. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Mr. Woodruff, of Dover, N. J., assisted by his son, the pastor of the church.

The ushers were Frank Allen, of Scotch Plains, and Chauncey Colthar, of Plainfield.

The bride's gifts to the bridesmaids were handsome pearl stick pins. The groom presented the best man with a scarf pin.

After the service, a reception was held at the home of the bride from 7:30 to 9:30 o'clock. The happy couple stood in one corner of the parlor with a large American flag draped over their heads and received the congratulations of their many friends. The house was prettily decorated with palms and wild flowers. Refreshments were served to the guests in the dining room.

Mr. and Mrs. Bacon received many handsome and useful presents, including cut glass, silver-ware, furniture and the like.

The happy couple left the house amid a plentiful shower of rice and old shoes and drove to the Fanwood station where they took the 10:28 train for New York, and subsequently Niagara Falls and other points west.

They will reside at Haverstraw, N. Y., where a furnished home awaits them. Mr. Bacon is employed in a large dry goods house in that city.

Guests were present at the reception from Haverstraw, Brooklyn, New York, Plainfield and Scotch Plains.

NEW BOROUGH SCHOOL.

SPECIAL MEETING OF VOTERS TO BE HELD MAY 31ST.

They Will be Asked to Choose Between Two Sites and to Authorize the Erection of a Building to Cost $21,000.

An important meeting of the voters in the borough will be held at the public school building May 31st in the evening at 8 o'clock, to consider the following business:

1. To receive the report of the Board of Education with a recommendation in the purchase of a lot or plot of land and the erection of a new school thereon, and furnishing the same.

2. To authorize the Board of Education to purchase as a site or location for a new school house either of the following described plots of land, viz:

The plot on the south or southwesterly corner of Watchung and Summit avenues, being one hundred and fifty-eight (158) feet nine (9) inches on Watchung avenue, and one hundred and fifty (150) feet on Summit avenue; or the plot of land on the south or southeasterly corner of Watchung avenue and Mountain avenue, being one hundred and fifty (150) feet on Watchung avenue and one hundred and fifty (150) feet on Mountain avenue, either one of which plots is thought by the Board of Education to be suitable.

3. To authorize the Board of Education to erect upon said plot of land, when acquired, a new school building, to be built of brick, and to contain at least six (6) class rooms, and to have suitable and modern conveniences. The amount thought to be necessary for all these purposes is $21,000.

4. To authorize the Board of Education to issue the bonds of the district to raise the money needed to purchase said lot of land, erect said new school building, and heat, ventilate and furnish the same to the amount of twenty-one thousand ($21,000) dollars, such bonds to be issued in the corporate name of the district; in such sums, at such rate of interest and payable at such times as the legal voters so met, may direct.

Engagement Announced.

The announcement is made of the engagement of Miss Maud French, younger daughter of Mr. and Mrs. L. M. French, of Craig place, to Harlan E. Snodgrass, second son of Rev. Dr. and Mrs. W. C. Snodgrass, of Central avenue.

San Francisco, May 25, 9 a. m.—The expedition to relieve Dewey is ready to start. Three large transports are now loaded with troops.

Madrid, May 25, 1:10 p. m.—An official despatch from Manila asserts that the majority of the chiefs who participated in the last insurrection, have presented themselves to the Governor General of the Phillippines and offered their services to Spain.

READY TO MAN THE BADGER.

Two Hundred and Thirty Naval Militiamen Sworn In on the Portsmouth.

The detail of 230 membeas of the Batallion of the East, naval militia of New Jersey, selected to man the auxiliary cruiser Badger, were mustered into the service of the United States yesterday afternoon on board the old sloop of-war Portsmouth, at the foot of Fourth street, Hoboken.

They will be retained on the Portsmouth until the Badger is ready to go into commission, which it is expected will not be later than next Monday. Dr. M. S. Stimpson and Frank Fulton, of this city, were mustered in as surgeon and apothecary, respectively.

MEMORIAL DAY DETAILS.

By order of the Common Council, the flag raising will take place at 9:30 a. m., Memorial Day, under the auspices of Winfield Scott Post. No. 73, G. A. R. The post and public school children will be massed on Front street and Park avenue. The school cadets, under command of Captain Edwards, will be on the right flank. John Hand Camp, No. 28, Sons of Veterans, will be on the left flank. After the flag exercises the line of march will be formed on East Front street, right resting on Watchung avenue, in the following manner: First, platoon of police; second, marshal and aides; third, Queen City Band; fourth, school cadets; fifth, platoon of G. A. R. and school children; sixth, platoon of G. A. R. and school children; seventh, platoon of G. A. R. and school children; ninth, John Hand Camp, S. of V., and school children.

I. L. McVoy, past post commander, will be marshal of the day, and his son, Percy McVoy, will be one of his assistants. Comrade Wm. Day will escort the children of the Bryant School to their position in the line of march at 8:30 Memorial Day morning. Comrade Stephens will perform the same duty at the Franklin School, while Comrade Wm. Smith will escort the children from the borough school. All children will meet at the above schools.

There was a regular meeting of Post 73 last Tuesday and all final arrangements were made for next Monday as stated above.

—Next Friday evening Rev. F. D. Power, of Washington, will give a lecture in the Christian church on the subject of "Blockheads."

BASEBALL UNDER BAN.

IT ALL ROSE OUT OF NEWARK BOYS' TRIP TO PLAINFIELD.

All But One Departed From The Newark High School Before The Session Ended — Suspensions Followed.

The baseball team of the Newark High School is no more and eight of the young men who played on it are thankful indeed to return to school after an enforced vacation. The innocent cause of all this trouble was Plainfield and the baseball team of the High School here.

The readers of this paper will remember an exciting game that was played here the afternoon of Wednesday, May 4th, between the baseball teams of the Newark and Plainfield High Schools. The visitors won in the last inning by a small majority.

The game was called for 3 o'clock and the Plainfield boys had plenty of time to reach the grounds before the game. It was otherwise with the Newark boys. So they went in a body to Prof. Sonn, the science teacher at the Newark High, who was in charge of the High School during the absence of Principal Hovey, who was indisposed. They asked to be excused before the last recitation.

Like the Plainfield High School, the High School in Newark closes its session at 1 o'clock. The last recitation was an important one, and so Prof. Sonn told the boys that they could not go.

When the time came all the team except one, Roe, the second baseman, quietly gathered their hats and departed without taking the trouble to notify the acting principal of their departure. When they reached Plainfield they were compelled to wait for Roe was not there. He waited until the last recitation was over and then rushed for Plainfield, arriving here an hour after the rest. The game was then begun.

When the boys returned to school next day, all the team except Roe, were quietly suspended for leaving without permission. Then followed sundry interviews between the boys, their parents and the faculty. The young men were given to understand that as soms of them were pretty far behind with their lessons, it might be better for their chances of graduation if baseball was allowed to lag. The hint was taken and the team that represented the Newark High School in the League of the New Jersey Interscholastic Athletic Association quietly disappeared.

This is the second of the school teams in the league that have been compelled to give up before the season was over. The Plainfield High School decided to give up its team for lack of financial support.

LINCOLN.

Lincoln, May 25—Mayor Drake has kindly given the use of part of his office for a clubroom, wherein the young men can assemble to play games and satisfy their literary tastes with reading matter furnished by our enterprising Mayor. The rooms are open every evening from 6:30 until 10.

The Lehigh Valley Railroad Company are grading for a siding for the use of the new factories on the south side of the town.

—Kohn has exceptional good facilities for storing furs for the summer.

TRAP SHOOTERS' LEAGUE

ENTHUSIASTS IN THIS VICINITY PLANNING TO ORGANIZE ONE.

It Will Consist of Gun Clubs of This City, Dunellen, Bound Brook and Somerville—Shoots Every Other Saturday.

A movement is now on foot among the trap shooters of Plainfield, Bound Brook, Dunellen and Somerville looking toward the organization of a Central New Jersey Trap Shooters League. Under such a league, shoots could be conducted with regularity and give the lovers of that kind of sport a chance to enjoy themselves at frequent intervals.

The league has been talked of for some time, but the leaders in the movement are now planning to take active measures towards its organization. The principal trap shooters in the towns mentioned are all in favor of the proposed association and there seems no doubt of its ultimate organization.

The Climax Gun Club and the Independent Gun Club, of this city, the Dunellen Gun Club, the Bound Brook Gun Club and the Somerset Gun Club, of Somerville, will probably form the league. The enthusiasts in New Brunswick are very anxious to join, but the idea of the league was to have all the members along the line of the Jersey Central Railroad, where they could easily reach each other and at little expense.

Matches between the clubs would be held at each meet and there would also be sweepstakes for those who wished to enter. It is planned to hold the shoots every other Saturday afternoon and holidays.

SOLD UNDER DISTRESS WARRANT.

An Inglorious Ending for Dr. Warde's Military Academy.

Tuesday morning a portion of the goods of the departed Dr. Warde were sold at public auction to satisfy the claim for rent made by Mrs. Julia Peck, of New York, owner of the building occupied by the New Jersey Military Academy.

There was a good attendance at the sale and everything that fell beneath the hammer went at a good price. Articles to the amount of $110 were sold and then the sale closed. The rent was covered and the rest of the goods will be stored preparatory to the settling of the attachment suits covering them.

In Justice Mattison's court Tuesday judgment was given in the following cases against Dr. Warde for the varying amounts: T. J. Carey, $9.85 and costs; F. S. Bunyon, $114.90 and costs; C. H. Hand, $20 and costs; George F. Brown, $13 83 and costs; A. L. Force, $31.25 and costs, and H. W. Marshall, $21.96. Execution was issued in all the cases.

Capt. Souther Dead.

Capt. Samuel Adams Souther, who was formerly connected with the Pond Machine Tool Company when the plant was located at Worcester, Mass., died suddenly a few days ago of heart failure in Boise, Ida., where he has been living for sometime. Mr. Souther was well-known to many of the present employes of the Pond Company who were connected with the works before their removal to Plainfield. At the request of the Governor and the Adjutant-General of Idaho Mr. Souther was interred with military honors, attended by a large concourse of Idaho troops now stationed at Camp Stevenson. Capt. Souther was a brother of Mrs. D. W. Pond, of this city.

THE COURTS.

MYSTERY IN ABSENCE OF THESE TWO CLERKS

Two of Woodhull & Martin's Trusted Employes Are Gone.

WENT AWAY SATURDAY.

SPECULATION IS RIFE WHY THEY HAVE NOT RETURNED.

Hudson Losey Was Floor Walker and Isaac V. Van Arsdale Shipping Clerk — Borrowed Small Sums From Other Clerks, Boarded a Midnight Train and Left For Some Unknown Destination — Suspicious Circumstances in That Fact That the Porter Left Under a Cloud a Short Time Ago.

What has become of Shipping Clerk Isaac V. Van Arsdale and Floor Walker Hudson Losey, of Woodhull & Martin's dry goods store?

That is the question that the proprietors and the clerks have been asking all today. The two above named gentlemen failed to put in an appearance Tuesday morning when the time came for them to begin their duties for the day, and speculation was rife as to where they were. Although Messrs. Woodhull & Martin were concerned about their whereabouts, when a reporter called Tuesday they refused to give out any statement for publication until Tuesday, when they admitted that they had gone.

Saturday both young men asked permission to go away, and intimated that they might not be back in time to go to work Monday morning as early as usual. Permission was granted them, and that was the last seen of them. Report has it that they were seen boarding a midnight train for Philadelphia, but that cannot be confirmed.

The absence of the two young men cannot be explained. Both were trusted employes, and Losey held a position of no little responsibility in the large store, being a floor walker and a skilled window dresser. Losey had been in the employ of the firm for many years and at one time had complete charge of a store in Orange for the firm.

Van Arsdale was shipping clerk and boarded with A. W. TenEyck, of Westervelt avenue, who is in the carpet department of the store. Losey boarded at McVey's.

A week or so ago the porter in the store left under suspicious circumstances, and the members of the firm are inclined to think that there were ties between the two last and Benj. S. Heyward, the missing porter. The night the porter skipped Van Arsdale went away. It is said that they borrowed as much money from the clerks in the store as possible, which, it is said, they have not paid back. Whether there is any shortage in the accounts of the two clerks or not the members of the firm have not learned.

STREET WORK.

Gangs of Men Working on Various Streets Patching Them Up.

The street commissioner has been hampered by the wet weather, but manages to get out and do a little work with his men on the clear days and between showers.

Fresh stone has been spread on South Second street, Muhlenberg place and West Third street from Plainfield avenue to Grant avenue, and these streets were to have been rolled Friday, but the steering apparatus on the steam roller got out of order and the roller had to be kept on West Front street until today.

The street scraping gang, with the horse scraper, are busy rounding up the roadbed and cleaning the gutters on First, Second and Third places. This week they will be at work on East Sixth street.

In response to the request of the freight department of the Central Railroad, and of several of the expressmen who have occasion to cross the gutter across Richmond street, at North avenue, the committee has decided to place a culvert there.

A culvert is about to be placed at the corner of Monroe avenue and West Seventh street, the stone for which is already on the ground.

An Early June Wedding.

Mr. and Mrs. Edward James Chaffee, of New York, have sent out invitations for the marriage of their daughter, Aline Blanche, to Dr. Arthur Melville Shrady on Tuesday evening, June 7th, at 8:30 o'clock in the Mount Morris Baptist church, Fifth avenue and 120th street. Mr. Chaffee was for many years a resident of Grove street, North Plainfield, and himself and family are held in kindly remembrance by a host of friends.

Troops Go South.

Troop A and C, Cavalry, of Brooklyn, went through Plainfield Monday on their way to Falls Church, Va. The 69th Regiment went through in the afternoon, making seven train loads over the Central Railroad for the day.

—A new floor is being laid in Warren chapel. New seats are also to be provided.

POSTMASTER BIRD.

Elias H. Bird was today nominated for postmaster of Plainfield by President McKinley.

SPORTS

AROUND THE BASES.

Manager Mumford has just discovered a prize in the way of a pitcher. He is a young man who is now studying law in New York, and will later in the season join one of the national league teams. At present he wants to keep his arm in and so has expressed a willingness to play with the Crescents. He will make his appearance Saturday or Monday.

Three strong baseball teams will visit Plainfield within the next week to try conclusions with the Plainfield Crescents. The Hoboken A. A. will play here Saturday afternoon. Decoration Day morning the famous Murray Hills will meet the Crescents. In the afternoon the mighty Ostorcons, of Orange, will cross bats with the Crescents at the Oval. All three games promise excellent sport for the lovers of the national game.

The Crescents will not meet the nines from Westfield or Cranford this year. When the Crescents were far weaker than they are at present they defeated those two teams with ease, and now a game with them would be such an easy thing as not to be worth considering. It should be remembered, however, that neither of the two teams make any pretentions to being in the same class with the Crescents, as their teams are largely composed of amateurs from their own towns.

Plainfield has just lost a good ball player, and Rutland, Vt., will gain one. Will Symons, who played right field for the Crescents, has moved to that city. Symons had the reputation of being able to pound the ball harder than any man in Plainfield. His multi-base hits were the talk of the town for many a week. Of late, however, he has not paid much attention to the national game, and has gotten somewhat out of practice, which rather retracted from his batting record of old. He was always an enthusiast in the game, however, even after trying to stop a hot liner with his face.

The Inn to Open June 4th.

The popular summer resort, the Mountain Park Inn, which stands on the very crest of the Watchung mountains overlooking Plainfield, will again open this summer. G. S. Moulton, of the Lakewood Hotel, whose experience in the conduct of first-class hostelries is well-known to the Plainfield public through his connection with the Inn for the past two seasons, will be in command. With Mr. Moulton as proprietor, the guests at the Inn will be assured of the best of treatment and service to be excelled by none. The Inn will be opened to the public on Saturday, June 4th.

Clarence Teel, of North avenue, spent last Sunday with friends at Lake Hopatcong.

Mrs. John Stimson, with her son and daughter, from Saranac Lake, are stopping at the Seminary on West Seventh street.

The engagement of Miss Gretchen Schultz, of Montclair, and George Haurand, of this city, is announced. The wedding will take place at an early date, and the newly married couple will reside on Grove street.

A Prominent Physician.

A prominent New York physician in discussing the merits of Ripans Tabules with a brother M. D. said: "Several years ago I asserted that if one wished to become a philanthopist, and do a beneficent deed—one that would help the whole human race—nothing could be better than to procure the Roosevelt Hospital prescription, which is the basis of the Ripans Tabules, and cause it to be put up in the form of a hotchpotch and distributed among the poor."

Sales Increasing.

The largest retail drug store in America is that of Hegeman & Co. on Broadway in New York City. A reporter who went there to learn how Ripans Tabules were selling bought a five-cent carton and asked: "Do you have much call for these?"

He was referred to a gentleman who proved to be the head of the department. He said:

"The sale of Ripans Tabules is constant and is increasing, due especially to the influential character of the indorsements in the daily press, and growing out of these, through the recommendation of friend to friend. Satisfaction with them is very general. When once they are begun I notice that a permanent customer for them is made. This, I believe, is through their intrinsic merit, which proves the bona fide character of the advertising. I think these specifics rival in the general run of stomach troubles."

An Elderly Lady.

An elderly lady living at Fordham Heights, a part of New York City, and who was known to be a warm advocate of Ripans Tabules for any case of liver trouble or indigestion, said to a reporter who visited her for the purpose of learning the particulars of her case: "I had always employed a physician and did so on the last occasion I had for one, but at that time obtained no beneficial results. I had never had any faith in patent medicines, but having seen Ripans Tabules recommended very highly in the New York Herald concluded to give them a trial, and found they were just what my case demanded. I have never employed a physician since, and that means a saving of $2 a call. A dollar's worth of Ripans Tabules lasts me a month, and I would not be without them now if it were my last dollar." At the time of this interview there were present two daughters, especially objected to their mother giving a testimonial which should parade her name in the newspapers, but to do this the elder lady argued: "There may be other cases just like mine, and I am sure I take great pleasure in recommending the Tabules to any one afflicted as I was. If the telling about my case in the papers enables some other person to be similarly benefited as I have been, I see no objection." The daughters, knowing how earnestly she felt about the benefit she had received, decided she was quite right.

WAR NEWS!

SPANISH FORTS WERE REDUCED BY YANKEES.

Meagre Details of Battle at Santiago Received From Cuba.

The Only Reports Come From Spanish Sources But Even They Admit the Destruction of Morro Castle and Other Fortifications—Spain Claims the Victory.

MORRO DESTROYED.

Details of Engagement at Santiago As Coming From Spanish Sources.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

Port au Prince, Hayti, June 1, 1:13 p. m—Additional details concerning the reported bombardment of Santiago by the American fleet yesterday were received here this morning.

They came from Spanish sources by the way of Havana. They are consequently considerably prejudiced in favor of the Spanish side.

They say that the Spanish batteries first answered the fire from the American fleet in a lively manner. After twenty minutes firing directed in a superior manner upon the part of the American fleet, the batteries weakened under the concentrated fire of the Americans.

The violent fire upon Morro Castle silenced the guns there and destroyed that fortification. The forts of La Zocapa and Punta Garda fired the last shots.

The Spanish losses must have been considerable. Details of the American losses are lacking. The Spaniards claim to have struck the Americans several times. At 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon the Americans withdrew.

SPAIN CLAIMS VICTORY.

Censored Despatch From Havana Claims that Americans Were Forced to Retire.

Havana, June 1, 1:30 p. m—(Censored.) The following Spanish account of the reported engagement at Santiago has been issued here.

The American fleet, consisting of the Iowa, Massachusetts, Brooklyn, Texas, New Orleans, Marblehead, Minneapolis, another cruiser, in addition to six small vessels, took position Tuesday off the western side of the mouth of Santiago channel.

The first five ships in line opened fire on the Spanish fortifications and the Spanish cruiser Cristobol Colon, which was anchored near Fort Punta Garda where she could be seen from the open sea.

The fire of the American fleet was answered by the Morro Castle and Punta Garda batteries and by the cruiser Cristobol Colon.

The Americans fired seventy shots, of which thirty-two projectiles did not do the least damage. Several fell inside the harbor near the Spanish warships.

The bombardment lasted ninety minutes when the American ships retired with the auxiliary cruiser damaged. Two shells were seen to explode on the Iowa's stern. Flames were soon aboard another cruiser.

Great enthusiasm provails here and in Santiago over the result.

Porter Has Despatches.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

Cape Haytien, Hayti, June 1, 11:44 a. m—The torpedo boat Porter has arrived at the Mole of St. Nicholas, presumably with despatches for Washington.

WASHINGTON WAITS.

No Official News Of Any Engagement at Santiago Yet Received.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

Washington, June 1, 9:44 a. m.—The news despatches announcing the bombardment of Santiago de Cuba are generally credited in government circles here. Official despatches confirming them are momentarily expected.

Washington, June 1, 11:45 a. m.—The suspense still continues. No news has yet been received at Washington.

Washington, June 1, 1:48 p. m—President McKinley, Secretary Long and the other officials here are inundated with queries about the reported engagement at Santiago de Cuba. They universally respond discrediting all reports.

LONDON BEWILDERED.

Conflicting Reports of American and Spanish Victories Cabled There Today.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

London, June 1, 1:30 p. m—The public here is bewildered by the conflicting reports of the engagement at Santiago between the American and the Spanish fleet and shore batteries.

Stories of American and Spanish victories are cabled here with equal positiveness and plausibility.

One account says: "Commodore Schley, after exploding many mines in the channel, ran the Texas far enough into the harbor to engage and sink the Reina Mercedes."

TUGS BOMBARDED.

They Destroy a Spanish Block House Near Matanzas Monday Without Loss.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

Key West, June 1, 1:02 p. m—Reports have reached here of a small engagement between two of the armed tugs of the blockading fleet and a Spanish block house near Matanzas.

The tug Uncas arrived in port this morning. Her officers report the circumstances of the affray which occurred Monday. The Uncas and the tug Leyden participated in the affair.

The bombardment was rather one sided. Every shot from the tugs struck while only one shot was fired from the Spanish blockhouse. The fortification was destroyed and the Spaniards fled.

Rough Riders at Tampa.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

Tampa, June 1, 9:17 a. m—Roosevelt's Rough Riders have arrived in good condition at General Shafter's camp. Major General Miles has arrived at head quarters.

Greeted Dr. Mitchell.

Rev. Dr. Charles B. Mitchell, of Minneapolis, Minn., formerly pastor of the First M. E. church, was at the Methodist parsonage Tuesday afternoon, where he received a number of his old friends. An informal reception was held in which Rev. Dr. and Mrs. W. C. Snodgrass assisted in receiving. Dr. Mitchell was looking well and expressed much pleasure in being in Plainfield once more and seeing the familiar faces.

—Woolston & Buckle have begun to paint the new clubhouse.

—There will be a missionary speaker at the Congregational church Sunday evening.

TOO ARDENT LOVE OF OSCAR WAS REJECTED

But He Continued His Attentions Till He Was Arrested.

UNDER BONDS TO BE QUIET.

HATTIE STEWART'S FATHER REPULSED VAUGHN IN A STRONG WAY.

Vaughn was in the Good Graces of the Young Lady Till He Served a Sentence in Jail for Stealing a Coat —Then He was Rejected, But Still Continued to Press His Attentions on the Girl and Threatened to 'Do' the Father for Interfering—The Affair Heard Before Justice Mosher Tuesday.

Oscar Vaughn, of Harmony street, whose attentions to Miss Hattie Stewart, the daughter of John J. Stewart, of West Front street, have not been reciprocated recently, was arraigned in Justice Mosher's court Tuesday on a charge of annoying the young lady, and threatening to kill her father. Vaughn stoutly denied the charges and tried to prove that the father was the one who had made the threats, but was adjudged guilty and held in the sum of $50 to keep the peace.

Vaughn's attentions to Miss Stewart began a year ago. From the first he called frequently at the house, and often took the young lady out to church and for walks. Evetything went along smoothly for the couple until last October, when Vaughn "borrowed" an overcoat, as he termed it, from a party in Morristown and sold it. As a consequence he was arrested and sentenced to sixty days in the Morris county jail. When he was released in December, Miss Stewart told Vaughn that his attentions to Miss Stewart must cease. He was also told to keep away from the house.

This it was that brought on all the trouble. Like the true lover Vaughn determined not to let the "old man" stand in the way of his courtship, and repeatedly wrote letters to the girl, breathing out his love for her with all the ardor that a boy of twenty is capable of. These letters were kept and formed no little part in the testimony last night. Miss Hattie, like a good girl, made no reply to these epistles, except once or twice to make an appointment with Oscar to meet her on some corner where she, in company with her mother, would meet him and ask him what he meant by the threats which he was continually making against her father.

One time, it was alleged, Oscar pulled out a pistol and urged the girl to fly with him, proposing to "do" the "old man." An important witness to these threats was Richard Ayres, of Harmony street, a neighbor of Vaughn's, who testified to threats that Oscar had made.

Jed Smalley was one of the witnesses for the defendant. Jed spoke well of the prisoner, and to a question as to whether he would be willing to loan Vaughn $50 said that he had loaned him as much as twenty-five——cents.

Stewart claimed that he was obliged to change his residence from Muhlenberg place to West Front street to be rid of the annoyances of the impatient lover. The letters all began very affectionately by calling her "Dear Hattie" and were mostly of a reproachful nature because of her seeming indifference to his attentions.

Miss Hattie said that at one time she loved Vaughn, but that she no longer cared for him. When he followed her along the street she said she paid no attention to him, and as she passed Stewart said Vaughn would lay back and laugh like a "cheese-cat."

The plaintiff was represented by Counselor W. S. Angleman, and the defendant by Wm. DeMeza.

GAINING A FOOTHOLD.

Religious Revival Being Held by St. Peter's A. M. E. Zion Church.

Sunday a season of missionary revivals opened at the St. Peter's A. M. E. Zion church, colored, on Filmore avenue. The meetings will be continued until June 16th, when a rally will be held in the Cycle Academy on Watchung avenue. Leading colored preachers from all over the land are expected to be present, and one of the biggest revivals among colored people is to be instituted.

It is also expected that His Honor, Mayor Fisk, will be asked to open the meeting.

This is a new church and the people are being backed by Former Councilman Leon Spangenberg, of Netherwood, who is looking after their organization.

Mrs. H. S. Thatcher, of Chicago, is visiting Plainfield relatives.

WOMEN MADE THE MUSIC

LADIES' ORCHESTRA APPEAR AT A W. C. T. U. MUSICALE.

Opened the Programme With an Overture Militaire—Miss Lockey Heard in Recitations—Councilman Runyon Sang.

A delightful musicale was given in the chapel of the Crescent Avenue church last for the Tuesday benefit of the W. C. T. U. The Ladies' Orchestra was among the entertainers. The orchestra opened the programme with a well-rendered overture, "Militaire." There was a unity in the playing of the different instruments which brought out harmony to its best advantage.

Then followed a recitation by Miss Mary Adelaide Lockey, "Wee Willie Winkie," one of Rudyard Kipling's best. Miss Lockey gave her selection in a decidedly entertaining fashion that showed her ability in the portrayal of the various characters. A violin duet, "Symphonie," was given by Miss E. L. Matson and Mrs. J. Herbert Buckley. A soprano solo, "Forbidden Music," by Miss Katheryn Glenn followed.

Two short selections by the orchestra were followed by Councilman William N. Runyon is one of his famous songs. He was loudly encored and compelled to respond again and again.

Part second opened with the recitation of "The Child Will," a sketch taken from one of Dickon's novels, by Miss Lockey. The Ladies' Banjo and Guitar Club, largely composed of the members of the orchestra, gave the selection, "On the Mill Dam," in a pleasing manner. After another delightful solo by Miss Glenn, "Could I," the programme closed with a "Grand American Fantasia," by the orchestra. The patriotic music was received with a great outburst of applause.

GOOD THINGS TO EAT.

Strawberry and Ice Cream Festival at Monroe Avenue M. E. Church.

The Ladies' Aid Society of the Monroe Avenue church gave a strawberry and ice cream festival Tuesday. The festival was well attended. During the evening Wm. Moore entertained the audience with phonograph selections, which were much enjoyed.

Mrs. Arthur E. Conrad had charge of the strawberries; Mrs. Kinney and Wm. Eakin were in the kitchen handling the cream. Mrs. Fred Wensel was at the cake table, and the waitresses were Miss Ackerman, Miss Smith, the Misses Foster, Mrs. Edward Brown, Miss Brower and Mrs. Fulton. Mrs. Brouard had charge of the ice cream tickets.

A Better Court Room.

Justice Moffett, who has recently moved his office from over the United States Express Company to another office over Stephenson's restaurant, has the best courtroom in the city, barring the Council chamber. The Justice needed more room and, as this room was vacant, he rented it. He has fitted it up with a railing, inside of which are chairs and a table for the lawyers and reporters, and plenty of room for witnesses and even a jury. The new arrangement meets with universal approval, and as a lawyer said Tuesday, he couldn't tell, when he got inside Justice Moffett's court, but what he was in the Court of Common Pleas at Elizabeth.

New Church of Redeemer.

The fair recently held for the benefit of the building fund of the Church of the Redeemer, of the borough, netted the church the neat little sum of $1,000. The purchase price for the lot at the corner of Prospect avenue and Grove street, $3,000, will be paid over to Mr. Peck, of New York. A member of the church told a reporter that the church will begin to consider plans for their new edifice, and it is probable that it will be started within a month.

Death of Mrs. Tryon.

The death of Mrs. E. C. Tryon, aged sixty-nine years, occurred Tuesday of dropsy at the home of her brother-in-law, W. S. Benton, Babcock building. Mrs. Tryon was formerly of Westfield, but she has resided in this city since last August. The funeral services was held yesterday afternoon at 1 o'clock from the home of Mr. Benton. Interment was at Ingraham, Clinton county, New York.

Helping the Earnest Workers.

The entertainment recently given at the residence of Mrs. Charles Ames for the benefit of the Boys' Mission Band, "The Earnest Workers," cleared $32.09. At the last regular meeting of the band resolutions were adopted tendering thanks to Mrs. Ames, Mrs. Brooks and the other friends who assisted in making the affair so great a success.

Miss Lewis, of Grove street, is visiting Trenton friends for a short time.

PRESENT MAIL SERVICE.

IMPROVEMENTS THAT POSTMASTER HETFIELD HAS ACCOMPLISHED.

The Plainfield Office is Considered a Model One for a Second Class City, Both in Point of Enterprise and Efficiency.

The postoffice, pending the change in postmasters, is a subject of no little interest to Plainfielders just at the present time.

Tuesday John M. Hetfield, the present postmaster, finished his four-year term as head of Plainfield's office, having taken possession June 1, 1894, although his commission bears the date of May 11th.

It is no easy matter to step into a postoffice, like the one in this city, and handle the reins of authority with the skill and exactness required. The postal laws change every month, and it requires an alert mind to catch all ends of the business and to keep pace with the changes. The present incumbent, Mr. Hetfield, has made his work a special study and, as a result, the residents of Plainfield can look upon the improvements that are being enjoyed here and know that even first-class city postoffices have not yet received them.

A brief outline of Mr. Hetfield's term and some of the changes that are due to him would not come amiss in the first place, Mr. Hetfield was instrumental in removing the office from its quarters on East Front street to the present spacious building.

This was done without any added cost to the Government, and the office was fitted up with the latest and most approved postoffice fixtures. So well pleased with the change was Inspector Lewis, who covers this district, that he has said he doesn't expect to see the office moved from its present location, because of its adaptability. The postoffice in Morristown has been patterned from the one in this city.

Mr. Hetfield has increased the carriers' territory so that mail is delivered to all the residents of the city. By a permanent change in the carriers' work, and an economy of time here and there, Mr. Hetfield was able to give the residential portion of the city three deliveries a day, instead of two. The Netherwood office has been abolished and free delivery given to that portion of the city instead. Stamp stations have been established in the eastern and western parts of the city.

A quicker mail system has also been established. Instead of the western mails being sent to New York and several hours being lost in transportation, the pouches are put on the train in this city and go right through to the Pacific slope. The Philadelphia mails have also been changed so that business men can get a letter from that city in the mornings mail and have the answer in the hands of his correspondent in Philadelphia before night.

The Plainfield office is reckoned one of the best second class offices. The salary is $2,800, with appropriations for outside expenses, such as heat, light, clerk hire, etc.

Mr. Hetfield is engaging in the coal business and expects to step from the postmastership into active business life.

The eleven carriers connected with the office are worthy of mention. Each one of them covers from fifteen to twenty miles a day. With the exception of Dunn, who covers Evona, Ravelle, who goes to Netherwood, Glaentzer, who delivers in the business part of the city, and Edward Hann, all ride wheels. The first two are mounted and Glaentzer and Hann go on foot.

PROMINENT MAN TO RESIDE HERE.

Police Commissioner H. H. Abernethy Coming to Plainfield.

To the already long list of prominent people in this city there is to be added that of another family, when Plainfielders will welcome in a few days H. H. Abernethy and family, of Jersey City. Mr. Abeerthy is president of Board of Police Commissioners in Jersey City, and still has another year to serve. He is one of Jersey City's well known and popular citizens. He is a charming daughter, who will be an acquisition to Plainfield's society. Mr. Abernethy has leased, through the agency of E. C. Mulford & Son, real estate and insurance brokers, Walter Manning's new and handsome residence on West Seventh street, near Grant avenue, and will take possession June 15th.

To Aid the Red Cross Society.

A porch fair will be given next Saturday afternoon on the plazza of the home of Miss Grace E. Overton, Rockview avenue. It will be for the benefit of the National Red Cross Society. It will be held under the direction of Miss Grace E. Overton and Miss Eleanor T. VanDeventer.

Miss Ella Gardner, of Arlington avenue, has been visiting in New York.

THE CRESCENTS WERE THRICE VICTORIOUS.

Two Base Ball Games Yesterday at the Crescent Oval.

A GAME PLAYED SATURDAY.

THE LOCAL TEAM EASILY SWEPT ALL BEFORE THEM.

The Hoboken A. A. Was Defeated Saturday by a Score of 17 to 5—The Memorial Day Morning Game With the Murray Hills Was an Exciting One—The Visitors Made a Hard Fight After the First Inning—The Afternoon Game With the Octocons Was an Easy Thing—Crescents Won by 16 to 1.

Three more victories have been added to the record of the Crescent base ball club during the last few days. The excellent form shown by the local team brought even the most unenthusiastic to admit that Manager Mumford has a wonderful aggregation of players, who are capable of holding their own with the best of the semi-professional nines.

Saturday afternoon the Crescents met the Hoboken A. A. on the Crescent Oval and administered a crushing defeat by a score of 17 to 5. MacLarty was never hit hard, the Hoboken team scoring only three hits, while the Crescents made eleven. Both sides made eight errors each.

Monday morning an exciting game was played with the Murry Hill Field Club in which the Crescents were victorious by a score of 7 to 3. A few fatal errors and some timely hitting scored four runs for the home team in the first inning. Then the visitors steadied down and made a plucky fight. They scored three times and were making things lively when the Crescents found the ball in the eighth and batted out three runs. The Murray Hills were handicapped by the loss of their regular pitcher.

The detailed score follows:

The game of the afternoon proved a farce. The Octocons came from the Orange Athletic Club, cracked up to be a warm team. They were easy prey to the Crescents, however. Terrible errors and several hits netted five runs in the first inning for the Crescents. In the second they made seven on heavy batting. Then the local team settled down to play with the dusky players. MacLaughlin found much fun as the different batters faced him only to succomb to his curves.

BOROUGH WILL HAVE NEW SCHOOL HOUSE.

Voters Authorized the Expense Tuesday Night.

WILL COST ABOUT $21,000.

BUILDING WILL BE AT MOUNTAIN AND WATCHUNG AVENUES.

The Structure Will be Modern in All Details and Will Contain Six Class Rooms—Maturing Bonds of $2000 Denomination Will be Issued in 1908 and Redeemed by 1914—Two Sites Submitted to the Voters—Considerable Discussion Concerning the Plan, But Only One Objector to Better Facilities.

There were only about seventy-six taxpayers and voters in the borough who thought it of sufficient importance to attend the special school meeting held in the borough public school last Tuesday for the purpose of deciding upon the advisability of erecting another school building in the borough. The matter was settled, however, and North Plainfield is to have another fine school building.

At 8 o'clock John McCutchen, president of the School Board, called the meeting to order and Senator Reed was elected chairman. J. K. Arnold was chosen secretary.

Mr. McCutchen stated the object of the meeting after the call was read by Secretary Arnold. He stated that as a result of the meeting held last January, the Board of Education had prepared plans, specifications and tangible facts concerning the probable cost of a new school. It was the desire of the Board to locate a new school apart from the present one and it was deemed wise that it should contain at least six class rooms. Approximately the cost would be $16,000, $17,000 or $18,000.

The Board had considered two properties. One at the southwest corner of Watchung and Summit avenues, 158x150. The other at the corner of Watchung and Mountain avenues. It had since been learned that in both victinities there was a quantity of water close to surface and that people living in the neighborhood are troubled with water in their cellars. Hence the question of locating at either point. On second consideration it was thought that the ground could be raised and thus the difficulty would be overcome. On the first property an option had been secured at a price of $2,100, and on the second an option for the price of $1,700. In the judgment of the Board one of the two properties should be purchased. An architect had furnished plans of a school for the borough from which a similar building had been erected at Norwich, Conn. It would therefore be no experiment for the borough to erect such a school. Regarding the estimated cost, $21,000. It was thought wise to set that cost at that figure so that everything necessary could be included. The Board would be disappointed if the cost of the building should reach those figures, but is always well to provide for emergencies.

At this time Mr. Woolston offered a motion that the Summit avenue property be purchased.

W. E. Brock said that he did not favor either location, as they were not central enough and were not in a district where children are to be found. He said that the borough does not need a school there and it would be better to place a building near the Park. He stated that the taxes in the borough are high at present and that they had been raised every year he had lived in the borough. Continuing, he said, "there are better school facilities now in the borough than there were when I went to school, and I think the present facilities are sufficient."

John Vallant said in reply, "I would not like to see a condition of affairs such as were in existence when I went to school, and I would not like to see such retrogression."

Mr. McCutchen offered a motion that the Board be authorized to purchase the Mountain avenue property at a cost not to exceed $1,800. There were 77 votes cast, of which number 43 were in favor of the motion and 33 against. Another resolution was offered by Mr. McCutchen that the Board be authorized to erect a brick building on the property to contain at least six class rooms at a cost not to exceed $18,000. On this resolution there were 76 votes cast, 47 of which were for and 29 against the resolution.

The last resolution offered by Mr. McCutchen was to the effect that for the purpose of erecting the building and furnishing the same bonds in the

The Woman's World

What a Woman's Sympathy Can Do.

There was a strangely sympathetic side to this saddest of the prisons of Paris (St. Lazare, for women). The sick and worn out were always tenderly regarded by their fellow prisoners, and if a woman died in the prison it was not unusual for the rest to club together to provide a costly funeral.

In the early days of the Restoration, a pretty peasant girl named Marie was sent to St. Lazare for stealing roses. She had a passion for the flower, and a thousand mystical notions had woven themselves about it in her mind. She said that rose trees would detach themselves from their roots and glide after her wherever she went, to tempt her to pluck the blossoms. One in a garden, taller than the rest, had compelled her to climb the wall and gather as many roses as she could, and there the gendarmes found her.

This poor girl excited the most vivid interest in that sordid place. The prisoners plotted to restore her to reason, christened her Rose, which delighted her, and set themselves to make artificial roses for her of silk and paper. Those fingers, so rebellious at allotted tasks, created roses without number, until Marie's cell was transformed into a bower.

An interested director of prison labor seconded these efforts, and opened in St. Lazare a work room for the manufacture of artificial flowers, to which Marie was introduced as an apprentice.

Here she made roses from morning till night, and her dread of the future being dispelled, the malady of her mind reached its term with the end of her sentence, and she left the prison cured and happy. She became one of the most successful florists in Paris.

How to Walk and be Benefited.

To derive the greatest benefit from walking it is necessary to hold up the head; keep the mouth closed and move briskly; it is in these circumstances that walking is really good for us. Walking erect not only adds to the manliness of appearance, but it developes the chest and promotes the general health in a high degree, because the lungs, being relieved of the pressure made by leaning the head downward and bending the chest in admit the air fully and freely. If an effort of the mind is made to throw the shoulders back a feeling of fatigue and awkwardness is at first experienced, but this is soon forgotten. To maintain an erect position or to recover it when lost, in a manner which is at once natural, easy and efficient, it is only necessary to walk habitually with the eyes fixed on an object ahead a little higher than your own—the top of a man's hat, for example—or simply keep the chin a little above a horizontal line. If either of these things are done the necessary easy and legitimate effect is to relieve the chest from pressure, the air gets in more easily, develops it more fully and permeates the lungs more excensively, causing a more perfect purification of the blood, imparting greater health and more color to the cheek.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Don't Always Protest.

The protesting woman may please a man occasionally, but she can never make herself eternally pleasing to him Suppose a man offers to take a letter to the box on the corner for you, to buy some medicine that he thinks would do your cold good, to step around to a library to get some book that you are wishing for; don't protest. Your impulse and the impulse of the average woman of to-day is, "I may rather impatiently, "Oh, I wouldn't trouble you for worlds. I can mail my own letter," or "I never take medicine for a cold," or "I have something else I can read to-night." In your heart you appreciate the man's offer, but you obey your first impulse, and that is to protest. I know men well, and they aren't half bad. They are creatures who never do anything that they do not want to do, or, rather, when they do a thing it is solely because they want to do it, and it provokes them beyond polite expression to have a woman know that she had rather do things for herself. Every woman loves to be pleasing to men, and the woman who makes the greatest success along this line is she who always, under all circumstances, allows men to do things for her. Every woman should see to it that she crushes down and chokes out the impulse in her to protest.

For Cramps in the Leg.

A doctor offers this advice to people who suffer from cramp in the legs: "When I have a patient who is subject to cramp I always advise him to provide himself with a good, stout cord. A long garter will do if nothing else is handy. When the cramp comes on take the cord, wind it around the leg over the place that is cramped, and take an end in each hand and give it a sharp pull—one that will hurt a little. Instantly the cramp will depart, and the sufferer can go to bed assured that it will not come on again that night. I have tried myself many a good night's rest simply by posting my patients subject to spasms of the legs how to use the cord as above. I have never known it to fail, and I have tried it after they had worked half the night and the patient was in the most intense agony."—Troy Times.

Helpful Items.

To keep milk good for several days a spoonful of scraped horseradish should be put into the pan.

Before serving watercress the cress should be carefully picked over and left to remain in salt and water for some time before serving it.

To assist the rising of cream, a small quantity of clear water, cold in summer and warm in winter, should be put into the bottom of the pan or basin in which the milk is set.

The brown stains on plates and pie-dishes caused by the heat of the oven can easily be removed by soaking in soda and water, and then rubbing with powdered bath-brick, or a few ashes from the grate. Afterwards rinse in warm water.

When a hot bath is given to a child for its health, it should not be allowed to remain in the bath longer than five minutes; as a general rule three minutes will be sufficient. On removing the child it should be carefully dried, and wrapped in a warm blanket.

Dainty Frock in Nun's Veiling.

Nuns' veiling in black, white and all the lovely shades of pink, mauve, green, blue and gray, promises to be extremely fashionable for dresses this summer. This material is particularly useful as it falls so easily into the graceful folds which are now so much the vogue.

For young girls gowns of this material are very youthful and becoming. A lovely frock for a dainty blonde is of a delicate shade of green, with trimmings of lilac. The waist, slightly bloused, has a round shirred yoke with neckband and ceinture of lilac velvet. Double epaulets and a frill at the wrist finish the shirred sleeve. Fine silk braid in green and lilac forms the decoration.

An Evening Gown.

Gowns for evening wear are particularly lovely this season. On these costumes elaborate decorations of chiffon are used, and sometimes compose the entire material of the gown. The embroidered variety of chiffon is especially pretty.

A dainty gown for a young debutante was composed of flowered chiffon over yellow satin. The corsage was cut decollete, the yellow satin artistically draped from the left shoulder. Part of the sleeves were of the satin, the ruffles over them of accordeon pleated chiffon. Another handsome gown in delicate shades of green was richly embroidered with large white daisies having yellow centers.

Stuffed Sweet Potatoes.

Just now stuffed sweet potatoes are more palatable perhaps than the plain ones, which have lost their best flavor and grain. The potatoes should be made thoroughly clean by scrubbing the skins with a vegetable scrubbing brush. After they are baked, one end of each is cut off, the inside then being removed with a pointed teaspoon, care being taken not to break the skins. The potatoes are pressed through a perforated potato-masher, and a piece of butter and about a tablespoonful to every potato of chicken, veal or boiled ham minced fine. The mixture should be highly seasoned before being put back in any again in each skin, and the potator returned to the oven for a reheating of about ten minutes.

Brass Clothes Trees.

Brass clothes-trees are late additions in the furniture shops. They have the advantage of weight, which gives them stability, a quality often lacking in the article. With them are seen, too, standing bowl-racks. It has been supposed that this form of the rack was practically eliminated from use, and to have such made of brass does not commend itself especially. Wet towels, thrown over the brass rack, would soon work injury alike to themselves and their support.

AMERICAN WOMEN IN CONGRESS.

This Gathering Will Bring Together the Most Advanced Ladies in the Country.

Denver, Colo.—No event in many years has aroused such general interest throughout the country as the coming fourth biennial session of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, which will convene here on June 22. Extensive preparations are being made by the local committee to welcome the Eastern visitors and they are looking forward with eagerness and enthusiasm to the coming of this grand body of women.

It is not forgotten by the club women of Colorado that this gathering will bring together the most advanced women of the country, and that to them the Colorado woman will be of more than ordinary interest. As progressive women and voters the fame of the Colorado woman has gone abroad, and now she is determined to "put her best foot forward" and prove to the curious that she can vote, hold office, even come into close contact with politicians of dubious shade, and yet keep sweet, clean and womanly. The women of the west have a message for their sisters from the east and south charged with a mighty meaning; a meaning that, profited by and lived up to, will shake womankind from much of the narrowness of the past.

The officers of the General Federation of Women's Clubs are: President, Mrs. E. M. Henrotin, Chicago; vice-president, Mrs. Alice Ives Breed, Lynn, Mass.; recording secretary, Mrs. C. P. Barnes, Louisville, Ky.; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Philip N. Moore, St. Louis; treasurer, Mrs. Frank Trumbull, Denver; auditor, Miss Annie Laws, Cincinnati.

Mrs. Alice Ives Breed, the vice-president, will appear at the biennial as candidate for the presidency to succeed Mrs. Henrotin. Club women will be interested to know something of the women, who have charge of the preparations for the great gathering. Mrs. G. W. Fisher, the chairman of the Entertainment Committee, is one of the wealthiest women in the West. She has a host of friends throughout the East and especially in New York State. Mrs. Fisher has chosen for her assistant women who are not only powers in the social world, but they have much to offer the biennial.

MRS. W. G. FISHER.

Mrs. Mahlon D. Thatcher, the president of the Colorado Federation, is much admired and beloved in the organization, to which she is loyally and unselfishly devoted. The wife of one of the state's wealthiest men, her distinguishing characteristic is a gentle and unassuming courtesy, which endears her to all. The federation, under her leadership, has increased to one hundred clubs, a number exceeding that of many States with a population much larger.

Mrs. James Grant, of this city, is the president of the local Biennial Board for the coming meeting.

A Peculiar Remedy.

RASHES NOT A POSITIVE NECESSITY

The Neck Arrangements Stamp the Costumes Quite as Much as the Cut.

(By special arrangement with the N.Y. Sun.)

The modes of making and trimming the bodice are very nearly on the old lines; the sleeves are simply a little smaller, and while the skirt has acquired a reputation for shifting methods of construction, the simple gored skirt with five seven gores and less fullness is still very popular.

A skirt model which is considered especially good style for thin wool materials, organdies and lawns, is cut with either six or seven gores, yet measures only three and a half yards at the bottom. It is trimmed with two circular flounces about eight inches wide, arranged straight across the back and rounding up narrowly at either side of the front to the waist, where they meet forming a small panel below.

It is the neckgear which stamps a costume as modish, quite as much as the cut. Stocks are the hand rage, and or sailor knots made of the same material as the waist are especially good style, while other fashionable stocks are of white pique with a colored silk four-in-hand or narrow tie, which forms a small bow. There are also white and colored silk ties with knotted fringe on the ends, and soft ties of net chiffon and Liberty gauze will be very much worn with the cotton and linen gowns.

Bashes are a very pretty addition to the thin gowns, but they are not a positive necessity, as many of the muslin gowns have simply a belt and bow of ribbon at the side in front, or directly at the back. The chiffon sashes in black, white or colored are the prettiest of all. They are cut fully three-quarters of a yard wide and trimmed on the ends with ruffles of the same material or frills of lace. Ribbon sashes are made of plaid ribbons and some of the former are crossed diagonally at intervals for the entire length with ruffles of black lace edging four inches wide, each one finished at the head with a ruche of narrow lace. Another dressy sash is made of two rows of seven-inch ribbon joined together lengthwise with black lace insertion, and ruffled across the ends with lace edging.

AN ARMENIAN WOMAN'S TRICK.

Maine Peddlerbabe Upened by Sympathy with a Dollar-a-Week Baby.

The latest and most successful method by which Armenian peddlers awaken sympathy and secure trade has recently been exposed. One Armenian woman went to Maine six years ago, and as soon as she had learned English enough to make changing and say "Buy my goods, me Chreesten," she started out peddling. Since then she has sent $800 home to her people, and has had $1,500 in a Bangor bank.

Though her husband and children remained in Armenia, she always went out on her trips carrying a dark-faced baby along, and she lugged for miles over country roads and held up in the face of the people who met her at the houses where she called for trade. The good wives and mothers, seeing the pinched and hungry child, bought out of sympathy, gave her free lunch and dinner, and often harnessed up a horse and took her from house to house, thus helping her to secure trade.

Though the woman was frugal, she would drink all the liquor that her customers would buy for her. Actually while the quarts per week, but a garden plat can be made to give a larger proportionate yield than a field.

Many female moths have only rudimentary wings and pupate in the ground or they have to climb the trees to lay their eggs. For this reason several of our destructive moths can be kept off the fruit trees by a slight application of tar and grease. The canker worm and tussock moth are cases in point.

Growing Raspberries.

A correspondent of the Agriculturist says: "My fields are of a sandy loam with a clay sub-soil. I find that any land suitable for a good crop of wheat or corn will grow raspberries. The soil is prepared early in spring as possible, plowed, harrowed, pulverized and fertilized, using 15 loads of stable manure to the acre. Every other year I put on about half a ton of unleached wood ashes and 600 lbs. of bone dust. The amount of fertilizer will be governed by the character of the soil. Set plants 4 inches deep, spreading the roots and covering them with earth pressed firmly. Then add some more earth, leaving the upper two inches loose. Start the cultivator without delay, going over the field once a week, but not more than two inches deep. As the bushes become larger, keep out all the weeds in the row. This frequent stirring of the soil will prevent injury from drouth. The second year give thorough cultivation as before, and if thought necessary apply fertilizer by sowing it broadcast over the surface. I mulch my vines a few days before picking begins and find that money used in this manner is well spent."

Farm Telephones Practicable.

The farmer must be a business man and should be connected with the world. But few farmers can live near a telegraph office and the telephone offers direct communication. If the farmer need the doctor or groceries, or repair for machinery, he is in instant communication with these people, and, in a rainy day or during the winter when the roads are well-nigh impassable, the farmer can do business with the cattle dealer, or any business men in the city.

Telephones are cheap now and can be bought for $10 to $15, and the line can be put in by subscription. Poles can be bought very cheaply and ought to be from 20 to 25 feet long, 8 inches in diameter at the base, and placed 200 feet apart. This would mean 25 poles to the mile. Good wire costs $2.35 per 100 lbs., and nobs 75c. The total cost will be about $17.75 per mile. Any farmer who once uses the telephone will never be without it again. It adds to the community and is an education and a step toward a better civilization.—C. C. Mills in Agriculturist.

Strawberries.

It is the practice in Oswego county, New York, to allow beds of strawberries to fruit but one year. This is varied somewhat with different varieties and with different modes of treatment. Where the plants are set in the fall, they may be allowed to fruit the following spring and then again the following season. Where the plants are grown in hills or narrow matted rows, they may be kept several years if fertilized annually and sprayed for the leaf blight and mildew. There is no use keeping them in the same beds year after year unless they are sprayed, as disease will surely destroy the vines. In this county the berries are grown mostly in matted rows, and after they have fruited the vines are ploughed under and buckwheat or crimson clover sown. If for any reason the first crop is small, due sometimes to an excess of nitrogen in the soil, one may plow the bed and let it fruit more than one year.—Troy Times.

Crimson Clover.

The Country Gentleman thus speaks of crimson clover: "Crimson clover has been sown in this latitude on both winter grain and with spring grain. If the spring happens to be favorable, the clover will usually succeed. But should there be a dry spring, and should the soil be firmly packed, as is usually the case with winter grain, the clover would be likely to fail. It might be well to make an experiment with the clover on a part of the wheat field. Sow about ten pounds per acre, and with the drill-seeder is slightest. If the season is favorable, so one can get a growth of clover, there is no question about its being of value to plough under. Crimson clover makes very handsome bloom in late summer and fall. It seems to delight in a moderately cool climate. Crimson clover probably never will be grown to any extent in New York, except as a catch crop or as a cover crop in orchards and on corn stubble."

Agricultural Notes.

A horse trained to walk fast, whether he be for the saddle, single harness or team, always commands a better price than one equally good in other respects, but a slow walker.

A heavy road roller on country roads will at least pack the earth and prevent ruts, though it is difficult to find a good road when the frost is leaving the ground unless the road is well drained and carefully made.

Much of the winter killing of clover is due to the fact that the fields are too closely cropped by live stock late in the fall, and there is no top left to protect the roots. If left to grow up after the first of October there would be less cause for complaint.

As much as 10,000 quarts of strawberries have been grown on an acre. A plat fifty feet square will produce more than 600 quarts, in the same proportion. It is not every grower who secures 6,000 quarts per acre, but a garden plat can be made to give a larger proportionate yield than a field.

A Good Mixture for Spraying.

White arsenic, in a soluble form, costs about one-third as much as Paris green, and gives no trouble in the way of settling. To prepare it, dissolve two pounds of commercial white arsenic and four pounds of carbonate of soda (washing soda) in two gallons of water and use one and one-half pints to a barrel of Bordeaux mixture (fifty gallons).

The easiest way to make a solution is to put both the white arsenic and carbonate of soda in a gallon of boiling water, and keep boiling about fifteen minutes, or until a clear liquid is formed, and then dilute to two gallons. One and one-half pints of this solution to each barrel of Bordeaux mixture is sufficient to use when spraying for potato blight and potato bugs, for apple scab and apple worms, or for any other purpose where a combination mixture for fungi and insects is required.

This combination has been fully tested at the Ohio Experiment Station and found to be quite as effective as the Paris green and Bordeaux mixture combination, and for the reasons given above is much to be preferred.

The arsenic and soda solution, or arsenite of soda, is more safely used in combination with Bordeaux mixture than alone, as, when in combination, it will not injure the foliage, but alone it is liable to burn the leaves. The same objection holds good, however, with reference to Paris green and London purple. It is better, however, in almost every case, to use the combination mixture, as fungi are nearly always present, and, unless they are kept in check, there is but little use of fighting insects.

Salt of Little Value for Onions.

Very few practical onion growers use salt as a fertilizer. Those who have tried it claim that little or no effect was observed from the application. At least the benefit is so small that it is found impracticable to use it.

Prof. Roberts of Cornell university says: "From 300 to 400 lbs. of salt evenly distributed over the surface sometimes materially improves the crop. At other times no beneficial results are seen. There is no evidence that it would be more likely to improve onions than other cereals. The full action of salt applied to land is not very well known. It assists the soil in conserving moisture and in securing moisture from the air. An application of equal parts of salt and gypsum, 200 to 300 lbs. per acre, is often beneficial, especially on dry soils. Since the onion thrives best on a moist soil, it is more than likely that a reasonable application of salt to the onion land would be beneficial."

George W. Hallock of Long Island has not applied salt to onions but found that a piece of ground usually devoted to onions after being flooded by an exceptionally high tide, would not grow onions the same season. He therefore concludes that salt is not beneficial and may be a detriment. The Ohio experiment station applied salt to onions with no observed result except possibly an increase in soil moisture. It seems, therefore, unwise to apply salt as a fertilizer for onions. Devote the money and time to other manures known to be beneficial.—American Agriculturist.

Smoked Meat.

When ready to hang up meat for smoking have at hand a quantity of wire, such as baled hay is fastened with, and have it cut into pieces twelve inches long, and bend into the shape of the "pot-hooks." Fasten one of these hooks into the hock end of each shoulder and ham and two in each middling, and hang the pieces on nails fastened in the joists. These hooks are easily made, are handy to put on and take off, saving time and trouble of tying a lot of strings, and one set, taken care of, will last a lifetime. Green wood is best for smoking meat. The most seems to take the smoke from trees wood faster than from dry wood. Hickory, oak or apple tree wood will impart a bright, handsome color, and a good taste to bacon. Many sorts of wood give a disagreeable taste to it. Cedar, mulberry, allantus and pine are of this sort. Borax, powdered fine and rubbed on the flesh side of the pieces, when you hang them up to smoke them, will keep the bacon clear of the skippers.

The Way to Fatten a Hog Quickly.

To fatten a hog quickly and well it never should be given any more than it will eat, and have appetite enough to clean the last vestment from the trough. Enough it should have, but when it begins to leave any food behind the trough should be cleaned and washed out and the animal left without food for a time long enough to induce it to come to the trough and squeal for its feed. If this is not done the hog will not eat, or, at least, will only eat very daintily, and will shrink in flesh faster than K would by a course of total abstinence from food for a day or two.

Pip and Feather Eating.

In pip the tongue of the fowl is hardened. Moisten it several times with sweet oil and a few drops of epsom salts; let the hardened skin wear away of its own accord. Feather eating usually occurs when fowls are closely confined, with little chance for exercise, and no change in food. It is not uncommon among fowls that are kept scratching and fed with a variety of food. When the vice appears, stamp out the first offenders. If the stock is valuable mix powdered aloes with lard and apply freely to the spots attacked.

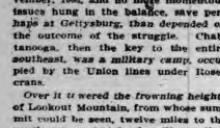
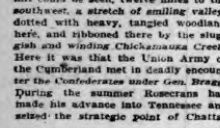
CHICKAMAUGA PARK.

The selection of Chickamauga Park as a headquarters for army mobilization in the struggle with Spain again brings into prominence that historic region around which such fierce and bloody work was done in the civil war. No granded or wilder stretch of country can be seen than the broad sweep of mountain and river-threaded plain over which the two armies clashed in those fateful combats of September and November, 1863, and no more momentous issues hung in the balance, save perhaps at Gettysburg, than depended on the outcome of the struggle. Chattanooga, then the key to the entire southeast, was a military camp, occupied by the Union lines under Rosecrans.

Over it it wered the frowning heights of Lookout Mountain, from whose summit could be seen, twelve miles to the southwest, a stretch of smiling valley, dotted with heavy, tangled woodland here, and ribboned there by the sluggish and winding Chickamauga Creek. Here it was that the Union Army of the Cumberland met in deadly encounter the Confederates under Gen. Bragg. During the summer Rosecrans had made his advance into Tennessee and seized the strategic point of Chattanooga, and then, by a series of brilliant flanking movements, had forced Bragg to retire into Georgia. It was badly selected ground for battle, because so many obstacles were presented to the handling of artillery by the marsh land and tangled forest growth, but every inch was hotly contested, both sides displaying superb heroism, unexcelled by any engagement of the war. But darkness came down upon an undecided battlefield. The combat raged on the following day with even greater fury, for Longstreet's division, part of it at least, had reached the scene during the night, and that able soldier at once took the right of the Confederate line, while the left fell to the Bishop-General Polk. The latter led off with a hot charge on the Union left, under Gen. "Pap" Thomas, but the latter drove him back with heavy loss. Compensation soon came to the Confederate side in the powerful assault of Longstreet on the Union center and right under the personal command of Rosecrans, whose much death in California left Longstreet the only prominent leader now living of all the generals on that Chickamauga field.



Shell Monument at Headquarters of Rosecrans, Chickamauga.



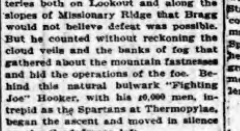
Phelps's Monument, Missionary Ridge, Chickamauga.

"Somebody blundered," is the way history will charitably account for what followed. Rosecrans gave a mistaken order to Gen. T. J. Wood, and the result was a bad breach in the lines of the Union forces. Longstreet lost no time in seizing advantage of the error, and the boys in gray plunged through the gap. McCook's entire army corps was routed, and a portion of Crittenden's as well. Rosecrans, believing the day lost, fled to Chickamauga and telegraphed to President Lincoln that his army was strongly formed on a vantage ground, which enabled his division to hold out after repeated assaults from the combined Confederate strength.

Though outnumbered two to one, Thomas and his men met and repulsed charge after charge of the enemy, and were still in position when darkness settled down on the death-strewn plain. But he knew it would be tempting disaster to renew the unequal conflict on the morrow, so he fell back to Rossville, under cover of night, and led his entire command to Chattanooga. The two furious days of struggle, therefore, at Chickamauga resulted, as the authorities now concede, in a Confederate victory. They held the battlefield, had captured fifty guns and some thousands of wounded prisoners; but still the real prize at stake, the stronghold at Chickamauga, remained in Union hands. So it was, practically, a drawn battle. There was no reversal, no settlement till Rosecrans was removed from command of the Army of the Cumberland and Gen. Grant was placed over the combined armies of the Ohio and the Tennessee, and Bragg was routed from the front of Chattanooga.

When Grant succeeded Rosecrans, the four departments of the division of the Mississippi were commanded by Sherman, Thomas, Hooker and Burnside. Chattanooga, strategically recognized as the key to military operations against the Confederacy in that vast and vital region opened up by the famous march to the sea, was at once the great prize to be fought for and won. The outlook was anything but cheering. Longstreet had gone to repel the advance of Burnside at Knoxville, 150 miles off, and Bragg, with his entire division, had Thomas practically in a state of siege at Chattanooga. Grant's first object was to raise this siege by storming the strong crescent line of the enemy that frowned menacingly down from that natural Gibraltar, the heights of Lookout Mountain and Missionary Ridge.

So steep were the mountain sides, so defended by the heavy Confederate batteries both on Lookout and along the slopes of Missionary Ridge that Bragg would not believe defeat was possible. But he counted without reckoning the cloud veils and the banks of fog that gathered about the mountain fastnesses and hid the operations of the foe. Behind this natural bulwark "Fighting Joe" Hooker, with his 40,000 men, intrepid as the Spartans at Thermopylae, began the ascent and moved in silence on the Confederate left.



Lookout Mountain, as seen from Chickamauga Park.

It was one of the famous and dramatic surprises in history when the yelling ranks of blue broke steadily through the banks of cloud that screened the summit and had the enemy on the hip. The Confederates broke in a panic, leaving batteries and 2,000 prisoners in Hooker's hands. This memorable battle of Lookout Mountain, or "battle above the clouds," was the second in the trio of engagements which have made the region over which Lookout reigns a monarch unforgettable in American story.

The third and crowning achievement came on the day following, when Sherman moved against that strong, brief*ling line of gray that stretched along* the heights of Missionary Ridge. Bragg had staked his all as a war strategist on the ability of his forces to hold this Confederate center and right against every assault. Three times the daunt*less blue-coats rushed at the entrenched* foemen like a mighty wave, and three times they were dashed back, like an ocean breaker by a strong sea wall. On both sides the loss of life was appalling. The day was rapidly drawing to a close, and the ranks of gray held their own like immovable granite.

Cavalry Monument Chickamauga, Erected by the State of Tennessee.

It was about 3 o'clock in the afternoon, when Sheridan, Wood and Baird, leading three divisions of the army under Thomas, came into action, and again the Union yell and the fierce charge upon the guarded slopes. It was too much for the stern defenders. They yielded and fled before the irresistible onset. "The enemy," says Gen. Bragg, in his own account of the engagement, "having secured much of our artillery, soon availed themselves of our panic, and turning our guns upon us, enfiladed our lines right and left, rendering them wholly untenable. Fortunately, it was now near nightfall, and the country and the roads in our rear were fully known to us, but unknown to the enemy. The routed left made its way back in great disorder. It was decided to put the army in motion for a point farther removed from a powerful and victorious army, that we might have time to recuperate for another struggle."

So ended the battle of Missionary Ridge, with the Union forces, checked at Chickamauga in September, in full and undisputed command of the Chattanooga key to the South.

All this was thirty-five years ago. The Chickamauga battleground, adorned with memorial tombs and hallowed landmarks, is a national military park, under the government's fostering care. Under one flag lie the heroes who fell on both sides in that awful struggle.

Winchester Twenty Miles Away.

No more clash of blood-brethren in arms; no hostile battle lines; no warring standards; no discordant battle yells to break the peace of the soft Southland air; but, instead, another army, united in patriotism, massing with solemn eagerness to protect the Stars and Stripes, to defend a common country from attack, to avenge the martyrs of the Maine, and to throttle Spanish inhumanity on the Western hemisphere for all time to come. What grander inspiration than the scenes and memories of Chickamauga?—S. P. Butler, in New York Mail and Express.

PRIVATE HOWE'S PAY.

How the Inventor of the Sewing Machine Served His Country.

When the civil war broke out an immense meeting was held in Bridgeport, Conn., and many men volunteered for the army. To the general surprise, one of the richest men in the State, Elias Howe, the inventor of the sewing machine, arose and made this brief speech:

"Every man is called upon to do what he can for his country. I don't know what I can do, unless it is to enlist and serve as a private; I am willing to leave and do what I can with a musket."

But it soon proved that the chronic lameness from which Howe suffered incapacitated him from marching with a musket, even to the extent of standing sentry. Determined to be of use, however, he volunteered to serve the regiment as its postmaster, messenger and expressman.

Sending home for a suitable horse and wagon he drove into Baltimore twice a day, and brought to the camp its letters and papers.

For four months after the 17th Connecticut entered the field the Government was so pressed for money that no payment to the troops could be made, and there was consequently great suffering among the families of the soldiers and painful anxiety endured by the men themselves.

One day a private soldier came quietly into the paymaster's office in Washington and took his seat in the corner to await his turn for an interview. Presently the officer said:

"Well, my man," what can I do for you?"

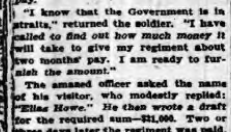
"I have called to see about the payment of the 17th Connecticut," answered the soldier.

The paymaster, somewhat irritated by what he supposed a needless and impertinent interruption, told him sharply that he "could do nothing without money, and that until the Government furnished some it was useless for soldiers to come bothering him about pay."

"I know that the Government is in straits," returned the soldier. "I have called to find out how much money it will take to give my regiment about two months' pay. I am ready to furnish the amount."

The amazed officer asked the name of his visitor, who modestly replied: "Elias Howe." He then wrote a draft for the required sum, $21,600. Two or three days later the regiment was paid. When Mr. Howe's name was called he went up to the paymaster's desk and signed the receipt for $21.65 of his own money.

The officers of a neighboring regiment sent over to the 17th Connecticut to see if they could not "borrow their private."



SONG SAVED HIS LIFE.

A Remarkable Voice Which was Recognized Almost Many Years.

Two Americans who were crossing the Atlantic met in the cabin on Sunday night to sing hymns. As they sang the last hymn, "Jesus, Lover of My Soul," one of them heard an exceedingly rich and beautiful voice behind him. He looked around, and although he did not know the face, he thought he knew the voice. So, when the music ceased he turned and asked the man if he had been in the civil war. The man replied that he had been a Confederate soldier.

"Were you at such a place at such a night?" asked the first.

"Yes," he replied, "and a curious thing happened that night which this hymn has recalled to my mind. I was posted on sentry duty near the edge of a wood. It was a dark night and very cold, and I was a little frightened, because the enemy were supposed to be very near. About midnight, when everything was very still, and I was feeling homesick and miserable and weary, I thought that I would comfort myself by praying and singing a hymn. I remember singing this hymn:

"'All my trust on Thee is stayed,
All my help from Thee I bring;
Cover my defenseless head
With the shadow of Thy wing.'

"After singing that a strange peace came down upon me, and through the long night I felt no more fear."

"Now," said the other, "listen to my story. I was a Union soldier and was in the wood that night with a party of scouts. I saw you standing, although I did not see your face. My men had their rifles focused upon you, waiting the word to fire, but when you sang out:

"'Cover my defenseless head
With the shadow of Thy wing,'

I said: 'Boys, lower your rifles; we will go home.'"

Tablet commemorating the victory of the Monitor.

That Monument was Spared.

Judge Thomas J. Mackey, formerly of South Carolina, gives an incident of Sherman's march to the sea which is not recorded in the war histories.

"South Carolina was the first state in the Union to send a regiment to the front to participate in the war with Mexico," said the judge. "The people of a grateful state caused to be erected in front of the Capitol in Columbia a monument to the memory of the brave boys of the First South Carolina regiment who lost their lives in that conflict.

This monument is made of pounded brass, and represents a palmetto tree. When Sherman's army entered Columbia and his soldiers were destroying everything that came in their way, several companies made a dash for the shaft. With the buts of their muskets they began the work of demolition. They had not proceeded far when a man on horseback rushed up to them and commanded them to desist.

"'Not another stroke!' he cried.

Several of the soldiers paid no attention.

"The next man who dares assault that shaft I will kill!' he thundered.

"The tone of earnestness in the voice of the one who thus addressed them; they also saw that he had weighed his words carefully and meant every one of them.

"'Soldiers,' said he, 'the boys who slept beneath that palmetto loved their country as much as you or I. They fought as valiantly.'

"And the palmetto still stands in the old town of Columbia. The man who caused it to be preserved was Colonel Paine of the 12th Ohio regiment, and the people of South Carolina owe him a debt of gratitude they never can repay."

Reported Forty-Six Years After the Order

"I heard an old ex-Confederate down in Green county tell a good story not long since," said Hiram Paige, who stopped over in Louisville en route to Frankfort. "The old Johnny Reb said the officer commanding the regiment in which he was battling for the South's rights sent an aid out before the battle of Murfreesboro to ascertain the force of the enemy and to pick up any information of value. The colonel never saw the captain before or after the fight, and wondered what had become of him. The officer, of course, thought that the brave young southerner died or met his death while on duty. While the colonel was presiding as mayor of a town in Tennessee three years ago a one-legged man walked into the office one day and said: 'Colonel, I have to report, sir, that I found the enemy in force.' The colonel was the captain who had been sent out to reconnoitre twenty-six years before. He had been wounded, captured by the Yanks and had his left leg amputated. He was sent to his home in South Carolina when exchanged and had never had an opportunity to see the colonel before. Having heard that his superior officer was in the Tennessee city, the loyal young 'Confed' decided to report.—Louisville Post.

OUR UNKNOWN MARTYRS.

O sing of the fallen heroes!
The boys in the blue and gray,
Who died where they fell, amid shot and shell
Or of e'. smoke-dimmed affray.
Who had time for only a thought of home
Or a muttered snatch of prayer,
As fever and wounds the dark tide flowed
And left but a pale corpse there!
Or who lingered upon the couch of pain,
As day succeeded day,
And never their loved ones saw again,
But drifted from life away.

O sing of the fallen heroes!
The loyal, the true and brave;
Who asked but to fight in the cause of right
And received in return a grave!
Deathless shall be their glory!
With bays are their wreaths entwined!
But forget not the sad, sad story
Of those who remained behind!

Who toiled at the ploughing and reaping
Far off from the scene of war;
Whose part was the watching and weeping;
Who suffered no single scar;
Who sent to the field their kinsmen
And bade them a long good-bye,
And prayed with the tears of anguish
But knew how to wait—and die!
Thro' the long suspense of the drear campaign.
Passive—O difficult part!
Each bullet that counted a soldier slain
Was aimed at a loved one's heart!

Then sing of the boys in the blue and gray
Who gallantly fought and fell;
But think of the unknown martyrs
Who died for the cause as well.
Some day, in the midst of such glory,
As heart of man never devised,
It will be told us, the grand, sad story,
Of those who remain behind.

ARMY STORIES, GRAVE AND GAY.

Incidents That Came Under the Observation of War Heroes.

For years past, writes G. W. Christine in the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, ever since the close of our late civil war, in fact—I have asked every great general of both the Northern and Southern armies with whom I have come into contact to jot down for me, in his own words and over his own personal signature, what he considered the funniest and also the saddest incident that had come under his observation during our great civil conflict, or its immediate connection therewith. This request was kindly complied with in nearly every instance, and it was thus that the appended symposium was obtained.

General Lee's Story.

"Many of the most beautiful and pathetic incidents of the war occurred after it was all over. At a hotel in Washington in 1868 a gentleman whose face I could not remember exactly, though it seemed strangely familiar, introduced himself and asked permission to present me to his wife, a singularly beautiful old lady of queenly and dignified bearing, to whom he said, 'Mother, let me present to you Gen. R. E. Lee, of the late Confederate army, whose saber thrust gave me this scar on my right cheek, and who bears the mark of a wound I gave him.' The beautiful old lady threw her arms around my neck and wept on my shoulder, and in that tender embrace and fervent clasp of the federal officer's hand and mine we buried the animosities of the war forever."

From Admiral Porter.

"At the deathbed of my friend, Col. H., I witnessed what I think was at once the most touching and dramatic incident of the war. It was some years after the great conflict, and the Colonel had long employed as his children's governess a young Southern girl of great beauty and refinement. As I stood with his wife by his dying bed, he called this girl to him, told her how he had killed her father—a Confederate Captain—in a hand-to-hand fight, having recognized her by her resemblance to her parent, and by his miniature, which she wore around her neck, and asked her forgiveness. 'I have nothing to forgive,' she answered. 'You only did your duty, and if you deprived me of my father, you have filled his place,' with one supreme effort the Colonel placed her hand in that of his wife, whispered 'our daughter,' and was dead.

Good Ones from Sheridan.

"Once, in camp, myself and some of my brother officers fell desperately in love with a female voice we used to hear singing at night. It was simply angelic, and, resolved to see the singer, we followed its sound through the thickets and ravines till we came to a lonely cabin, whence the singing proceeded. Creeping up to the window, I peered in, and beheld a fat, greasy, middle-aged negress, barefooted and clad in a single garment of dirty calico, browning coffee with a long iron spoon, while she gave vent to the sweetest notes I have ever heard. In my surprise I staggered forward with a noise that attracted her attention. Grasping her coffee skillet and waving it around her head, she bawled out: 'O'way from dah, white man! Ef yo' don't I'll frow dis year fryin' pan right at yo' head.'"

PICNIC TIME.

It's June ag'in, an' in my soul I feel the fillin' joy
That's sure to come this time o' year to every little boy;
For every June, the Sunday-schools an picnics may be seen.

Where "woods beyont the swellin' floopa stand dressed in livin' green;"
Where little girls are skeered to death with spiders, bugs and ants,
An' little boys get grass-stains on their go-to-meetin' pants.
It's June ag'in, an' with it all what happiness is mine—
There's gola' to be a picnic, an' I'm goin' to jine!

One year I jined the Baptists, an' goodness! how it rained!
(But gran'pa says that's the way "baptize" is explained.)
An' once I jined the "Piscopits an' had a heap o' fun—
But the boss of all the picnics was the Presbyterian!
They had so many puddin's, salids, sand wiches an' pies,
That a feller wisht his stummick was as hungry as his eyes!
Oh, yes, the eatin' Presbyterians give 'er is no fine
That when they have a picnic you bet I'm goin' to jine.

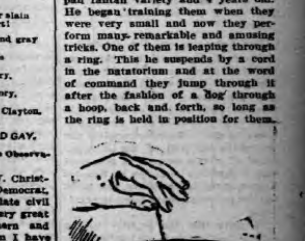
PAIR OF TRAINED GOLDFISH.

William P. Simon, Their Owner, Has Taught Them How to Dance.

William P. Simon, 485 East Forty-sixth street, Chicago, has a pair of trained goldfish. They are of the Japan fantail variety and 4 years old. He began training them when they were very small and now they perform many remarkable and amusing tricks. One of them is leaping through a ring. This he suspends by a cord in the natatorium and at the word of command they jump through it after the fashion of a dog through a hoop, back and forth, so long as the ring is held in position for them.



THE TRAINED GOLDFISH.

Mr. Simon also has taught them another novel but more intricate feat. It is no less than going through the figures of a quadrille. This, Mr. Simon says, required a great deal of time and a vast amount of patience, but he was finally rewarded with perfection in the unique performance. As there are only two of them they cannot be said to perform a quadrille proper, but they go through all the movements of the genuine article. "Forward and back," "cross over and back to places," "swing corners," "grand right and left" and "all promenade" are rendered with the utmost precision.

An Elephant's Neck.

The reason the elephant's neck is short is that the head of the animal is so heavy that were it placed at the end of a neck proportionate to the dimensions of that member in other animals, an almost inexplicable amount of muscular force would be necessary to elevate and sustain it. The almost total absence of a neck obviates the difficulty, and the trunk serves as a substitute.

The uses and advantages of a long neck, peculiarly exemplified in the giraffe, which contains only the same number of vertebral articulations as in the elephant, are in the latter supplied by the trunk or proboscis, by which he is enabled to carry food to his mouth and to drink by suction. This curious organ contains a vast number of muscles variously interlaced, is extremely flexible, endowed with the most exquisite sensibility and the utmost diversity of motion and compensates amply for the absence of a long neck.—Golden Days.

Count the Spokes in a Bicycle.

In buying a wheel, count the spokes, and be sure that there are thirty-two in the front wheel, and thirty-six in the rear wheel, and if there are more, so much the better. Do not let the dealer persuade you that it makes no difference in strength and durability. In the craze for light wheels, manufacturers cut down the number of spokes, thus diminishing the weight of the wheel by a few ounces, and at the same time weakening the machine to the danger point. Happily the boys and young men have outgrown the species of idiocy, and have sense enough to insist upon safety, and the number of spokes is an important element in that respect.

The Postmastership.

The appointment of a postmaster always has in it a great element of political influence so far as the selection is concerned, but after that, under the civil service rules, it is as far removed from politics as any public business can be. It is essential that whoever secures the appointment should be qualified in a business way to maintain a service that will prove satisfactory in all details to the public at large, for there is no public business with which the whole country is so intimately associated as the matter of distributing e mail matter.

Elias H. Bird, who was nominated for postmaster of Plainfield May 25 h by President McKinley, is qualified to fill his future duties in a manner that will please those who have dealings with Uncle Sam in this direction. He is a thorough worker, who will apply himself, as he has in all the occupations in which he has been engaged, in a conscientious spirit. Postmaster Hetfield has improved the service to a wonderful degree during his administration and he will deliver the office to Mr. Bird in a shape that with careful attention it can be maintained in a way to show that the President has not made a mistake in his appointment.

Mr. Bird's present position as city tax collector, which he will resign, will be filled by the Common Council until a successor can be elected next December.

The Farmers and the Rabbits.

Governor Voorhees has not concealed his intention to veto the game law passed by the last Legislature. One provision of this law allows farmers to kill rabbits at any time in order to protect their fruit trees from these animals. A protest against the veto of the bill, sent to the Governor in behalf of the farmers of Somerset and Hunterdon counties by Senator Foster, of the latter county, has called out the following reply from the Governor:

"I know that the popular feeling among the farmers is very strongly in favor of that portion which permits the killing of rabbits when found damaging their fruit trees, but in order that they may have that right there seems to me to be no necessity for the enactment of a new law. All they need to have is the assurance from me that if any of the game wardens attempt to impose fines for violation of the game laws in this respect, in such instances, I, exercising my authority, would at once remit any fines so imposed. I believe if this were generally known, the farmers would remain content with the law as it is."

If this letter is genuine it is a remarkable one. Lawyers profess entire ignorance of any authority conferred upon the Governor to set aside any civil law of the State, and they point out that it is justices of the peace, and not game wardens, who impose fines under the game law.

During some years when American exports are very large not much gold comes to the United States to pay for them. In such years the foreigners who buy our goods send instead of gold our own securities, stocks, bonds and various kinds of paper. But during the present fiscal year, in spite of the war, the estimated gold coming into the country from abroad is $100,000,000, more than in any year before in our history. It shows that we are rapidly paying off our debts to foreigners and drawing money from them. We are ceasing to be a debtor nation. America is a happy country.

It is a satisfaction to just people generally that Helen Gould is prosecuting with vigor the perjurer who instigated the suit of Sarah Ann Angell against the Gould estate on the ground that Sarah Ann was Jay's first wife. If examples were made of a few more of the blackmailers and adventurers that swarm around the rich, it would be for the good of the country.

The American who just now will haggle with the government to get an extortionate price for goods it needs deserves to have his pitiful little wares confiscated and to get nothing at all for them.

The result of the combustion of smokeless powder, which our navy uses, is gases which are almost colorless. A slight vapor is seen immediately after a charge is fired, but it quickly disappears.

Hard Times For German Farmers.

The quick auction sale of 300 American horses in Berlin at an average price per head of $235 has stirred anew the dislike of the rural population of Germany to the United States. They appeal frantically to the government to put restrictions on the importation into Germany not only of American horses, but of American meats, fruits, breadstuffs and everything that grows.

On the other hand, it is to be noted that the beer accidentally let loose by Emperor William's frank expression of disapproval of us and our institutions. The truth is the people of Germany are at cross purposes so far as the United States is concerned. Manufacturing industries of all kinds want food, live stock and raw material as cheaply as possible. With our limitless acreage and cheap raw material we can supply meat, grain, horses and even fruits and commence wines more cheaply than at present can be produced in Germany. Persons engaged in manufacturing industries there want these things of us. Meantime we take in return an enormous quantity of manufactured goods from Germany, and the amount increases heavily year by year. It is this great and growing export trade for Germany, bringing prosperity to her manufacturers, that stops the William's mouth from utterings hot sentiments concerning us in the present difficulty with Spain. Our annual trade is worth ten times as much to Germany as that of Spain.

But the prospect is a bitter one for the German farmer. So it is for farmers all over Europe, with perhaps the single exception of those in Russia. European farmers never hold their own in competing with us in ordinary food products and live stock. Their only recourse to save themselves seems to be to turn to the rearing of improved and blooded live stock for export, the production of rare wines, in which we cannot yet compete with them, the raising of vegetables and small fruits and dairying.

As certain as death and taxes, just so certain is the price of wheat to rebound from rock bottom and run far up to dizzy heights. Half a dozen years ago some of the ablest economists on both sides of the water wrote elaborate essays, not to say volumes, proving that wheat could never again command so high a price as it had done during our war because the world's wheat area was now so large. Meantime the world's population quietly sneaked up on the writing philosophers as well as on the world's wheat area. The earth's population is increasing faster at present than it ever did because wars are fewer and sanitation is better. Every blessed one of the newcomers on the earth must have bread to eat. Now look at the conditions this year. The wheat crop of the United States is the greatest since that tremendous leapp wheat year of 1891. The crop of the rest of the earth's surface, taken contrarily, is smaller than it has been since 1890. Result, the farmers of the United States are in great luck, and there will be a brisk market with high price for every bushel of wheat they can sell.

Since all of us must die, one could wish for himself and those nearest to him no better fate than to go out of life like the expiring flash of a candle, as the great violinist Edouard Remenyi did. His death was happy as his life had been brilliant—one moment in the full vigor of his powers, having just finished the last strains of "Old Glory" on his violin, playing almost as even he never played before, the next, with the plaudits and cheers of thousands ringing in his ears, going out of life. It is the lingering, the horrible, slow wasting and growing helplessness that make death terrible.

Foley, James L., who was a soldier in the civil war and knows what the pest of mosquitoes, black flies and sand flies in the south means, gives his fellow countrymen a remedy against all three. It is to smear upon the face and exposed parts of the body a mixture of olive or cottonseed oil and North Carolina tar, worked together till it is about the consistency of ordinary cream. That mixture might properly be called cream of tar-tar.

On the whole, considering all the circumstances of the Oregon's thrilling voyage from San Francisco around Cape Horn and up the east coast of South America in order to reach the West Indies, it is not borne plainly in on the American mind that we need to have that Nicaragua canal cut through as quickly as possible!

Here is a question for, not the authorities at Washington, but the whole American people to consider: There are the Philippine islands, 1,400 of them. There are Cuba and Puerto Rico. What is best for us to do with these outlying possessions after we get them?

Left handed men are noted for the unerring accuracy with which they throw a stone. More than one victory of the Chicago baseball team this season is due to her famous left handed pitcher, Kilroy.

It is not conducive to good health to say anything disrespectful of the American flag just now.

The Yankee pigs seem to be rooting the Spanish gentlemen into rather a close corner.

We Are Hustlers.

The editor of The Century mentions rather disapprovingly the everlasting hurry and action of all phases of American life. Society in our large cities is one gallop the season through, without breathing space for anybody who is unfortunate to be caught in its whirl. The spirit of our national life is that of one who is hurrying to catch a train, whether we are engaged in business or pleasure. The Century is not altogether right in deprecating this spirit of haste. We have not time for repose, but do we need it? Our climate, our bright electric atmosphere, is developing a new race. The American can do in one day what it takes old world people two and sometimes three to accomplish. We think quickly; we act quickly. What other nation on the face of the earth without any standing army could have got ready for war so rapidly as we did? Nevertheless The Century is quite correct in calling attention to the real home life that exists in many American families in an inner circle, beyond the wear and tear and blare of the "American fortissimo:"

Life in our villages is probably richer, healthier and more interesting than it was a generation ago, and even from that life living in the street, as it were, toward the simpler joys of home is very various. Moreover, in the best of every great city there are men and women who by sheer force of character are resisting an ideal of repose, holding their thresholds against the engulfing storms of the outer world. The sensational newspaper comes not near them, and the society reporter does not wait at the door for the names of their dinner guests. They bear a share in the good works of the city, they do it only by withdrawing from the senseless demands of a fashionable life. And they are all the better prepared for public and family duties by rigidly guarding for themselves a little domain of leisure. It is in such secluded haunts, remote from the clash of the world, that life grows deep and strong, in moments of meditation or of companionship with friends, good literature and inspiring music.

Abolishing Caste In America.

There is a jolly possibility in the plan suggested by Mr. Charles Ferguson in The North American Review, a paper in which the writer thinks he could do away with our shoddy social aristocracy in America and make the people of our republic really equal in opportunity as the Declaration of Independence presupposes them to be.

Mr. Ferguson's idea is clothed in dignified language, as becomes a philosopher, and it is a little hazy in its direct application, but he who will may pick up the thread and apply it in his mind to his acquaintances, if not to himself, and see how it looks. Mr. Ferguson's idea is "voluntary servitude" for the rich. He says it is not wealth which directly is responsible for the caste system in America, but the power which wealth gives to its possessors to own those who have it not. He supposes the case of our being all rich, every mother's son and daughter of us. Suppose we all had plenty of money, who would be cooks and bootblacks? Suppose we all had our carriages, who would be our coachmen? We should all have to do our own cooking, black our own boots and take care of our own horses. We should be on exactly the same social footing, even as the ancestors of our American aristocracy were, even as many well to do farm families are today.

Mr. Ferguson proposes in his fine language, therefore, that a number of self sacrificing upper class people shall go into "voluntary servitude" and begin to wait on themselves. Step up and groom your horse, Mr. Vanderbilt! Go down into the kitchen, Mrs. Astor!

Another horrible and blood curdling war idea is in the air. Nikola Tesla is accused of owning the powerful mind that gave it to us. It is that fearful waves of electricity, "electric currents of high potentials," to speak in the lingo of the learned, can be sent out in any direction desired and that each one is warranted to shrivel up a whole Spanish squadron like a potato bug before a blast of paris green. In short, it will be artificial lightning sent out in oscillating waves. Tesla, if he is the originator of this fearful scheme, should try it on a dog first. There are plenty to try it on, and if the supply ran short there are the cats that make night hideous and keep people awake.

The American navy enjoys now a prestige that it never had before, thanks to Dewey, who had nerve and courage and was not afraid of torpedoes or anything else. The only thing necessary to maintain this prestige is to finish and maintain the additional vessels ordered by congress. These, with those we have bought at home and abroad, will make us without more ado the second naval power on the globe.

The various explosions of powder mills and bombs in different parts of this country and the cutting adrift of submarine mines in our ports are not accidental. They are the work of dastardly Spaniards. Our free, generous land is honeycombed with Spanish spies.

A battleship costs from $2,500,000 to $4,000,000, according to size. Cruisers cost from $3,000,000 to $5,000,000.

The dons have the long descent and the long names. We have the long purse and long guns.

CAME FOR BUSINESS AND HAD A GOOD TIME

Annual Convention of Letter-Carriers of the State.

IN THIS CITY YESTERDAY.

WELCOMED AND ENTERTAINED BY THE LOCAL CARRIERS.

The Convention Held in the Knights of Pythias Hall, and After the Business was Transacted an Elaborate Banquet was Tendered the Delegates —Prominent City Officials Present— Chief Deane Exhibited the Working of the Fire Department—The New Postmaster Introduced—Address Given.

Monday was a big day for the letter-carriers of this city. They entertained the delegates of the State Letter carriers' Association, and passed several hours in their company. The delegates who attended were well pleased with their reception, and voted the carriers here a jolly good crowd.

The convention met for business in the Knights of Pythias lodge room in the Elkwood building. Delegates from Passaic, Bayonne, Morristown, Elizabeth, East Orange, Rahway and this city were in attendance.

The election of officers resulted as follows: President, F. J. Schmidt, of Bayonne; vice-president, Edward Huchins, of Morristown; secretary, C. A. Hunt, of Passaic; treasurer, Daniel O'Shay, of Passaic; sergeant-at-arms, Mr. Cook, of Rahway. The delegates to the national convention which meets at Toledo in September are John J. Holey, of East Orange, Charles B. Stevens, of Plainfield and C. A. Hunt, of Passaic.

Postmaster Hetfield welcomed the delegates to this city in a short speech, and Counsellor Craig A. Marsh for the Mayor.

John Parsons, of New York, chairman of the National Association, and an ex-carrier of that city, made a long address in which he gave some good advice to the carriers, and hoped that the time would come when the office of postmaster will be obtained under the same conditions that the position of carrier is. His address was listened to with great interest by all, especially as this is the first time that the national president has honored a State convention of carriers from second-class cities with his presence.

After this speech all adjourned to the hall below where a bountiful spread had been provided. The carriers were not at all stingy in their invitations, as the long list of guests present proved. Upon invitation of the chief of the fire department, who was one of the guests, all formed in line after supper and headed by the Queen City band marched to the headquarters of the fire department and were entertained there by an exhibition of what the fire horses can do. From there they went to Alerts, where Tom and George, the two horses there, went through their performance; then the party returned to the hall where the balance of the evening was spent in merry making. Councilman Runyon sang several times, and so did John Carney. A few of the delegates from out-of-town also amused the men with songs and speeches, and it was not until a late hour that the delegates thought of home.

The committee in charge of the convention were R. H. Laughlin, chairman, Charles B. Stephens, J. W. A. Bauernschs, Ernest Millard, secretary and treasurer, and Wm. Sharpe.

The carriers from this city were the hosts, and furnished the entertainment for the visiting delegates. Besides the delegates who were fed, the carriers invited to supper the members of the police force and the members of the Queen City Band, Councilman Runyon, Chief Doane, first assistant Chief Martin, and several others. In the evening other city officials were present among whom were City Clerk MacMurray and Collector Bird.

MR. BIRD CONFIRMED.

United States Senate Acts Favorably on the President's Nomination.

Elias H. Bird has been confirmed as postmaster of Plainfield by the United States Senate. All that remains is for Mr. Bird to receive his commission from President McKinley, and then apply for possession of the office from Postmaster Hetfield, who is ready to retire as soon as it suits the convenience of Mr. Bird.

It is expected that Mr. Bird will resign the City Tax Collectorship in a short time, and then there were will doubtless be a lively contest for the appointment of a successor by the Common Council.

A POSTOFFICE ROBBED.

BLEW OPEN THE SAFE IN THE NEW MARKET POSTOFFICE.

Dynamite Was Used—Stamps and Money Hid in Another Place — Postmaster Day Hustled Out With His Gun.

An unsuccessful attempt was made early Saturday morning to burglarize the New Market postoffice.

The postoffice is located in Jenner's grocery store, on the Hamilton road near Somerset. Charles R. Day lives just opposite. At 3:30 Saturday morning, his sister, Miss Lizzie Day, was awakened by the sound of an explosion across the street. She called her brother. Day seized his Winchester and rushed across the street to find the store filled with smoke.

The front of the safe was entirely wrecked and its contents, mostly government papers, partially destroyed. Nobody was in sight. A new brace was found near by. Two chisels, stolen from Kelly's wheelwright shop, was found.

The crooks, who were evidently professionals, had grained entrance through the large window in the front door. They had cut out the glass.

The stamps and money had been hidden away in another place. The burglars took some papers from the safe which were of no value. The papers were afterwards found near the white bridge.

Two strange men have been seen about the town for the last two days. They have been in the store several times to make small purchases.

In the safe was an old township book, 230 years old, that was burned and scorched on the edges.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease, and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address,

The Germans Pleased.

The members of the Gesang and Turn Verein held a picnic Monday in Mountainside Grove near the end of the Somerset street trolley. The affair was largely attended and an enjoyable time was the result. There was both vocal and instrumental music and various sports occupied the attention of the crowd all day.

Suffered a Compound Fracture.

Little Jack Kenney, the young son of J. J. Kenney, of East Second street, fell from the plazza of his home Monday. A compound fracture of his left arm was the result.

Ex-Councilman Tolles, of Westervelt avenue, is still very ill.

A BRISK POLICE COURT

NUMEROUS OFFENDERS BEFORE THE JUDGE MONDAY MORN'NG.

Drunks and Disorderly Cases Were in the Majority—A Party of Colored People Too Noisy Last Monday.

Business was brisk in the police court Monday morning. Several cases were tried and disposed of.

Michael Gleason and James Carney were arrested Saturday night by Officer Mellon charged with fighting on West Fourth street. Gleason was fined $10 or 30 days. Sentence was suspended on Carney.

George Potter, arrested by Officer Saffron, was fined $5 for being drunk and disorderly.

Bridget McDonough, of Richmond street, was charged by Officer Higgins with using bad language. She pleaded not guilty and demanded a jury trial. Her case was set down for Friday morning at 10 o'clock in the Council Chamber.

Sentence was suspended on Nick Kelly for being disorderly on Third street a week ago.

William Ross, the Park avenue restaurant keeper, was charged by Officer Cash with using profane language in front of his restaurant a week ago. Ross was discharged.

John Divine and Harry Mullison were wrestling in front of Edward White's dry goods store Saturday night, and broke one of the show cases. They looked up by Officer Vanderweg, and sentence was suspended them Saturday. They have replaced the glass.

Michael Duneo was given 60 days in the county jail for being drunk on Cottage place Monday night.

Susan Lewis, Sarah Green, Hattie Moon and William Wilson were arrested Monday night by Officers Myers and Watson. They were charged with swearing and using profane language on West Fourth street. Susan Lewis and Sarah Green were discharged, and Hattie Wilson and Lewis Moon fined $5. Sentence was suspended on Wilson.

GUESTS ON BOARD A YACHT

Wesley Johnson Gave Several Friends a Salt Water Trip.

Wesley Johnson, of LaGrande avenue, took out a party of seventeen friends Monday on his naptha yacht Aloha for a sail around Staten Island. They were very much interested in going through the Narrows to see Commodore Perry's new boat, one of the monitors, the auxiliary cruiser Yankee, coaling, and the numerous barber defence mines which the men were busily engaged laying. Luncheon was served on board. The Aloha was put in commission last Wednesday after leaving her winter quarters at Morris Heights, and is now anchored off the New Jersey Athletic Association grounds at Bergen Point.

BATTLE ROW IN FLAMES

THIRTEEN COLORED FAMILIES BURNED OUT OF HOME.

A Defective Flue in the Old Tenement Started the Blaze Early Sunday Morning—Two Tenants Were Poor People.

An early morning alarm of fire startled the inhabitants of the western end of the city Sunday, and they awoke to find the historic old tenement house on West Fourth street known as "Battle Row," in flames. An alarm was sent in from Box 46, and the department lost no time in getting to the scene of the conflagration, but by the time they got there the entire upper part of the tenement was in flames, and the half awakened and partly dressed tenants were huddled in disconsolate groups outside, or were working with frantic haste to save what little they could of their belongings, from total destruction.

The alarm was sent in at 3:01. Officer Myers, who saw the fire, sent in the alarm from No 46, although Roundsman Flynn, at Box 34 was already to ring that. When the firemen reached the spot they put three streams of water, and succeeded in saving the lower part of the building, and a part of the upper, at each end.

The fire is supposed to have originated in the upper story of the centre apartments, from a defective flue. The water was turned on and a stream was put on at each end and another from the rear.

While the fire burned it lighted up the sky for a great distance, and people who had arisen thought it was Steven's lumber yard, as it seemed to be further away than Liberty street.

The "Row" belonged to E. Frank Vail, the real estate dealer and was occupied by thirteen families, probably aggregating between 30 and 40 people, mostly colored. It is not known just how much damage was done, as it is impossible for them to compute it, but as there was little or no insurance on the household goods, their losses are total.

Coffee Given Away.

O'Donohue Coffee Company, of New York, will give away packages of their "Fifth Avenue" Mocha and Java coffee, Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of next week, June 6th, 7th and 8th, at their demonstrations in the stores of J. F. MacDonald, Plainfield, and A. Deslaman, Dunellen, and on Thursday, Friday and Saturday, June 9th, 10th and 11th, at stores of F. W. Dunn and Geo. W. Rockfellow, Plainfield. Their plan is to get the housewife to visit the store. Giving away coffee is a costly plan, no doubt, but their claim is that once the delicious qualities of their famous brand are known their is no trouble in holding the future trade. The consumers should avail themselves of the chance to learn about high grade coffee, hear the "Singing Girl," and get the benefit of the advertisement.

Conductor's Mishap on a Trolley Car.

Conductor Voorhees Laing, of the street railway, fell off his car on Somerset street last Monday while making his last trip to the carhouse. The motorman called him to the front of the car and as he was walking alongside of the open car his foot slipped. He fell on his head inflicting a bad wound and dislocated his shoulder. He was taken to a doctor's residence and treated. Later he was removed to his home on East Front street, where he is now doing as well as can be expected. His injuries are not considered serious.

Mrs. Veitche, nee Nellie Voorhees, and her husband, Chas. Veitche, of Brooklyn, spent Sunday and Decoration Day with relatives and friends in the city and borough.

Tormenting

"I suffered for years with tetter. On arising my hands were stiff and my fingers crooked. They would crack all over and the blood would run from them. The doctor ordered me to give up work. Then a friend said, 'Try AYER'S SARSAPARILLA.' I took in all eight bottles, which completely healed me."

IN HONOR OF DEAD AND LIVING HEROES.

Old Glory Unfurled for Soldiers of Today and Floral Wreaths as Tributes for Those Gone.

Memorial Day Celebrated With Unusual Fervor of Patriotism in Plainfield—Flag Raising in the Morning, Followed by a Parade of Battle Scarred Veterans, and Scholars—Public Exercises in Music Hall in the Afternoon.

Memorial Day, the one day in the whole year when people in all parts of the United States gather to revere and honor the valiant deeds performed on fields of battle, was auspiciously opened Monday morning in a way that stirred the heart of everyone in Plainfield, from the smallest boy to the oldest person. It was a signal success and everyone had a part in one of the grandest patriotic demonstrations Plainfield has ever witnessed.

There was a double interest attached to the day from the fact that a beautiful American flag was swung to the breeze. When Plainfield's patriotism is aroused something is bound to happen, and when Plainfield's patriotic Mayor, Charles J. Fisk, said that this beautiful city should have a liberty pole and an American flag, it was not long before the thing was a reality. Edward White, Plainfield's wide awake drygoods merchant, promptly presented the city with old glory, and it is one of the finest symbols displayed in this section. It is 30x50 and it is a beauty.

Then the question of a pole was presented. The city decided to purchase one that would be worthy of the name, and the result was that a stately and imposing flag pole now stands as an emblem of liberty at the head of Park avenue on Front street. It stands close to 150 feet from the top of the eagle to the ground. The work of putting the pole in position was done by Manager Charles Runyon, of the local telephone company, his assistants, and William Hand and his men, and to all is due the heartiest thanks of every Plainfielder for this magnificent evidence of patriotism. Mounted on top of the pole is the American eagle, the National bird. For this beautiful and substantial gift the school children of the public schools are to be thanked, for they contributed the money to put it there.

Early Monday morning the crowds began to assemble about the flag pole and by 9:30, the hour of raising the flag, every available space was occupied, while the roofs of buildings and every window was taken with patriotic people. To the members of Winfield Scott Post, No. 73, G. A. R., was assigned the privilege and honor of taking charge of the exercises attendant upon the unfurling of the flag.

Shortly before the appointed hour patriotic airs were heard as discoursed by the Queen City Band, and at the same time the veterans, Sons of Veterans, school cadets and children, assembled in position around the pole. The appearance of all elicited the heartiest applause from the crowd as each took its position.

On the improvised platform close to the pole were seated Commander E. C. Morse, Charles B. Stephens, of Post No 73, and Rev. William C. O'Donnell, orator for the occasion. Commander Morse gave his orders to Officer of the Day, Wm. C. Smith, who in turn gave his orders to Officer of the Guard, Wm. Day. The orders were that he should select a guard to display the colors. Comrade Day selected Comrade T. O. Doane, and with the assistance of one or two others they unfurled the beautiful flag, which was then in position at the top of the pole. When the word was given the proper rope was pulled, and as the flag was unfurled the patriotic air, Star Spangled Banner, as played by the band, excited the greatest enthusiasm. At the same time an innumerable lot of small flags were scattered from the large flag where they were concealed. Following this there was the firing of several volleys. The veterans in charge of Comrade Wm. G. Smith occupied a position directly in front of the pole and they fired several salutes, while on the right were the school cadets in charge of Captain Edwards, who also fired a similar number of salutes. The Sons of Veterans, in charge of Lieutenant Raymond McVoy, gave the same number of salutes. While this was being done the crowd cheered again and again, while in every hand there was a small flag waved to the breeze.

At this time Commander Morse introduced Rev. W. C. O'Donnell, a member of the Sons of Veterans, who gave a short patriotic address.

The speaker congratulated the city of Plainfield on the grand occasion and said that he wanted the honor of leading the vast army of patriots in giving three cheers for old glory so that it would be heard not only in Plainfield, but even to the Island of Cuba, that it might sound the note of freedom to the whole world. Continuing Mr. O'Donnell said: "This flag that we honor today has waved over the heads of our fathers long years ago, and as I stand here today, I see a picture before me. A picture where all nationalities will be seen passing under this glorious flag. This flag has never been trodden upon or suffered defeat, and God grant that it never may be.

"When our minds go back to the days of 1776 we are reminded of Washington, Jefferson and Lafayette, of Bunker Hill, Saratoga and Yorktown. In the days of 1861 we are reminded of men just as noble, and today we see the faces of Dewey and Sampson. This flag will stand as a symbol of the nation, to stand as a champion for liberty the whole world over. Let us hope that in this year the tyrant may be driven off the face of the earth and that liberty and union may stand inseparable. The eagle that stands at the top of the pole, the bird of national freedom, was the gift of the school children and so long as the children do not forget that bird our country will be safe."

Mr. D'Donnell closed his remarks with beautiful words of eulogy, and his remarks brought fourth a grand and united burst of patriotism. The band then played America, after which the veterans, Sons of Veterans, school cadets and children formed in line with the band and platoon of police at the head. The line of march as published before was followed and grand demonstrations were witnessed frequently. At the various cemeteries the soldiers stopped to decorate the graves of dead heroes. The parade was concluded about noon, after which a recess was taken until 2 o'clock in the afternoon when exercises of a patriotic nature were held in Music Hall.

Music Hall presented a scene of patriotism and beauty. Wherever to good advantage the National colors could be placed they were, and especially attractive was the scene presented on the stage. The American flags displayed, the two graves representing the unknown dead and the display of flowers, all made up an attractive sight. The hall was filled with patriotic people who lost no opportunity to show their sympathy and which side they were on.

At the appointed hour the Queen City Band entered the hall leading the members of the G. A. R. The veterans took seats on the platform provided for them. In the boxes were seated members of the City Council, members of the Woman's Relief Corps, prominent Plainfielders and others.

Commander E. C. Morse was in charge of the exercises and announced the various numbers on the programme. The band opened the exercises with a catchy medley that struck a popular sentiment in the hearts of all. This was followed with prayer by Rev. P. E. Smyth, rector of St. Mary's R. C. church. Following this the band rendered "Hail Columbia."

The appearance of Alfred E. Pearsall, of Westfield, was a moment for a patriotic demonstration. Mr. Pearsall has many warm friends in Plainfield and his work yesterday increased that number materially. He recited a war selection that stirred the feelings of patriotism in every breast. Later in the afternoon he gave several comical selections that were equally well received.

The next number was a soprano solo, "Columbia, the Gem of the Ocean," by Miss Opdyke, of Somerville. The singing was thoroughly enjoyed and the popular vocalist was obliged to respond to an encore. In part second of the programme she sang "Americs," and while she rendered this patriotic air the audience rose and joined in the song.

The Post exercises consisted of the reading of the general orders from the Commander-in Chief of the G. A. R., and also from the Commander of the Department of New Jersey, and an extract of Lincoln memorable address at Gettysburg. This was followed with responses from the Navy, by Senior Vice-Commander James Clarkson; from the Army, by Junior Vice-Commander Asa Collier; from the Scripture, by Officer of the Day Wm. C. Smith, and from the Nation and the dead, by Chaplain M. C. Dobbins The latter also offered prayer. Before the close of the exercises the decorating of the unknown grave was performed by members of the Post. The several parts taken by Commander Morse were performed with credit and military dignity.

The oration of the afternoon was delivered by Rev. Dr. D. J. Yerkes, pastor of the First Baptist church, and it was listened to attentively by the vast audience. The reverend gentleman said in part: "We are here today to celebrate the preservation of the Union and the deeds of brave men who fought for liberty. Patriotism is a high and sacred duty which we all owe to our country. The love for country rises to the heighth of a moral sentiment. The country that is the most civilized evidences the most patriotism. People are proud of their ancestry, and why shouldn't we be proud of our country. Our forefathers were God fearing men and they brought the Bible with them to this country.

"This land of ours is wide and it provides a means for all to be prosperous. Regarding religious liberty, there is no land on the face of the earth where such laws can be read as are to be found in our Constitution. Regarding political equality, which is by the people, for the people and with the people, is something that we all enjoy. The President of the United States has no more political right than I have. We should be proud of our statesmen who for more than one hundred years have been composed of moral and intellectual quality, from Washington down to McKinley. This is our country, and its patriotism we find those given it to us. The old flag is a guarantee of liberty to all, and we need patriotism to maintain a moral force.

"After years of peace and quietude we find ourselves at war again, but thank God it is not with our brother. We must protect our flag. Our flag is first before any other flag that floats on land or sea. It has never championed anything but freedom. We are not at war with Spain for the purpose of gaining territory nor for personal aggrandisement. Spain has violated the civilized laws of warfare and has inaugurated a famine. We invoke the judgment of the civilized world in what we have done and ask them if we have not done the right thing. When our flag floats over Morro Castle and poor downtrodden Cuba, then that flag will be looked upon as a symbol of a great and glorious nation. The world is moving onward and we must move also. May we live to it that right, freedom and humanity reigns.

"When the historian of the present war records the facts attendant thereon we will see written the names of McKinley, Dewey, Sampson, Lee and Wheeler, leaders of a great movement to relieve an oppressed people in the cause of humanity."

Following the address by Dr. Yerkes there was an appreciative applause. Dr. Yerkes then announced that a collection would be taken for the relief fund of Post No. 73, G. A. R., and Comrades Cortell, Collier, Dobbins, Smith and Moffett were delegated to do the work. The exercises closed after the band played 'Dixie" and the "Star Spangled Banner."

An Approaching Marriage.

Mrs. Henrietta M. Cushing, of 50 Maujer street, Brooklyn, has issued invitations to the marriage of her daughter, Miss Bessie Vera Cushing, to Louis Eldridge Eaton, of East Plainfield, this city. The wedding will be celebrated Thursday evening, June 9th, at 8 o'clock at Grace Episcopal church, Conselyea street, near Lorimer, Brooklyn. The bride is a niece of Mr. and Mrs. William Hand, of Park avenue, this city.

Russell Johnson and wife, of New York, returned home last Monday after a pleasant visit at the home of A. W. Johnson, of Duer street.

POOR MULFORD ROSS STILL TOSSED ABOUT

The Controversy Brought Up In County Court.

JUDGE RESERVED DECISION

NORTH PLAINFIELD TOWNSHIP APPEALED FROM JUSTICE'S DECISION.

Neither Township Wanted to Support the Poor Old Pauper and So They Fought—North Plainfield Poor Master Claims Ross Was Able to Work and Earn a Living—the Trial Was a Lively One With Frequent Verbal Encounters Between Counsel — The Case Has Been Continued Now for Many Months.

Blind in one eye, with a broken shoulder blade and a fractured skull that interferes with the proper gyrations of his brain, poor old Mulford Ross has been the subject of fierce controversy between the townships of North Plainfield and Warren. Even to the highest court in the county, the case has now been taken. Thursday, it was tried before Judge Bartine who has reserved his decison in the matter.

The trial began Thursday morning Fred Pope, of Pope & Runyon, of Plainfield, represented North Plainfield and Former Assemblyman W. H. Codington, of Codington & Swackhamer, of Plainfield, was the attorney for Warren.

The case was taken on an appeal from the joint court held by Justices Speer and Mattison. On the occasion of the first trial it was decided that North Plainfield township was the home of the harmless old insane pauper, Ross, and that therefore North Plainfield should pay for his future keep as long as he lived, whether in North Plainfield or at the State asylum.

Lawyer Pope opened the case with a claim that the proceedings were illegal on account of a technical mistake in the writ of removal. He asked that the Judge nullify all the proceedings. Mr. Codington showed statutes whereby the court was empowered to correct such errors and asked that it be done.

Then followed a lively verbal encounter. Lawyer Pope at length declared his wish to continue the case as the Judge explained that such action would merely delay proceedings and not stop them. The Judge then declared that the trial should go on and the case be tried on its merits.

The principal witnesses for North Plainfield were Thomas McGann, the poormaster, and William H. Smith, a town committeeman. They claimed that Ross was a sound man and perfectly able to earn his own salt and did not need to be supported by anybody. Thereat, Judge Codington waxed sarcastic and wanted to know if they considered a man, blind in one eye, his shoulder blade broken, chilblains on his hands, and a crack in his skull that made him mentally unsound, a perfectly sound man.

Warren placed Elias Allen and Theo. Luersen, residents of Washington Valley, on the stand to testify that old Ross had been living in North Plainfield township for the last twenty years or more. Other witnesses were called to substantiate their testimony.

The lawyers then summed up and the Judge declared that he would reserve his decision.

Judge Codington conducted his case with great skill and showed his ability in the legal profession by his sharp cross-questioning and able arguments. Lawyer Pope pleaded his case with eloquence.

PROFITS OF RED CROSS BENEFIT.

$100 Acknowledged by the Proper Committee in New York.

The committee of ladies who were in charge of the benefit entertainment given at Music Hall for the Red Cross Society have received the following letter in acknowledgement of a check of $100, the net proceeds of the entertainment:

"I have today received a check for $100 from Mrs. Berman as a donation to the work of our committee from you and the other ladies of Plainfield. Will you kindly convey our warm thanks to them for their successful efforts in our behalf. We hope, within the next few days, to know that the first of our ambulances are on their way south. Believe me,

"Very gratefully yours,

Scavenger Licenses Revoked.

It is unfortunate for the borough that the Board of Health has deemed it necessary to revoke all licenses for scavengers for the time being, owing to the inaccessibility of the public dump, and the complaints of those who object to the meadow land on Charles Hyde's property being used. It is especially perplexing to Evan Jones, who has a pocktful of orders to clean cesspools and who is prevented from doing the work. It is not likely that the matter will be straightened out till the next meeting of the Borough Council.

PROPERTY OWNERS AGAIN WARNED TO BESTIR THEMSELVES.

Union County League Contend That Great Damage Will be Done to Property Along the Proposed County Trolley Route

The recently formed association of taxpayers of Union County, known as the "Union County League," of which William Drysdale is president, has again appealed to the property owners of that county for co operation in the fight against the proposed widening of North avenue and the construction of a trolley railroad therein from Elizabeth to Plainfield. Officers of the league contend that the proposed widening of North avenue "would require the taking of an additional thirty four feet of land on one side or the other, or partly on both, thus destroying thousands of valuable shade trees that could not be replaced in a generation, cutting off twelve miles of front yards, and greatly impairing or even destroying the value of the homes situated thereon."

Furthermore, it is represented that, as the law provides for both damages and benefits, the land will practically be confiscated. "In plain words," say the league committee, "if they take thirty-four feet of your front land and award you $2,000 in damages, they can at the same time assess you $2,500 for alleged 'benefits,' and you must pay the balance of $500, besides giving up your land. But the property owners on North avenue are by no means to be the only losers under this iniquitous act. To pay such an enormous sum as $900,000, (which may possibly be reduced to $600,000 if the Freeholders receive a large sum for the trolley franchise), the entire property of the county must be heavily taxed. Every foot of the land you own must pay. No piece of land in Union county is so small, so remote, or of so little value but it must pay its share of this enormous and wholly unnecessary burden, amounting, as it must in many cases, to more than the value of the land itself."

It is alleged that the persons who hope to profit by the undertaking have made some serious legislative blunders "which appear to involve either the integrity or the competency of several representatives of the people."

THE DEWEY WHEEL NOW.

That Is What the Fraseur Invention Has Been Named.

The new wheel, which is to be put on the market by the Fraseur S. and P. Company, is now on exhibition at the establishment of Phillip Zimmer, of Exchange alley. The wheel has been name the Dewey.

The Dewey embodies a new invention of Samuel Fraseur, of New Market, which, it is claimed, will allow the use of high gears without the usual amount of energy needed to ride the very high gears under present methods. Engineer Eddy Clark has been at work on the invention for several months working it up for use and is now confident that he has been successful.

The principal on which the new wheel works is that the power instead of being applied directly from the shaft, is transmitted through a fixed gear wheel to another gear wheel fast to the large sprocket wheel.

The present wheel has sprocket wheels with 12 and 22 teeth, and through the arrangement of gears, is geared to 90. It is claimed that the new wheel with its high gear will run as easily as one geared to 68 under ordinary methods.

Patriotic Catholic Children.

The assembly chamber of St. Mary's school was the scene of a happy gathering Friday afternoon, the occasion being a formal reception given to the Grand Army post by the children of the school. It need but be recalled of the many receptions and entertainments rendered by the children of this school during the past years to speak of the success and effectiveness of the labors of the good Sisters of Charity, particularly Sister Mary Esther, the directress. The honored veterans expressed their congratulations to the children and encouraged them to have the love of religion and country always united, for in this union was found ennobling patriotism and loyalty to church and State.

Weather Interfered With Bicycling.

Owing to the bad condition of the roads and the threatening weather the members of the Christian Endeavor Society of the First Presbyterian church did not go on the proposed bicycle run. Instead the Endeavorers assembled at the chapel and enjoyed a social time during the evening. There were about thirty persons present and the time was passed in playing games of all sorts and having a good time in general. Refreshments were served by the Social Committee of the society of which Miss Grace Petrie is the chairman. It is the intention of the society to hold the cycle run just as soon as the roads will permit.

—Saturday afternoon, June 4th, a porch fair will be held at 91 Rockview avenue for the benefit of the National Red Cross Society. A Punch and Judy show will also be given.

FLAG FOR BRAVE DEWEY

BRYANT SCHOLARS MADE THE PRESENTATION THIS MORNING.

President McKinley Notified and an Answer Received Saying The Emblem Would be Sent to Manila.

At the Bryant School this morning a handsome American flag, 8x12 feet, was formally presented to Admiral Dewey for the flagship Olympia by the pupils of the school. A few days ago President McKinley was written to, asking if the flag would be accepted by him for Admiral Dewey.

He referred the matter to the Navy Department and this morning while the exercises were being held a telegram was received from the Navy Department saying that the flag would be accepted in behalf of Admiral Dewey and forwarded to him as soon as received at Washington. The presentation this morning was made by George M. Rittenhouse, Jr. The idea originated with Miss A. V. Shattuck, principal of the Bryant School.

Memorial Day was remembered at all the public schools by special exercises. The exercises were of unusual elaborateness and were attended by many visitors despite the threatening weather. It was rendered a patriotic occasion. Friday the schools all close until Tuesday on account of Memorial Day.

At the High School the special exercises were held at 2:30 o'clock. The school had prepared several special songs appropriate to the occasion. A detail from the Grand Army was present in uniform. Principal Travell took charge of the exercises. The address was made by Former Mayor L. V. F. Randolph and was a very eloquent one. Mr. Randolph talked of the soldiers who had died in defence of their country and those who yet lived and asked his hearers to live for their country too so that they might aid in its grand career.

A number of visitors were present at the exercises which lasted an hour.

Friday morning at 11 o'clock, Counselor W. C. Smith, Francis Whiteley, A. G. Perry, W. W. Coriell, Augustus Runyon, James Baglin and Mr. Van Court, visited the borough public school, and held patriotic exercises appropriate to Decoration Day. Comrade W. C. Smith was the speaker for the occasion. Other remarks were made by the comrades present.

SOURCE OF COLOR.

Some Facts Which May Be of Interest to Artists.

The sources of color used in the arts is given as follows: The cochineal insects furnish the gorgeous carmine, crimson, scarlet and carmine lakes; the cuttle fish gives sepia, which is the inky fluid which the fish discharges when attacked; Indian yellow comes from the camel; ivory chips produce the ivory black and bone black; the exquisite Prussian blue comes from mixing the hoofs and other animal matter with impure potassium carbonate; various lakes are derived from roots, barks and gums; blue black comes from the charcoal of the vine stock; Turkey red is made from the madder plant, which grows in Hindostan; the yellow sap of a Siam tree produces gamboge, while raw sienna is the natural earth from the neighborhood of Sienna, Italy, and raw umber is an earth found near Umbria. India ink is made from the burnt camphor mastic is made from the gum of the mastic tree, which grows in the Grecian Archipelago. Bistre is the soot of wood ashes; very little ultramine—obtained from the precious lapis lazuli —is found in the market. Chinese white is zinc; scarlet is iodide of mercury, and vermillion is from quicksilver ore.—Industrial world.

When the War Really Ended.

Many people think Appomattox marked the end of the war, as Sumter did its beginning. As a matter of fact, the war did not end officially until August 20, 1866, when President Johnson issued a proclamation announcing that war was at an end, and that peace, order and tranquility and civil authority existed in all the States. While Lee's surrender was not the end of the war, it was the beginning of the end. Johnson surrendered on April 26, "Dick" Taylor on May 4, and Kirby Smith on May 26. On May 13, more than a month after Lee's surrender, a sharp fight took place at Palmetto ranch, in Texas, which is called by Jefferson Davis and other authorities the last battle of the war.—New York World.

Early Knowledge of California.

An American geography printed in 1812 contains this interesting information: "California is a wild and almost unknown country, but extremely fertile, near by dense fogs, as damp as they are unhealthful. On the northern shores live anthropophagi, and in the interior are active volcanoes and vast plains of shifting snow, which sometimes shoot up columns to inconceivable heights." The book adds that some of these statements would seem incredible were they not so well authenticated by trustworthy travellers. —Pittsburg Dispatch.

SMALL BOY THRILLED.

PAWNEE BILL GIVES HIM NEW INSPIRATION FOR FUN.

The Wild West Show Appears in Plainfield—One Boy Had His Arm Broken Trying to See the Show.

For the next fortnight every small boy in Plainfield will be busily engaged in reproducing blood curdling horrors, thrilling escapes, and heroic acts associated with the wild and wooly west, with perhaps a touch of the war in the bunch in Cuba.

The reason for this sanguinary turn in the sports of the small boy was occasioned by the advent of Pawnee Bill's Great Historic Wild West, which gave two performances Friday at the corner of Spooner avenue and Essex street.

They arrived in Plainfield early Friday morning by train from Somerville. They unloaded at the freight yard and had the long haul through town. The small boy turned out at unheard of hours to witness the preparation of the ground and the arrival of the Indians and cow boys.

The trolley cars did a great business all day. In the afternoon and evening the crowd was so great that a number of extra cars were found necessary.

The attendance at both performances was large, several thousand being present at each one. For a traveling show, the performances was a good one and a number of wonderfeats were shown. There was lots of powder burned and the small boy returned home to dream of rescuing May Lillie, the crack shot, in the stage coach with the aid of Buckskin Jerry and his consorts.

Friday evening Robert Morgan, the fourteen-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Morgan, of West Front street, thought that he could see the Pawnee Bill show better if he could get in the top of a large tree near by. He climbed the tree and secured a comfortable place where he could watch the performance. During one of the exciting features of the show young Morgan lost his balance and fell to the ground, a distance of about twenty-five feet. As a result he fractured his arm quite badly. His friends picked him up and took him home. A physician was called and set the broken bone.

COUNTY C. E. OFFICERS.

ANNUAL CONFERENCE HELD IN ELIZABETH LAST NIGHT.

Several Plainfield Workers Chosen for Offices — E. E. Anthony Spoke About the International Convention.

The annual conference of the Union County Christian Endeavor Union was held in the Third Presbyterian church here Thursday. President Fred H. Williams, of Rahway, was in charge.

E. E. Anthony, of Plainfield, spoke about the convention at Nashville which convenes in a few weeks. Rev. Charles E. Herring, of Plainfield, delivered an address upon the topic "Hold."

The election of officers resulted as follows: President, Fred H. Williams, of Rahway; first vice president, Arthur Heath, of Plainfield; second vice-president, Miss Florence Bogart, of Roselle; third vice-president, Miss Isabella Cameron, of Elizabeth; secretary, Miss Mabel Wilson, of Plainfield; treasurer, Miss Clara Wolfreys, of Elizabeth

A meeting of the Junior Superintendents of the county was held prior to the conference. This meeting was led by Mrs. W. S. Lowry, of Plainfield. Superintendents of each society in the county reported that their society would give $5 or $10 to the fresh air work at Westfield. The next meeting of the Junior Superintendents will be held on the last Thursday in July, at the Westfield Camp.

To Be Graduated at Colleges.

Among the young women and men of Plainfield to be graduated from colleges this year are Miss Martha Tracy at Bryn Mawr; Miss Phebe Lovell at Vassar; Russell Bond at Princeton; Fred Goddard and Braidman Tyler at Amherst; Philip Wells, Harry Bushnell, Miss Ida Fred Case at Harvard, and Edward H. Waring at Lehigh University.

George Moneton at Camp Tampa.

George Moneton, formerly of Plainfield, but late of St. Louis, has written to his mother that he joined a Missouri regiment at St. Louis, and that he arrived at Tampa, Fla., May 31st. He reports himself as being well and enjoying life.

—West Front street has been macadamized thus far to Albert street, and the work is being pushed rapidly.

—Under the Clinton avenue railroad bridge there is still a great quantity of water and it is dangerous to drive under the bridge after dark.

—Mrs. Semms Craig, of New York, who has been lecturing at the Waldorf, New York, will deliver a lecture on "American Painters," in the Casino June 6th.

—The evening of Thursday, June 23d, the commencement exercises of the Borough Public School will be held in the Y. M. C. A. building. There will be twelve graduates.

DIED AS HELP ARRIVED.

OPENED THE DOOR FOR GEORGE HENRY AND THEN FELL BACK.

Mrs. Jennie Jervis the Dead Woman —Said She Had Been Sick All Night —When Help Came She Suddenly Died.

A sudden death occurred Friday morning in Battle Row on West Fourth street. Mrs. Jennie Jervis, colored, was just in the act of opening the door to an early caller, when she fell backwards and a few moments later expired.

Mrs. Jervis lived in apartments in one of the houses in the Row and she spent Thursday alone. Early Friday morning George Henry, also colored, dropped in at Mrs. Jervis' door to leave a message. Mrs. Jervis came to the door and exclaimed, "Oh, I'm so glad to see you, for I've been sick all night," and fell backwards.

Henry picked the woman up, but she was unconscious, and in a few moments breathed her last. Henry laid the body back on the floor and notified Patrolman Higgins, who took word to Sergeant Kiely. The Sergeant notified Chief Grant, who went to the house, examined the body, and then locked up the room until the county physician could be brought to this city.

After Dr. Westcott had viewed the remains, he pronounced her death due to heart disease. She was about twenty three years of age.

COOK WAS TOO HOT TEMPERED.

An Incident of the Appearance of the Wild West Show.

Frank Goines, the colored cook for the Pawnee Bill show, was arrested Friday by Officer Cash for kicking a boy on the grounds and raising a disturbance. Goines went over to the members of the tent gang in one part of the grounds to borrow a wheelbarrow. This was refused him, and he began at once to strike the boy who had it in charge.

The men, seeing what Goines was doing, picked up tent poles and sticks and started in hot pursuit of the colored man, who ran as fast as he could go, through tents, in and out of the wagons, through the mud, and finally took refuge in a big tent.

Officer Cash, who was on duty in the vicinity, was informed of the racket and arrested the man and locked him up. When arraigned in court Goines pleaded guilty to being disorderly, but as there was no one to appear against the man, the Judge suspended sentence on him with a warning to be a "good man."

OPERATION ON A TIGER.

Its Success Brought Relief and the Animal Was Grateful.

An interesting operation was performed in Dublin some time ago by Dr. Samuel Haughton. A magnificent tiger, one of the finest animals in the Dublin Zoological, was threatened with gangrene in the paw.

One of its claws, becoming distorted, had grown into the foot, and to save the tiger's life it was necessary to cut away the diseased portion. The operation was, to put it mildly, an exciting one. An immensely strong net was in the first place, thrown over the tiger, and in the net he was drawn, struggling desperately, to the door of his cage. Four keepers, each of whom must have been endowed with uncommon courage as well as strength, held the animal's paw while Dr. Haughton cut away the ingrowing claw.

Meanwhile the tigress, which had been temporarily placed in an adjoining den, was frantic with rage, flinging herself furiously against the bars in her mad efforts to come to the rescue of her lord and master. When she was readmitted to her mate's side after the operation, she examined the wounded paw most tenderly, purring the while, and licking her mate as if to soothe him.

Both animals appear to have realized that the operation was a beneficial one, for a week afterward, when Dr. Haughton looked in to see how his patient was progressing, he was received in the friendliest way, and was even allowed to examine the mutilated paw. —Tid-Bits.

He Came Near Praising Him.

Old Ab Drake was one of the "odd sticks" that abounded in a Vermont rural neighborhood a generation ago. His wife was a meek, obedient, spiritless woman, over whom Ab tyrannized for fifty years, when she quietly slipped out of this world. Old Ab's panegyrics at the dead wife's virtues were brief and long. Before the funeral he said to one of his neighbors: "She was the best woman on the top of this earth. I jess thought the world and all of her—yes, I did! I always thought so and hanged if there wa'n't times when I come mighty near telling her so! Yes, sir! an' I would o' told her so, only I've always held, and I still hold, that it ain't safe to praise anything that wa'ns petticoats. 'Cept'in' for that, I would o' told 'Lizy Ellen what I thought of her many a time —yes, I would!"—Boston Journal.

Caught in His Own Trap.

"What's the matter, Brinkley? You look pale and worried."

"I am worried. I've had some blamed hard luck."

"Sorry to hear it. What's happened?"

"Why, I joined the militia to get out of serving on a jury, a little while ago, and it looks now as if I had made a horrible mistake."—Cleveland Leader.

MINDS THAT CAN GRASP.

PARLIAMENTARY CLUB SHOW HOW THEY DO BUSINESS.

An Open Session Held Yesterday Afternoon and Intricate Forms of Debate Gone Through With Intelligently.

The members of the Parliamentary Club have a unique organization which heretofore has not allowed its secrets to be known outside its membership. To introduce its friends to the routine work done by the club, and to exhibit to intelligent women the importance of parliamentary drill, an open meeting was held Friday afternoon in the Y. M. C. A. Hall, to which each member had the privilege of inviting a few friends.

The regular business of the meeting was gone through with quickness and dispatch, and no doubt the visitors present learned more about conducting public meetings and regulating the proceedings of an assembly during the two hours spent there than they could have learned in several hours of heavy reading.

The constitution of the club limits the membership to fifty. There is always a waiting list of twenty or more, which goes to show the popularity of the club among the ladies. The members transact weighty matters of business, all of which is of a fictitious nature, motions being made, amended, and the amendments amended until the ordinary mind would be perplexed with the involved affairs which are reached, but the thorough training of the members that they are able to wade through the mass of motions and bring the matters to a focus.

All this was illustrated yesterday afternoon. Motions were made and the business of a body of grave, deliberating statesmen transacted, although some of the items brought up for consideration provoked a smile. Short speeches were made upon the topics of a minute or two duration. Of course the club has its regular business of the day to transact, but this was not done at Friday's meeting.

A few of the things discussed by the club were building a clubhouse in Alaska, joining the naval reserve, holding a strawberry festival and adopting the rainy day costume. Committees were appointed upon such things as were decided to be done, and other matters were laid upon the table.

During the afternoon Miss Elizabeth Cahoone and Miss Marguerite Burnett rendered violin solos, and several papers were read. "Debs' Literature Owes to Poverty," written for another New Jersey club, was read by Mrs. J. P. Mosher, and a paper on foreign affairs, which was partly in verse, was read by Mrs. W. L. Patton. The club color, nile green, was displayed.

SERVED TEMPTING DISHES.

Strawberry and Ice Cream Festival at Hope Chapel.

The Ladies' Aid Society of Hope chapel gave an ice cream and strawberry festival Friday, the proceeds of which went towards the benefit fund.

A programme of music and recitations was first presented. Vocal music was rendered by Mr. Turner and a duet by Messrs. Brandt and Turner. Recitations were given by Miss LaRue, Arthur Daw, Miss Ada Westphal, Miss Cora Hand, Miss Try Mattox and Miss Murphy.

Those at the tables were: Ice cream, Mrs. M. Sweeny, Mrs. J. Randolph and Mrs. Hangleighter; cake, Mrs. Montgomery and Mrs. Bunn; berries, Mrs. Gray; candy, Mrs. McGue and Mrs. Sheppard. Mrs. F. Stewart and Mrs. Young took the tickets at the door. The committee in charge consisted of Mrs. J. Randolph, chairman; Mrs. Andrew Cox and Mrs. Tillie Riker.

A Talk on Blockheads.

A good-sized audience gathered at the Christian church on Grove street last evening and heard an interesting lecture on "Blockheads" by Rev. F. D. Power, of Washington. The speaker was very eloquent and he kept his audience convulsed with laughter throughout the lecture. Mr. Power is an orator of great ability and out of a seemingly foolish subject he drew many pointed truths and helpful lessons.

Realty Changes.

The following real estate transfers have been recorded in the Union county clerk's office during the past week: John Leal et ux to Sylvanus L. Schoonmaker, Madison avenue, 136.84 feet northerly from Stelle avenue, Plainfield, $2,250.00; Mary A. Pike to William J. Elliott, northeasterly side Monroe avenue, 150 feet from Third street, Plainfield, $700.

Transfers of Real Estate.

The following transfers of real estate in North Plainfield were recorded in the county clerk's office between April 30th and May 11th, 1898:

Wm. O. Worth et ux., to Olin L. Jenkins, $1; Alfred University to William L. Sharker, $600; Borough of North Plainfield to Charles Bock, $137.39; William D. Craig et ux., to John J. Heideloff, $1.

CADETS AIDED IN A CHURCH FESTIVAL.

Patriotic Affair Given in Vincent Chapel Last Friday.

CLEVER WOMEN IN CHARGE

TYPICAL MILITARY CAMP PITCHED ON THE PLATFORM.

While the Soldier Boys Gathered in Their Bivouac Charles H. Lyman Sang "Tenting Tonight"—Effect Was Very Pleasing When the Cadets Joined in the Chorus—Cadets Gave an Exhibition Drill Under Command of Captain Edwards—Dr. Snodgrass Gave a Patriotic Talk—National Music.

There was a gathering of uniformed men in front of the First M. E. church Friday. Bayonets flashed and the jingle of accoutrements could be heard. Then came the sharp word of command, "Fall in," and a few moments later the steady tramp was heard and the squad marched into Vincent chapel in the rear of the church. They were the High School cadets, who were the principal feature of the patriotic festival given in the chapel by the Ladies' Aid Society of the First M. E. church.

The ladies had departed from the accustomed paths in providing entertainment for the festival. Through the influence of Captain George E. Edwards, commandant of the cadets, the corps turned out.

The soloist for the evening was not able to be present, so Charles H. Lyman took his place. The programme opened with his solo, "Columbia, the Gem of the Ocean," the audience joining in the chorus.

At one side of the platform, a tent had been pitched, the rifles of the young cadets were stacked on the stage while they lounged about the platform and near, save for the armed sentry who paced up and down. Then the lights were turned low, the soldier boys gathered in their bivouac, and Mr. Lyman softly sang "Tenting Tonight." The effect was very pleasing. The cadets joined in the chorus.

Then followed a twenty minute drill by the cadets under the command of Captain Edwards in which they went through their different manœuvres with regularity and skill.

After a selection by Roger's orchestra, which gave several selections before the programme had begun, Rev. Dr. Snodgrass spoke a few words on "Patriotism." The singing of "The Star Spangled Banner" followed, Mr. Lyman singing the solo. Then all the guests were presented with little souvenirs appropriate to the patriotic festival.

The committee of arrangements in charge of the festival consisted of Mrs L. M. French, chairman; Mrs. C. H. Lyman and Mrs. O. Jenkins. The refreshment committee consisted of Mrs. R. W. Price, chairman; Mrs. G. Q. Packer, Mrs. C. H. Bragg, Mrs. C. E. Horne, Miss Jackson and Miss Sharpe. Mrs. J. P. Homan looked after the souvenirs.

The chapel was artisticly decorated with flags and tri colored bunting which were used with effect all about the rooms. The parlors were hung with a series of small American flags.

FAT WAGON WRECKED.

Trolley Car Collided With It—The Driver Somewhat Injured.

Augustus Hoagland, who is employed by William Banks, a fat and pelt dealer, of Netherwood, met with an accident Thursday night on the street railroad near Dunellen. Hoagland was driving a covered wagon near the Eight Row when car No. 11, in charge of Motorman William Bush, came up behind him, and before Conductor Bush could prevent it, a collision had occurred in which the wagon was overturned and the man buried in the debris.

When Hoagland could be extracted from his perilous position, it was found that he was injured about the hips and the foot. The horse ran away when the collision occurred, but was soon caught. Hoagland was taken home and a physician called, who does not think Hoagland is seriously hurt. The railway company has agreed to settle for the damages.

WOMEN'S ASSOCIATION ELECT.

Mrs. M. E. Dwight at the Head of a Congregational Society.

The annual meeting of the Women's Association of the Congregational church was held in the church parlors Thursday afternoon. The election of officers was held and resulted as follows: President, Mrs. M. E. Dwight; vice-president, Mrs. C. L. Goodrich; recording secretary, Miss Effie E. Chase; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Joseph Fuller; treasurer, Mrs. John M. Whiton. The officers of the committees were chosen as follows: Missionary committee, Miss Florilla F. Clark, chairman, Miss Mary Ellis, treasurer; social committee, Mrs. A. C. LaBoyteaux, chairman, Mrs. E. Messersmith, treasurer; committee on local charities, Mrs. L. B. Morgan, chairman, Mrs. E. L. Suffren, treasurer.

LIVES DEDICATED TO AID THE SUFFERING.

Trained Nurses Graduated From Muhlenberg Hospital.

DIPLOMAS WERE GIVEN.

REMARKS IN APPROVAL AND ENCOURAGEMENT OF NURSES.

Miss Emma D. Meesler and Miss Grace Adele Palmer the Graduates—Diplomas Presented by George H. Goddard and Class Pins by W. R. Cook, of the Board of Governors—Rev. F. D. Appleton Spoke of the Worthy Work and Dr. E. M. Hedges, of the Hospital Staff, Gave Practical Advice.

The chapel of the Crescent Avenue church was well-filled Thursday with friends and patrons of the hospital who came to witness the graduation exercises of the nurses, Miss Emma D. Meesler and Miss Grace Adele Palmer. These two young ladies have served the three years of preliminary study and experience, and are now ready to go forth into the world to do their share towards alleviating the suffering among humanity.

The exercises at the chapel began shortly after 8 o'clock. George H. Goddard, president of the board of governors, introduced the speakers and presented the graduates with their certificates. Prayer was offered by Rev. Dr. Richards, after which Mr. Goddard explained in a few words what the people had gathered together for and something about the work of a nurse in training, the advantages to be derived from the course outlined at Muhlenberg. He also spoke of the courage and devotion of the two who were about to go forth. The course has, until recently, been two years, but upon a suggestion by the medical board, it has been changed to three years, which gives the women more time to prepare themselves. This change made a difference of two in the number of the graduating class, the class of only two having expired instead of four. Miss Meesler was finished December 19th, and Miss Palmer, March 5th. This was the third anniversary, and Mr. Goddard said these were the sixth and seventh nurses who were sent out.

Rev. Floyd Appleton, curate of Grace Episcopal church, was the speaker. Mr. Appleton said that he had always been interested in hospital work, and that Muhlenberg Hospital was one of the first places that he was taken to when he came to this city. But he said he would be interested in it, not only because he is a clergyman, but because the work of church and hospital should be thought of together. The work of the church, continued the speaker, is to take away sin out of the world, and sin is misery and unhappiness. Today there are hospitals all over the face of Christendom, which wouldn't have been placed there were it not for religion.

Mr. Appleton expressed himself as pleased that the founders and patrons of the hospital are known as church-loving people, and said that Plainfield is far ahead of some other cities in the close connection between the church and charitable work.

After Mr. Appleton's address, Mr. Goddard presented the certificates to the graduates, and spoke a few encouraging words to them.

Dr. Ellis W. Hedges, representing the medical staff of the hospital, next spoke. He congratulated the nurses on belonging to the oldest profession in the world, and gave them some good advice which they could not help but appreciate just as they were starting out in the world. Dr. Hedges told them that the average working life of a nurse was but ten years, and explained this by telling them of the dangers to which they would be exposed and the irregular habits they would be apt to contract. All the glamor of being "ministering angels," said Dr. Hedges, soon disappears.

The doctor said that he was told a few days ago not talk to the graduates about their manners or the way they ought to behave in the homes to which they go. But the speaker declared he must urge them to use their common sense. "Be loyal to the doctor in charge, and to the family. Whatever you hear of unpleasantness in the homes to which you go, let it be a secret of your own."

Dr. Hedges said that there were no two people better known than Florence Nightingale and Clara Barton, who have lived their lives for the people, and who have made the red cross an emblem of all that is beautiful.

William Cook, whom Mr. Goddard introduced as one of the original founders and charter members of the hospital, presented the class pins to the graduates. These pins are given by the members of the board of governors, and Mr. Cook said that they were presented so that all who see the pin will know that the board of governors of Muhlenberg Hospital place the utmost confidence in the wearer.

Mr. Cook has always been associated with the hospital, and is one of its most earnest supporters.

During the evening the Misses Hyatt, of East Ninth street, rendered selections on the piano and violin, and Miss Hardenburg, of the Crescent Avenue church choir, sang two solos. The nurses and matrons had seats on the platform.

At the presentation of the certificates by Mr. Goddard, Charles P. Bull presented each graduate with a large bouquet of flowers. Mr. Bull felt a friendly feeling for them because both nurses were his attendants when he was ill at the hospital over a year ago.

NO FIGHT FOR REVENGE

WAR IS A PROTEST AGAINST EXTERMINATION OF INNOCENT PEOPLE.

Rev. Merrill Smith Says We Are a United People Because So Many Have Given Up Their Lives For Freedom.

Rev. Merrill Smith, who has just graduated from Drew Theological Seminary, gave an instructive and interesting lecture at Monroe Avenue church May 25th before a large audience. His subject was "The American Soldier and his Contribution to Liberty." The speaker was introduced by Rev. W. C. O'Donnell, pastor of the church, after the devotional exercises.

Mr. Smith recited many interesting facts concerning the present difficulty with Spain. He said that after fifty years of toleration, a peace-loving President, steady in his course, had turned aside from his personal feelings, and had declared that anarchy in Cuba must cease, and it has shown that the American people love humanity more than they do peace. Our flag, he said, will float over Cuba at no distant day. Our soldiers and sailors are not fighting for revenge, although they do not forget the Maine. The protest against the extermination of an innocent people is the war note. The God of battles will give that freedom. In conclusion, Mr. Smith said, never let us forget that our liberty cost. We are today a splendid united people, all because so many have freely given their lives that we might be free. Let us teach the young patriotism, let the youth of the land be taught to revere the flag as a nation's hope that represents the best and greatest, that has been woven in the loom of ages, and God is the weaver who has kept the shuttle moving to and fro. The bars of white representing purity, the bars of red the patriotic shedding of blood, and the stars of blue leading us to a heaven of liberty and love.

Boice Property Being Improved.

The property belonging to the Boice estate, several hundred feet front on Chatham street and running back to the lake, is being very materially improved under the supervision of J. B. Coward, one of the heirs. A sidewalk, never before in existence, is being graded in front of the entire property which will be flagged. When completed it will be money well spent.

Bachelor of Divinity.

Orrin W. Snodgrass, eldest son of Rev. Dr. Snodgrass, graduated from the Drew Theological Seminary at Madison, N. J., Thursday last. The graduating class was a large one. He received the degree of bachelor of divinity. A number of his family and friends were present at the graduation ceremonies.

Under the direction of Health Inspector Pangborn, of the borough, the dump on Steiner place has been filled in and leveled off. It is a great improvement.

Help for the Hair is what a great many men and women are looking for; help against approaching baldness; help against faltering locks; help to restore the lost gloss to the hair; help against fading tresses; help for the scalp attacked by dandruff. AYER'S HAIR VIGOR offers just such help. It restores gray or faded hair to its original color, gives it length, thickness and gloss, and removes dandruff.

"My hair was rough and broken and began to fall out. The use of but one bottle of AYER'S HAIR VIGOR both checked the falling out and restored my hair to much, glossy and in splendid condition. It is the finest of dressings."—MRS. F. L. SMITH, Silver Creek, Miss.

"Some years ago my hair began to fall out and in a few months was bald. By advice I tried and very soon my hair ceased to fall out and a new and vigorous growth made its appearance. My hair is now abundant and glossy."—THOS. DUNN, Rockville, Wis.

HELPING THE SOLDIERS.

TRINITY ENDEAVORERS MAKE 25 COMFORT-BAGS.

Useful Articles to be Furnished to the Boys in Blue at the Front, Which Will Make Their Army Life Easier.

The Christian Endeavorers of Trinity Reformed church met Thursday in the lecture room of the church and held a comfort-bag social. This is the first affair of the kind held in this city and the novelty attracted a goodly number of people considering the weather. The social was arranged by the social, missionary, temperance and good-citizenship committees of the society. The idea was to have various members of the society meet and make comfort bags to the number of about twenty-five. Different ones were asked to contribute useful articles which are to be divided and placed in the bags. The members in charge will then select twenty-five soldiers a nd present them with these bags. The captain in charge will be asked to furnish the names of those receiving the bags and while the war lasts the society will look after them and keep posted as to how they are getting along.

Each comfort-bag contains a pair of scissors, vaseline, a testament bandages, paper of safety-pins, paper of needles, two kinds of buttons, writing paper, pencils and linen thread. It was not possible for the members to complete the twenty-five bags last Thursday and another social will be held soon.

During the evening refreshments were served by members of the committees. Those who had the affair in charge consisted of Henry Seader, Harry Crawford, Miss D. Bolsterli, Miss Anna Searing, Miss S. Williams, Miss Minnie Wyman, Miss Viola Huff, Miss Laura Holder, Miss Bessie Martin, Mrs Julius Williams, Mrs. H J. Martin, Mrs. Townsend, Mrs. Bertha Richards, Miss Corinne Young and Miss Jennie Ross.

CHURCH AFFAIR AT FANWOOD.

Clever Entertainment Given by All Saints' Society.

The entertainment given by the Choir Guild of All Saint's P. E. church, of Scotch Plains, at the Fanwood Chateque last Thursday was eminently enjoyable and successful.

Miss Madeline Pearson, of Brooklyn, opened with a charming recitation, entitled "Molly," and in the interval between the plays, recited with great approval, several other amusing sketches.

The young women have acquitted themselves so well in previous entertainments of this character that the mention of their names and the fact that they performed so to their usual ability is fully sufficient. In "Rice Pudding," Miss Kennedy, Miss Poole and Miss Kleb took part with Mr. Bent and Dudley Kyte.

In the comedy farce entitled "Woodcock's Little Game," Miss Grace E. Kyte, Miss Emily Moore and Miss Marguerite Kyte sustained their former reputation and were frequently applauded. John M. Thompson, as the typical English man elicited frequent outbursts of approval at his most excellent portrayal of his difficult part, and together with Henry Frentz and the Misses Wheeler, gave life and interest through the two acts of this popular and rather elaborate farce. Miss Frentz, Miss Bertha Frentz and Miss Klemper acted as bridesmaids and were well received.

The musical tableau, which brought upon the stage most of the performers, was a patriotic and highly appropriate ending to the entertainment. The audience rose at the familiar strains of the Star Spangled Banner and Miss Elizabeth Kyte as the goddess of liberty gave an inspiring tone to the singing of the National air as she waved the "flag of the free." Miss Kleb accompanied the singers. A dance followed the entertainment, which at a late hour was being enjoyed by the young people and their guests.

Poor Fare For Soldiers.

Finton Hibbitts, of Liberty street, has received a letter from his son, John Hibbitts, who is now a member of the regular Army and is located at Chickamauga Park. Mr. Hibbitts extisted from Brooklyn. In his letter he says that the soldiers are getting very little to eat, and he should think that while the United States is trying to help starving Cubans they would try to feed their own men better. He says that they have to go a half-mile to get good drinking water and that accommodations are very poor.

Chapel Dedication.

Sunday June 4th, the new East Third Street Mission chapel will be dedicated with appropriate exercises. A fine programme is now in preparation. Commencing the following day, Monday, and continuing for one week, Rev. Arthur Crane, the evangelist, will hold meetings every night.

Likes Army Life.

Harry McCormick, of the street railway, has received a letter from his brother, James McCormick, who is now located with Company H at Fort Hancock. He states that he is getting along very well and likes army life so far.

IN AID OF HOME MISSIONS

ANNIVERSARY EXERCISES OF METHODIST SOCIETIES LAST NIGHT.

An East Orange Woman Talked Intelligibly—Treasurer's Report Showed That Western Ministers Were Assisted.

The anniversary exercises of the Woman's Home Missionary and the Young Ladies' Home Missionary Societies of the First Methodist church were held May 24th in the church instead of the regular Wednesday evening prayer meeting. The exercises consisted of an address by Mrs. Barkaley, president of the Young Ladies' Society of the Calvary church at East Orange, singing by Miss Etta Baybert, and the reading of reports of both societies.

Mrs. Barkalew's address was quite interesting, and in it she told something of the work of her society in East Orange. The society from which Mrs. Barkalew came is composed of young ladies, who are very much interested in the work of home missions.

The report of the Woman's Society was read by Mrs. Noah W. Pike. The report showed that about $125 had been donated in the way of supplies for the poor clergymen on the frontier, while another hundred had been raised for the work nearer home. The report of the Young Ladies' Society was read by Miss Nora Campbell, and was just as satisfactory, showing that the young folks had not been idle either.

THIRD IN ATHLETIC RACE.

Plainfield Boys in the Inter-scholastic Association Games.

The Plainfield High School finished third in a race for honors at the championship games of the New Jersey Inter-scholastic Athletic Association, held on the grounds of the New Jersey Athletic Club at Bayonne May 25th.

George Proctor Smith, who entered under the High School, again secured the individual championship by scoring the most points of any one contestant.

Plainfield was not represented in any of the track events except the low hurdles. Smith ran in that event. With only four more hurdles to cross he was fully twenty feet in the lead when he tripped over a hurdle by jumping too close to it and was thrown heavily. He was badly cut up by the fall.

In the pole vault, the record held by Smith of 9 feet 6 inches was broken by Phil Moore, of Pingry's, with a vault of 10 feet. Smith was second, with 9 feet 3 inches. Smith was also second in the broad jump.

Smith showed excellent form in putting the shot, breaking the old record made by himself by over two feet. His put was 40 feet, 2½ inches.

In throwing the discuss, Smithrout threw the old record, held by himself, by nearly three feet. He won with a throw of 95 feet, 10 inches.

The old record for throwing the hammer was 102 feet, 1± inches, made by Carroll L. Runyon, of the High School. The event was won by W. C. Riley, Princeton Prep, with 129 feet, 7 inches. Smith was second and C. L. Runyon third.

Walter L. Long, of the Plainfield High School, took third in the running high jump, clearing 4 feet, 11 inches.

Pingry School of Elizabeth scored 53 points, winning the banner. Montclair High School was second with 30, and Plainfield third with 21.

ENDEAVORERS' WORK.

A meeting of the executive committee of the local Christian Endeavor Union was May 23rd evening at the home of E F. Anthony, of West Front street, the first vice-president. Representatives from eight societies were present. Plans for the summer home for city girls were further discussed, but no positive decision was reached as to the possibility of opening such a home.

The question of re-forming the bicycle squad for the purpose of visiting out-of-town societies was brought up and it was decided to attempt this unique method of combining pleasure and profit, again. It is hoped that the Endeavorers who ride will be ready at the call of the captain, Miss Ernestine Smith, to bear their part in the work.

The subject of inter-society visitation was discussed and the plan of the societies meeting occasionally with the other societies was proposed and met with approval. It was also suggested that the officers of the union visit as often as possible each society in the union.

Two new departments were added to the union Bible study and lookout and prayer meeting combined. In closing, the president asked for any new plans tried or special work undertaken during the past month by the societies represented.

Trolley Struck a Wagon.

Car No. 2 of the street railway, in charge of Motorman William Bush, ran into a wagon near the Eight Row at Dunellen Thursday, upset it and threw driver out on the ground. The man was not hurt very much, and after straightening things out he drove on.

THE TOWN CLOCK IS SICK

THE PUBLIC'S TIME PIECE BADLY IN NEED OF REPAIR.

Its Works Need Constant Attention and Six Months of Neglect Has Resulted in Its Refusal to Mark Fleeting Time.

What is the matter with the town clock on the First Methodist church tower, and why does it not mark the flight of the hours as of old? For the past two months its hands have been motionless, and the neighbors looking up, have seen the clock standing at twenty four minutes after seven, where the hands, after a spasmodic effort to go on, stopped to rest.

The clock is an old relic of Plainfield's early days, and the people miss its sonorous sound which used to be heard every hour during the day and night, and those who were too far to hear it strike used to look out of their windows mornings and take the time.

The old town clock has led a varied life. Though not belonging to the Methodist church, in the tower of which clock was placed, the section of the church was still to wind it and keep it going, for the sake of having it placed there. In years gone by it kept excellent time, and many a housewife, living within range of its voice, needed no other clock, but depended on the old town clock, whose face she could see from her window.

In the rush of time the old clock was forgotten, and when its joints became old and rheumatic and its works refused to run, it was neglected and suffered to stand for months without attention. Finally some public-spirited citizen became anxious to have the old clock repaired. John VanEps, the Park avenue jeweler, offered to repair it and keep it in running order for one year for $30. His offer was accepted, and once again the old clock began to make time and chime the hours as they came and went.

Mr. VanEps contract expired six months ago and the old time piece, like other old things, needs more attention than when it was young. So it has been suggested that the city, to whom it belongs, expend $50 a year, for a jeweler has offered to take charge of the clock for that sum, and let this man clean it, oil it and put it in repair again, and keep it so for another twelve months. This sum includes winding it once a week, no light task, for it has to be done with a crank and the old clock winds hard.

FOUGHT FOR A BEAU.

John Taylor is Almost Too Popular With Dusky Damsels.

Everyone knows that John Taylor, colored, is very popular with the ladies of his set, but the public were hardly prepared to hear that three young colored girls had got into a fight over him Thursday. The three women were Amanda Hooper, Sarah Green and Maria Pleasant, who were arrested for fighting on Plainfield avenue and Third street.

Taylor explained it this way: "You see, Judge, I was goin' home with 'Bia when 'Manda and Sarah began to pull and haul on me to go with them. I didn't want to go with them girls, but only wanted 'Bia, and then the cop came and pulled us all in."

"What are you here for then," asked the Judge.

"Mostly for a witness, I guess, Judge," answered Taylor. He got off with a suspension of sentence. Sarah Green was fined $8 or twenty days, and the other two $3 or ten days.

A Groundless Apprehension.

So much has been said in the public prints and elsewhere as to possible disturbances and trouble on the Atlantic coast, in view of the present war, and also of the lurking danger danger in submarine mines and torpedoes with which our harbors have been protected, that the timidity of a large number of people has been increased, and many have refrained from making their annual spring outing to one of the seaside resorts.

The best proof that these dangers are imaginary is found in the fact that the great coastwise lines continue to operate their schedule uninterruptedly. For instance, the steamships of the Old Dominion Steamship Company, running between New York and Virginia, have lost none of their trips, and do not expect to do so.

To the many attractions of this company's short sea route along the New Jersey, Delaware and Virginia coasts, which is considered free from all risk, is added the gathering of warships, stripped for action in Hampton Roads.

Interest in Fort Monroe, Old Point Comfort, Newport News, Hampton Roads, and Washington has never attained a greater height since the Civil War.

Visitors Were Present.

A meeting of Central Lodge, A. O. U. W., was held Thursday. Deputy Grand Master Workman Bauerasche, of Columbia Lodge, and Receiver Wm. J. Smythe, of Long Branch, were present at the meeting. Remarks were made by the visitors and some of the leading members. The recorder was instructed to apply for a special dispensation for a special meeting. The excursion committee reported.

A 20TH CENTURY CITY

INTERESTING BOOK DIGESTED BY THE CONGREGATIONALISTS.

Different Sections of the Book Discussed by Various Men of the Church as to Provide a Profitable Evening.

"The Twentieth Century City," a new book by Rev. Josiah Strong, D. D., the author of "Our Country" and the "New Era," formed the subject of the midweek service at the Congregational church last night. There was a good attendance, in spite of the rain.

A brief digest of the different sections of the book was given by various men of the church. Rev. Charles Lyman Goodrich spoke upon the first, telling of the material progress of the Nation, really out of proportion to its intellectual and moral progress. The reasons for the concentration of the population in cities formed the subject of Louis Irving VanAlstyne's remarks, while J. A. Robinson followed with reasons why the city must be considered a menace to the Nation, such as poor sanitary conditions, ignorant classes allowed political control, and the saloon problem. Mr. Goodrich said a few words on the need of patriotism in civic affairs, after which Anthony C. LaBoyteaux took up the section of the book referring to "Twentieth Century Christianity," speaking of the new social spirit and social conscience steadily increasing, and emphasizing the fact that Christ is the only Savior for society, as well as for the individual. "The Twentieth Century Church" was appropriately dealt with by the pastor, who gave the author's ideas on the mission of the church to society, and some practical suggestions for usefulness.

FIRST BAND CONCERT.

Small Audience, but a Fine Musical Programme Given.

The first summer night concert by the Queen City Band was given last Thursday in Music Hall before a small audience. The weather no doubt was responsible for the poor attendance, but the members of the band really deserve better patronage. The entire programme as published in The Daily Press was rendered. The band, under the direction of Ben. LaVere, played up to the standard, while the cornet solos by William Bartow and the violin solos by P. Ludwig Conde were special features receiving hearty applause. The band appeared in their new uniforms and made quite a hit. It is the intention of Mr. LaVere to give these concerts every Friday evening at the Hall and there will be special features each time. The people of Plainfield should support the efforts made to maintain a first-class band as the only way to attend these concerts and encouraging those who take part. In the audience last evening occupying one of the boxes were the members of the Thursday Evening Euchre Club, of which Mr. LaVere is a member. One of the other boxes was also filled with an appreciative audience.

A Piano Recital.

A piano recital was given Thursday at the home of the Misses Marsh, 915 Madison avenue, by their pupils, assisted by Mrs. George A. Chapman, soprano. The affair was a delightful one and the pupils acquitted themselves with great credit. Those who took part were the Misses Bessie Phillips, Dorothy Fisk, Norma Northrup, Isabel Milne, Margaret P. Mead, Annie L. Jennings, Mayzie L. Day, Ellen Osgood, Virginia Hegeman, Ethel Titsworth, Gladys Kaufman, Grace Kaufman, Nellie Valiant, Bessie J. Valiant, Soldee Mae Howell, Margaret W. McMorchen, Chester P. Titsworth and George L. Babcock. The singing by Mrs. George A. Chapman was a feature of the recital. The affair was largely attended by relatives and friends of the pupils.

Improvement at Clinton Avenue Station.

A number of noted improvements have been made at the Clinton Avenue station of the Central Railroad. A fence has been erected along the eastbound track, and steps have been located on the station side of the track leading to Clinton avenue. These improvements will undoubtedly prevent accidents. The station park has also been much improved of late.

Hustling Work On the Carriages.

The work on the disappearing gun carriages at the Pond Tool Works is being rushed as fast as possible. The idea is to complete all the carriages about the same time so that they can all be inspected at once. No orders have been received as yet for their shipment. It is expected that the works will receive a small order for carriages for mortars in a short time.

Caring for Storm Water.

Borough Engineer J. F. Hubbard is preparing some needed improvements for Greenbrook road and Somerset street to care for the storm water that floods those thoroughfares during a heavy rain. Large culverts are to be placed there and other arrangements made to care for the water and prevent the usual washouts that have been frequent in the past.

PRESIDENT SELECTS BIRD FOR POSTMASTER

Nominations Sent to the Senate May 25th.

CON. FOWLER RESPONSIBLE

MR. BIRD WILL NOW RESIGN THE OFFICE OF TAX COLLECTOR.

Local Republicans Have Been Awaiting the Appointment With Some Anxiety, But it Does Not Come as a Great Surprise as Bird was Known to Have Strong Political Backing—Fowler Guided by Hope of Support for a Renomination—Mr. Bird Has Not Yet Planned for the Future.

War news has not been the only kind of information that has been watched for from the White House at Washington since the first of May by local Republicans. The nomination of a postmaster for Plainfield by President McKinley, which has been expected since the commission of Postmaster Hetfield expired, has been anxiously awaited. May 25 it came in the naming of Elias H. Bird.

To those who are posted on local politics the selection of Mr. Bird for the office does not come as a great surprise. It has been known ever since the retirement of J. T. MacMurray from the race that Mr. Bird was as active an aggressive candidate for the position.

Mr. Bird was backed by City Clerk MacMurray, and as much of the latter's support for the position as he could control he turned in favor of Mr. Bird.

J. Fred MacDonald was the other principal candidate.

As is customary in Presidential postoffice appointments the chief executive was guided in the selection by the Congressman from this district, and so the appointment was virtually made by Congressman Fowler. Mr. Fowler is a candidate for a renomination, and whatever appointments he controls are generally made along lines that will result in the most political support to be given him in the future. Of course, it is reasonable to suppose that Mr. Bird's appointment was made in view of that fact.

The appointment will have to be ratified by the Senate, which is a mere matter of form, then Mr. Bird will receive the official commission. What his plans are, when he becomes postmaster, de facto, Mr. Bird has refused to divulge. He will at once give up the tax collectorship, as the positions cannot be held together. It is not likely that Mr. Bird will make any changes in the workings of the post office, as civil service rules prevent.

VOICE OF EDUCATORS.

Borough Intelligence and Ideas Heard By County Teachers.

North Plainfield educators took a prominent part in the spring meeting of the Somerset County Teachers Association held in Somerville recently.

The president of the Association, Miss Elizabeth Kiernan, of North Plainfield, placed before the meeting the subject, "Child Study."

The afternoon session was opened by a paper on "Nature Study," by Principal H. J. Wightman. This paper was pronounced by all one of the most interesting and instructive discourses ever delivered in this country. The writes claimed a foremost place in the curriculum of Nature Study. He deprecated the fact that the common fowls are less interesting than wild birds. Teachers should not compel excessive, unaided research on the part of the pupils, but should give them information freely.

After a short discussion, S. St. John McCutchen, member of the State Board of Education, gave an address on our present relations with Spain, in which he maintained that the time has passed for any sentiment, except loyalty to our government; and he quoted Decatur's famous aphorism, "Our country, right or wrong."

If there is a history of weak lungs in your family, take Scott's Emulsion.

It nourishes and invigorates.

It enables you to resist the disease. Even if your lungs are already affected, and if besides the cough you have fever and emaciation, there is still a strong probability of a cure.

The oil in the Emulsion feeds; the hypophosphites give power to the nerves; and the glycerine soothes and heals.

THE WORK AT HOSPITAL.

ANNUAL MEETING OF BOARD OF GOVERNORS MONDAY.

Officers Chosen for the Ensuing Year—Hospital Service to the Unfortunate Has Increased Greatly in a Year.

The annual meeting of the board of governors of Muhlenberg Hospital was held last Monday. The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, Samuel Huntington; first vice-president, Charles Schipper; second vice-president, William L. Saunders; secretary, William R. Cock; for managing committee Messrs. Clark, Cock, Goddard, Reynolds and Saunders were elected; and for finance committee Messrs. Wood, Ladd, Whiton, Fisk and Schipper. The election of a treasurer to succeed Edward H. Ladd, Jr., was postponed until the next meeting of the board. The reports showed that there had been 859 patients in the hospital during the year; that the average time that patients had remained was twenty-two days; and that an average of fifteen patients had been in the hospital every day throughout the year, which is twenty per cent. more than last year. 1,226 visits have been made at the dispensary by out-patients, which is an increase of more than thirty-three per cent. over last year. The receipts from pay patients have been less than last year's receipts by fifteen per cent. The current expenses of the hospital have been about $8,109, almost exactly the same as in the previous year.

The hospital has no floating debt, but has in the bank about $1,444, the balance yet remaining from the proceeds of the Spielkartenfest held last November.

The principal items of income for the year were as follows, in round figures:

Individual donations	$2,616
Hospital Sunday collections	219
Patients	1,914
Training school	1,214
Police and letter-carriers' ben. endow.	150
Interest, etc	202
Spielkartenfest	2,567

And the principal items of expense were for

Fuel, light and water	$1,078
Provisions	1,027
Medicines and instruments	1,150
Salaries and wages	3,200
Sundry expenses	1,088
Debt of last year	913
Coal for next year	720

The finance committee reported that in order to meet the expenses of the coming year it would be necessary to enlarge the list of regular contributors; and efforts will be made to interest new friends as well as to hold on to the old ones.

The complete annual report of the hospital will be issued early in October, and any person desiring a copy can make sure of obtaining it by sending his name to any of the officers of the hospital.

Death of Edward T. Matthews.

Edward T. Matthews, for many years private secretary to the late Senator MacPherson and recently for Senator Sewell, died at his residence in Washington, D. C., Monday afternoon, of pneumonia. He had many warm personal friends in Plainfield.

Twilight Club's Affair Successful.

The Twilight Social Club held a successful picnic in the Crescent Rink Monday afternoon and evening. There was a large attendance.

DEATH OF MRS. J. B. MACINTYRE.

An Estimable Woman Unable to Survive Lung Trouble.

The friends of Mrs. John B. Macintyre will learn with deep sorrow of her death, which occurred Monday at her home on Elm place. She had been ill for some time past, but her condition of late had been much improved and the members of the family were quite encouraged. Death was the result of lung trouble.

Mrs. Macintyre was about 65 years of age, and before coming to Plainfield she and her family resided in Harlem. They have been residents of this city for many years. A husband and two sons survive her. One of the sons, George M. Macintyre, is associated with F. L. C. Martin on Park avenue, while the other son, Philip Macintyre, is in business in New York. The father is also associated in the bicycle business with his son George.

AROUND THE FESTIVE BOARD.

Bachelors Club Ended Its Social Season With a Banquet.

The Bachelor's Club ended its season Saturday evening with a grand dinner at the Hotel Hunterston. The dinner was a very elaborate meal served in the large dining room of the hotel. The president of the club, Benjamin O. Bowers, Jr., presided. The others present were. Carroll L. Runyon, Harry Ostermoor, Charles Barlow, Lindley M. Hillman, Aubrey Hull, Henry W. Brower, Edward J. Kline, Morris Dumont, Rev. T. Phillips, John Hull, Albert Finch, Harry Woltmann, Godwin Beard, A. Willis West, Van R. Schuyler, Duncan Bulkley and Carl L. Walz. No wine was served.

Speeches followed the dinner, Edward J. Kline acting as toastmaster. The president made a rousing address. There was also singing by the club quartette, Messrs. West, Kline, Bowers and Runyon.

Garfield League Ceremonies.

Garfield League, assisted by its auxiliary of girls, Houghton Division No. 1, of the Children's Loyal Legion, held memorial services Monday afternoon in the Presbyterian cemetery, North Plainfield. The chorus sang as an opening hymn, "God bless our native land," then followed a responsive reading from the Scriptures, after which Rev. C. E. Scudder, pastor of the M. E. church of Mountain View, led in an impressive prayer. The flag was then saluted, recitations were rendered and several patriotic airs were sung. The service in honor of the unknown dead was held at the grave of the late Mrs. MacDonald, for many years chaplain of Garfield League. The children then proceeded to decorate the grave of every honorably discharged Union veteran in the cemetery, that of the Revolutionary soldier being decorated by the color bearer George Staats, a direct descendant from a soldier of the Revolution.

Chance for a Business Education.

The president of the Plainfield Business College offers a discount of 20 per cent. on scholarship for the commercial or the shorthand course, if purchased before the first day of July. He expects a larger and better school for the coming year than ever. Various improvements are to be introduced. Many of the students have already secured positions.

WHERE'S THE ELUSIVE FLEET?

Oh where! oh where is the Spanish fleet?
Where oh where can it be?
It's here, and there, and it's everywhere,
Just like poor Paddy's flea.

One day it's after the Oregon,
The next at Martinique,
Again it's off for the Philippines
Our navy's pride to seek.

Then safe and sound it is "bottled up"
In Santiago Bay:
But ere the cork has been driven in
It swiftly sails away.

Our Spaniards, strong, is up and aloft
Where naught escapes his sight;
But he who grapples this slippery fleet
Must certainly be 8-1-7.

Parchance 'tis Neptune's will o' the wisp,
And but a phantom fleet:
The wraith of the land it lends may
Have drifted from its boat.

PASSING COMMENT.

Things that Are Not Exactly News, but Just as Interesting.

Last Monday Captain S. C. Peck displayed three old war flags in front of his handsome residence on West Front street. Mr. Peck only displays the flags Memorial Day from the fact that they are so old and are now ready to fall to pieces. He had the flags in the service when he was in the south during the war and he is very proud of them. They were greatly admired by all who saw them Monday.

It is not often that such sacrifices are made for the benefit of a community as are about to be undergone at Lincoln. Si Drake's blond whiskers are almost as famous the hustler himself, and not a few of a scientific turn of mind insist that the doughty little Mayor's energy and getfebleness is due to the bristling quality of his hirsute growth, but notwithstanding the great personal pride which the Mayor takes in his nicely cultured whiskers he intends to forego whatever sentiment there is in their possession and have them actual cut off. The Mayor's friends will wonder thereat, so an explanation is necessary. For several weeks the Mayor has been trying to get a barber to locate in Lincoln, but it is only recently that he has secured such a one as he wants, As Silas believes in the eternal fitness of things this tonsorial artist is a woman. Everyone in the whole world knows—thanks to the Mayor's clever advertising ability—that Lincoln is the one original woman's town of America It is especially fitting, then, that it should have a woman barber as well as women law-makers. Silas believes in encouraging every industry that locates in Lincoln and the only way he sees to help the woman barber on is to have his whiskers cut off, and so off they are going. It will be a great sacrifice for Si, but nevertheless an exploit of the fact that even whiskers do not stand in the way of his enterprise. When the wintry winds whistle across the undulating land from the Watchung spur to Lincoln's lovely plateau they will no longer toy with Silas' bristling whiskers.

SERVED 1,000 GLASSES OF SODA.

Frank Rowley's New Fountain Proved a Great Attraction.

The formal opening of Frank Bowley's new drug store, which took place Saturday, was a huge success. The handsome new soda fountain proved a great attraction George C. Milner, of New York, had charge of the fountain and dispensed delicious drinks. As a result of the coupon printed in The Daily Press, entitling the holder to a glass of soda, about 1,000 glasses were served. Mr. Rowley also gave out about 500 souvenirs in the shape of sachet bags filled with imported lavender. Everyone present spoke of the place as a handsome drug store. Next Thursday there will be another display of manufactured ice, and thereafter novelties will frequently be introduced. The decorations in the store and entrance to Music Hall were the work of Mr. Milner.

A NEW SCHOOL HOUSE.

sum of $21,000 be issued in the corporate name of the borough, in sums of $500 each, bearing 5 per cent. interest, the bonds to be issued in 1908 and be paid off in 1914, and that each year a sufficient amount of tax be levied to cover the bonds. On this resolution there were 55 votes cast, 44 of which were for and 11 against the resolution. There being no further business the meeting adjourned.

It is now expected that the work of erecting the new school will be started at an early date and that it will be ready for occupancy by next fall.

Mission for Italians.

A mission for Italians commenced last Tuesday in St. Mary's church. It is conducted by Father Morelli, an eloquent preacher. The services will begin at 7:30 o'clock each evening during the week. Father Morelli was very much encouraged by the attendance Tuesday, more than 100 being present. They were very glad to hear a sermon in their own language and already speak of erecting a church for themselves.

VETERANS AT DIVINE SERVICE.

Rev. W. C. Snodgrass Preached a Patriotic Sermon Sunday Night.

According to the usual custom, the members of the G. A. R., Sons of Veterans and Women's Relief Corps attended divine service last Sunday evening. Upon invitation they attended the First M. E. church and listened to a patriotic discourse by Rev. W. C. Snodgrass. The church was prettily decorated with American flags. Suspended from the organ pipes there was a very large American flag. In front of the platform there were stacks of arms and a pleasing arrangement of flowers. The music was in charge of Miss Jessie Utter, organist, and a choir of mixed voices. During the evening Mrs. Douglass sang very effectively the Star Spangled Banner. There was a very large attendance of people at the church and the patriotic words of the speaker were the sentiments of all present.

Miss Darrow, of Buffalo, is the guest of Miss Mabel Coard, of East Ninth street.

Results in a case of severe kidney trouble after only four weeks' treatment.

Mr. Fred Latimer has written us as follows:

UTICA, NEW YORK.
THE CAPSULOID COMPANY.
GENTLEMEN:—"Twelve years ago I had my first attack of kidney trouble, following a heavy cold. The pain in the back was severe and there was smothering over the kidneys. I rapidly lost in strength, weight, and color. I had my acute attacks, but my kidneys were left weak and tender. Several small attacks since further weakened my kidneys, and about a year ago I had the worst attack of all. I was confined to my room for eight weeks. My doctors attended me constantly, and by their ability pulled me through; but when I got around again I found myself in the same old state. A friend of mine, a doctor, told me to try Capsuloids. A month ago I commenced taking them. Now everyone of the bad symptoms have disappeared; the pain is all gone, and I scarcely ever feel any smothering. I have gained thirty pounds, my appetite has improved, I have lost that sallow kidney complexion, and have a good, healthy, strong appearance with lots of color in my face. Best of all, my kidney symptoms that so worried me have disappeared. It is hard even for me to believe, but it is perfectly true. I feel thankful to the Capsuloid Company." Gratefully yours, FRED LATIMER.

This is not a patent or secret medicine. It is prescribed largely by doctors.

A Prominent Physician.

A prominent New York physician in discussing the merits of Ripans Tabules with a brother M. D. said: "Several years ago I asserted that if one wished to become a philanthopist, and do a beneficent deed—one that would help the whole human race—nothing could be better than to procure the Roosevelt Hospital prescription, which is the basis of the Ripans Tabules, and cause it to be put up in the form of a ketchup and distributed among the poor."

Sales Increasing.

The largest retail drug store in America is that of Hegeman & Co. on Broadway in New York City. A reporter who went there to learn how Ripans Tabules were selling bought a five-cent carton and asked: "Do you have much call for one?"

He was referred to a gentleman who proved to be the head of the department. He said:

"The sale of Ripans Tabules is constant and is increasing, due especially to the influential character of the testimonials in the daily press, and growing out of these, through the recommendation of friend to friend. Satisfaction with them is very general. When once they are begun I notice that a permanent customer for them is made. This, I believe, is through their intrinsic merit, which proves the bona fide character of the advertising. I think them especially useful in the general run of stomach troubles."

An Elderly Lady.

An elderly lady living at Fordham Heights, a part of New York City, and who was known to be a warm advocate of Ripans Tabules for any case of liver trouble or indigestion, said to a reporter who visited her for the purpose of learning the particulars of her case: "I had always employed a physician and did so on the last occasion I had for one, but at that time obtained no beneficial results. I had never had any faith in patent medicines, but having seen Ripans Tabules recommended very highly in the New York Herald concluded to give them a trial, and found they were just what my case demanded. I have never employed a physician since, and find means a saving of $25 a year. A dollar's worth of Ripans Tabules lasts me a month, and I would not be without them now if it were my last dollar." At the time of this interview there were present two daughters who specially objected to their mother giving a testimonial which should parade her name in the newspapers, but to do this the elder lady argued: "There may be other cases just like mine, and I am sure I take great pleasure in recommending the Tabules to any one afflicted as I was. If the telling about my case in the papers enables some other person similarly affected to be as much benefited as I have been, I see no objection." The daughters, knowing how earnestly she felt about the matter, finally received, decided she was quite right.

WAR NEWS!

OUR SHIPS BOMBARD FORTS AT MIDNIGHT.

Another Engagement While the Troops Capture Aguadores.

It is Reported That the Americans Have Effected a Junction With the Insurgents—Officially Admitted That Troops Sail for Santiago—Madrid's Fairy Stories.

JOINED INSURGENTS.

Under Cover of Night and Bombardment, Americans Said to Have Formed Junction.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

Cape Haytien, June 7, via New York, June 8, 1:19 p. m.—According to the latest direct advices from Santiago de Cuba, dated Monday at midnight, the bombardment which began at 7:45 o'clock Monday morning and continued to 10:30 that morning, was resumed for a short time at midnight.

It is then believed that the Americans effected a junction with the insurgents near Diaguiri, east of Aguadores, and near the railway to Santiago.

OFF FOR SANTIAGO.

Officially Admitted that the Expedition Sails Today for Cuba.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

Washington, June 8, 12:05 p. m.—It was admitted this morning by the officials of the War department that the army expedition to Santiago de Cuba would sail today.

It is believed that next week will witness the destruction of Admiral Cervera's fleet, the capture of Santiago and Porto Rico.

President McKinley is quoted as saying that he believed that the war would end before the first of August.

SPANISH TALES.

Remarkable Account of Battle at Santiago as Given Out at Madrid.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

Madrid, June 8, 12:40 p. m.—The Spanish official report of Monday's operations at Santiago de Cuba was communicated to the press this morning. It is as follows:

A bloody encounter occurred at Santiago. The American fleet thrice attacked the forts and attempted to land marines. The batteries repulsed them with heavy losses.

It is estimated that 1,500 Americans were killed and wounded during the encounter by the Spanish fire.

The American sank the Reina Mercedes, the dismantled cruiser that lay in the harbor. Lieutenant Acosta was killed on board.

Colonel Allen and his regiment of Spanish soldiers lay between Santiago and Punta Cubera and sustained the cross fire of the insurgents from the land and the Americans from the sea.

The American fire passed above the Spaniards and fell among the insurgents. The Spaniards were well intrenched and prevented the Americans from landing at Aguadores.

It has been since learned that five sailors and twenty-nine marines were killed on the Reina Mercedes.

St. Paul Sails Today.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

New York, June 8, 12:10 p. m.—The auxiliary cruiser St. Paul sails today to relieve the Yale and Harvard in scouting duty in the West Indies.

MORE FIGHTING AT SANTIAGO

Cannonading Was Continued Yesterday Morning, But No Details Have Come.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

Port au Prince, June 8, 12:30 p. m.—A wild uncredited rumor is heard here that the Cadiz fleet of eighteen ships has been seen off Jamaica.

There was further cannonading off Santiago de Cuba yesterday morning. No details of an engagement, however, have reached here.

It is rumored that the American fleet has captured Aquadores, where it is thought that the American forces are to make their landing.

SAMPSON REPORTS.

Spanish Yarn of the Death of Captain Phillips is Disbelieved.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

Washington, June 8, 1:35 p. m.—The Navy Department attaches no credence to the Spanish reports of the killing of Captain Phillips, commander of the battleship Texas.

Rear Admiral Sampson has wired that no casualties occurred on the American side which is considered conclusive evidence of the falsity of the Spanish reports.

Congress passed this morning a bill providing for the organization of a hospital corps in the navy.

MORE NEW YORK TROOPS

The New Regiments to Be Inspected Tonight, Preparatory to Second Call.

New York, June 8, 9:59 a. m—Three new regiments have been formed in this city to replace those that have gone to the front.

The regiments will be inspected this evening by the adjutant general. The orders to hurry the inspection is believed to be preparatory to the issuance of orders for the President's second call for troops.

War Measure Signed.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

Washington, June 8, 1 p. m—The President today signed the war measure keeping the life-saving stations open throughout the year.

BLOCKADE IS QUIET.

The Layden Makes Things Lively on Spanish Ships and In Shore Defences.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

Key West, June 8, 1:45 p. m.—An auxiliary gunboat arrived in this port today from the blockading fleet of Cardenas. Her officers report all quiet there.

The auxiliary gunboat Leyden, formermerly an ocean tug, is making things very lively for the Spaniards in the vicinity. She blazes away at them when ever she sees any movement on the Spanish gunboats or at the shore defences.

The British collier Roato, sister ship to the Restormel, was held up Saturday by an American gunboat. Not responding promptly to the blank shot, a solid shot was sent over her bows.

Next day she was held up by a second gunboat and obeyed the summons at once.

It is reported here that the Spanish steamer Benito has run the blockade of Manzanilla and arrived at Jamaica.

CAMERA WAS PROXY FOR BRIDE'S PARENTS.

Picture of a Wedding Group Taken Tuesday Evening.

BOND-KENNEDY NUPTIALS.

BRIDE'S PARENTS IN FAR OFF TURKEY WERE UNABLE TO BE PRESENT.

In Order That Mr. and Mrs. Bond Might See How Their Daughter Was Wedded a Flash Light Photograph Was Taken Immediately After the Ceremony and Will be Sent to Them—The Event Celebrated at the Home of Theophelus Bond, of East Front Street—Groom a Talented Clergymen of Asbury Park.

A pretty home wedding was celebrated Tuesday evening at the home of Theophilus Bond, of 503 East Front street, when his niece, Miss Violet Russell Bond, daughter of Rev. and Mrs. Lewis Bond, who are missionaries in Turkey, was married to Rev. P. B. Kennedy, of Asbury, N. J.

The wedding was a quiet one, being witnessed only by the immediate families of the two parties. The groom is a Presbyterian clergyman, and is in charge of the church of that denomination at Asbury.

The house was trimmed with daisies, syringas, snowballs and greens.

The ceremony was performed by Rev. Charles E. Herring, of the First Presbyterian church. An arch of daisies and greens had been formed at one end of the parlor, and it was under a bell of these white flowers that the two plighted their troth.

The bride was attired in white china silk, trimmed with some rare old crepon imported from Turkey. The maid of honor, Miss Edith R. Bond, a sister of the bride, and the flower girls, Miss Bessie W. Bond, a cousin, and Miss Jeanette Linnett, also were dressed in white. Miss Edith and Miss Bessie Bond are from this city; Miss Linnett is from Newark.

The ushers were three Princeton College men, Benjamin Weld, of New York, who is a graduate; Russell Bond, of this city, and Ned Carter, of Montclair, who will graduate this summer.

The marriage ceremony was performed while soft music was played by Prof. MacClymont. At 8 o'clock a reception was held before the couple left.

The bride's parents are earnest workers in the missionary fields. Although stationed in Turkey, they have often been to this country, and are well known. Miss Bond, their daughter, was educated in Mt. Holleyoke Seminary. The parents were unable to attend the marriage of their daughter, but Harry Coward took a flash light photograph of the group immediately after the ceremony, which will be sent to them.

The groom has furnished a cosy little parsonage for his bride in Asbury Park where they will go after a short honeymoon. The presents, many of them, were sent to Asbury, although there were were a large number of handsome and valuable ones to be seen at the house yesterday. The groom's gift was a ring set with an opal and two diamonds. The ushers were given ring stick pins. The maid of honor and flower girls were given pins by the bride.

The Building Ordinance.

At Monday night's meeting of the Council the question of changing the building ordinance was brought up by Mr. Runyon. He said that the committee was willing to consider reasonable changes, but as yet no one had appeared who desired to have the ordinance remodeled. Mr. Buckle said he knew a Plainfield property owner, now living in New York, who would be willing at any time to appear before the committee. Nothing was done, however, regarding the ordinance, and it is doubtful if any change will be made.

Working on Fourth Street.

Monday the street commissioner began work on West Fourth street between Park avenue and the point where the macadam stops, near Liberty street. This street has been in poor condition for some time, and it is doing the residents good to see prospects of a big improvement. The culvert at the corner of Front and Albert streets is finished.

Gospel Work at Faith Chapel.

The service at Faith chapel last Tuesday was largely attended and interesting. Rev. Arthur Crane had charge, and was assisted by Rev. Cornelius Schenck, Ph. D., pastor of Trinity Reformed church, who made a short address, which all enjoyed. The results of the meeting were very encouraging to the workers and a number of conversions are looked for.

WEDDED AT SOMERVILLE

PLAINFIELDER GETS A BELLE OF THAT TOWN FOR A WIFE.

The Marriage of Miss Mabel Cordelia Schenck to Archibald Lawrence Butler—Ceremony Performed Under Floral Arch.

Somerville, June 8—Miss Mabel Cordelia Schenck, one of Somerville's fairest young women, was last evening united in marriage to Archibald Lawrence Butler, of Sandford avenue, Plainfield. The ceremony was performed under a floral arch of green and white and was witnessed by some fifty friends and relatives of the happy couple.

The wedding took place at the home of the bride's grandmother, Mrs. Benjamin T. Veghte, of 68 Bridge street, at 6 o'clock. Rev. William Stockton Cranmer, pastor of the First Dutch Reformed church, of Somerville, performed the ceremony.

The bride was charmingly attired in a gown of white organdie and carried a handsome bouquet of white roses. She wore a bridal veil. Her maid of honor was Miss Hattie C. Praull, of Milford, N. J. The bridesmaids were Miss Hattie Merrill, of Plainfield, and Miss Grace Oakey, of Philadelphia. They were all gowned in white organdie and carried white carnations. Smilax and white rosebuds adorned their hair.

The best man was William Henry, of Piuckamin. The ushers were Thos. Albert Runyon, of Plainfield, and Harry Veghte, of Roselle, a cousin of the bride.

The wedding march was played by Miss Margaret Veghte, of Roselle, a cousin of the bride. The bridal party marched into the parlor where an arch composed of daisies, peonies and ferns was placed. Beneath it they were married. The rooms were artistically decorated in white and green.

There were fifty guests present at the wedding, most of whom were relatives. After the ceremony the wedding supper was served and an informal reception followed.

Mr. and Mrs. Butler departed on the 11:05 train amid a shower of rice and old shoes. They will spend a week at Asbury Park and then return to Plainfield, where they will board at 69 Sandford avenue until their new residence at 830 West Fifth street, is ready for occupancy.

The wedding gifts were of value and many were of a useful character.

Among the guests present were Benjamin Schenck and Miss Josie Banks, of Plainfield; John P. Veghte and family, of Roselle; Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Gordon, Mr. and Mrs. R. Taylor and VanDorn Taylor, of Newark; Mr. and Mrs. Henry and Mrs. Isaac P. Runyon, of Piuckamin; Mr. and Mrs. Isaac Servis, Mr. and Miss McMurtrie, Miss Louise Tunis, Mr. and Mrs. Hardcastle, Mrs. Kate Schenck, Mrs. Cranmer, Miss Hattie Kline and Miss Bessie Jamison, of Somerville.

DAUGHTERS OF AMERICA.

Membership of Martha Washington Council Nearly One Hundred.

An interesting meeting was held by Martha Washington Council, No. 23, Daughters of America, last Tuesday, at which time a large delegation of visiting members from Elizabeth, Newark, Rahway and other places were present. Among the most prominent members present were State Council Secretary J. R. Bollinson, of Rahway, District Deputy VanCamp, of Newark and the initiatory team from Star of Elizabeth Council, No. 27, of Elizabeth, which team initiated six candidates in the home Council in a very satisfactory manner. This was followed with recitations, addresses, vocal and instrumental solos, after which refreshments were served. Martha Washington Council is now crowding the one hundredth mark in membership, and the second anniversary of the Council will be celebrated the evening of August 4th.

Boy In a Smashup.

Willie Apgar, the young son of Neaf Apgar, of Clinton avenue, while driving through town Tuesday afternoon with Tim McCarty's horse and open buggy, collided with another carriage at the corner of North and Park avenues and dished a wheel. The horse was caught in front of The Daily Press office, a new wheel was procured and the buggy was taken away.

Photographed the President.

Olaf Saugstad is exhibiting a snap shot photograph of President McKinley, which he was fortunate enough to secure a few days ago while on a visit to Washington. The photograph was taken just as the president was leaving Camp Alger, where he had been reviewing troops.

—While riding to the fire yesterday Wm. Boss' tire punctured and threw him off his wheel.

REPUBLICANS WILL HAVE A HARD FIGHT.

Opponents of the Regular Organization Coming Together.

ANOTHER CITIZENS' PARTY.

KNOWING ONES SAY THE G. O. P. CANNOT WIN.

Those Opposed to the Present Administration Will Try to Overwhelm the Leaders in the Party Primaries, It is Said, But Failing in This the Democrats and Disgruntled Republicans Will Combine Forces, the Same as Was Done Last December—Leaders are Looking for Strong Candidates.

There are little clouds gathering on the political horizon. Already the political workers of the city are getting in line for the election that is now six months away. It will not be a walkover for anybody. As yet, however, the political clouds have not formed themselves into anything very definite, so that there is a great mass of uncertainty hanging about the election and the men whose names are likely to come up before the people as candidates.

The knowing ones declare that the Republican party is going to have a hard row to hoe. By the Republican party they mean the regular organization that has had until last December things pretty well its own way. The last election showed what a vast body of dissatisfied ones there is. Many of them are Republicans who, on local issues, are willing to bolt the party ticket. In unison with the Democrats and the independent voters they are likely to form a formidable party in the coming election.

A leading citizen the other day said that he knew that the leaders in the movement which was known at last election as the Citizens' party were going quietly to work and are preparing to surprise the Republicans when the time comes. He said that an attempt would be made to capture the Republican primaries and nominate the slate chosen by the leaders of the Citizens' party on the Republican ticket. In the wards where that scheme failed, a separate Citizens' ticket would be nominated. There were enough voters, he said, to accomplish that end.

With suitable organization beforehand, the Citizens' movement can assume large proportions. It is well known that there are a number of so-called "kickers" at the present administration. Heretofore organized strength was lacking, but a well-organized campaign could play havoc in the ranks of the Republican party.

The Republican leaders are placed in a peculiar position. While they know where much of the discontent is, there is some of it hidden in the very core of the Republican machine which is not visible on the surface but nevertheless is a powerful influence in the result.

It is not going to be a brilliant campaign. Surface demonstrations are not likely to be many. The current beneath the surface will be strong, however, and there will be much hard work on both sides. With the prospect of a lively fight at the primaries an another at the polls, the campaign promises to be one of the most active for many years. Meanwhile both sides are looking about for the men that they want to run and a score of candidates are looking about for the necessary pull to land them in the coveted nominations.

Run Into by Wheelmen.

George Chester, who is employed about the Gentlemen's Driving Park, was run into by two unknown wheelmen near Jones' woods on Park avenue Monday night and badly hurt. It was 9:30 and the night was dark. The wheelmen had no lights, and when they struck Chester, one of them was thrown off. Chester's teeth was knocked out, his eye was cut, and he was bruised around the head.

Coachman Sues for Wages.

The appeal case of L. Brolaski against Mrs. Annie Gwynette, of Prospect avenue, will come up for trial before Judge Vail at Elizabeth June 15th. The plaintiff, who is represented by City Judge DeMeza, sues for wages which he claims for working around the defendant's place. The defendant's lawyer is R. M. Clark.

No Bones Broken.

Charles Nightingale, of Sandford avenue, who was injured day before yesterday at the corner of Watchung avenue and East Front street, while riding a wheel, is improving very nicely. No bones were broken, consequently his recovery will be speedy.

IN PATRIOTIC COLORS.

FLAG SOCIABLE GIVEN AT FIRST BAPTIST CHURCH.

Affair Under the Auspices of the Christian Endeavorers—A Clever Literary and Musical Programme was Rendered.

A "A Flag Sociable," an exceedingly patriotic affair, was held last Tuesday at the First Baptist church under the auspices of the Christian Endeavor Society of the church. The social committee of the society planned the affair and there was an unusually large attendance. W. O. Chapman was stationed at the door and as each person entered he handed them a small ticket on which was printed the following: "This ticket is not good to eat, but is good for something to eat."

The lecture room was elaborately decorated with large and small American flags, and these, together with a profusion of flowers, presented a pretty effect. The members of the social committee were attired in patriotic colors, while many others displayed the red, white and blue colors.

The first number on the programme was a scarf drill given by Edith De Long, Jeane Dunham, Ella Serrell, Mabel Pound, Kathryn Bocap and May Batchelor. Miss Ethel King presided at the piano. A feature of the evening were the recitations given by Miss Mary Lucky. A vocal solo was given by Miss Kathryn Overton, accompanied on the piano by Herbert J. Harold. During the evening Miss Ethel King rendered several piano solos.

After the programme refreshments were served by the committee. With each plate of cream a red, white and blue napkin, together with a small American flag, was presented.

The committee in charge of the social consisted of Miss Margaret Harold, chairman; Mrs. W. O. Chapman, Mrs. W. B. Vail, the Misses French, the Misses Woodland, Miss Ella Serrell and Miss Mattison, while George F. Brown, Samuel Case, W. O. Chapman and L. H. Bigler, Jr., assisted. The latter was general master of ceremonies and announced the various numbers on the programme.

GOOD THINGS TO EAT.

W. C. T. U. Conducted Ice Cream and Strawberry Festival.

A strawberry and ice cream festival was given Tuesday in the W. C. T. U. rooms on East Front street, which was well attended and quite successful. The hours were from 4 to 10.

Mrs. J. J. Coard was chairman of the committee who had the festival in charge and she was assisted by the following ladies who waited on the table, served the strawberries and cream and sold the cake: Mrs. Parse, Mrs. R. K. Case, Mrs. T. H. Tomlinson, Mrs. M. C. Dobbins, Mrs. Emma French, Mrs. J. H. French, Mrs. De-Forrest, Mrs. Howlett and Mrs. Stephen Cahoone.

TO CHANGE JOHN KEAN'S ROAD.

Electricity to Take the Place of Horses on the Elizabeth Line.

Elizabeth, June 8—John Kean, who virtually owns the only horse car line in this city, known as the Elizabeth Street Railway, stated recently to a reporter that the road would shortly be changed into an electric street railway, and that it would be in running order before the close of the year. He has been assisting to secure the franchise for a trolley line from Elizabeth to Plainfield, and to connect it with the Elizabeth road that he controls. It is announced that his chances now of obtaining this franchise are excellent, and that is the reason why the work of changing the Elizabeth road into an electric railway is about to be undertaken so soon.

Chase for Navy Reserves.

Hoboken, N. J., June 8—Lieutenant Commander Robert McLean, who was left in charge of the training ship Portsmouth, of the New Jersey Naval Reserve, received a telegram from Adjutant-General Stryker yesterday concerning a second call for volunteers. The despatch said that the Navy Department had called for more men to man the auxiliary cruisers constantly going into commission. Lieutenant McLean wired that all of the 60 men and the four officers remaining of the original batallion are eager to see service, and that he has in hand nearly 100 more applications for enlistment. He thought that fully 150 men could be recruited within a week.

MOLTEN WAX SET THE FACTORY ALL ABLAZE.

Climax Stopper Company's Work Gutted by Fire.

OCCUPANTS FLED FOR LIFE.

A KETTLE OF MOLTEN WAX OVERFLOWED ON THE STOVE.

The Alarm Was Sent In From Box 32 by Randolph Marsh, An Employe—The Flames Spread Too Rapidly to Permit the Workmen to Do Anything—Books Were Saved By Fred Barker—Loss Will Reach Nearly $5,000—John Day's House Suffered—Fire Department Responded Promptly.

In the short space of two minutes the factory of the Climax Stopper Company, corner of Washington and East Fourth streets, was transformed from an orderly establishment to a fiery furnace. The workmen in the building fled for their lives, while the valuable contents, machinery and stock, went up in flames or was damaged beyond repair. The rapidity with which the flames spread was remarkable.

The past few weeks have been active ones at the factory of the Climax Stopper Company. The force of twenty employes has been busy these warm days in turning out a large stock of stoppers for milk, beer and other variety of bottles. Then there was a large stock of bicycle sundries and novelties stored away in the store room on the second floor.

In fact, the factory has turned out so much that the officers of the company decided to shut down for a time until the present large stock could be marketed. A few days ago, with that end in view, the working force was reduced to eight, four men and four young women. W. J. Bailey was foreman and Miss Lizzie Houston forewoman.

Yesterday work proceeded as usual. The stock of milk bottle stoppers, with the pulp caps, was being completed. It is customary to give these pulp or paper caps a coat of partfine wax. Miss Houston was in charge of the wax. There was a little gas stove standing near the front of the room on the second floor. On this the wax is heated before being used to coat the caps.

Miss Houston placed a kettle of wax on the stove to be melted and then turned to her other work. The wax gradually reached a molten state. Then it began to boil. No one noticed that it was slowly creeping up the sides of the kettle. Finally it overflowed and the molten wax fell on the stove below.

Foreman Bailey was in the other room. He smelt smoke. He inquired its cause. Just then there came a scream from Miss Eva Sergeant who was operating one of the presses. Bailey rushed to the scene. The wax had caught fire and the stream of flaming wax was pouring into a large case of paraffine wax, standing beside the stove.

When Bailey first saw the flames they were hardly a foot in height. In the moment he occupied in running across the room the blaze rose to the ceiling and drove him back half blinded. He shouted to Randolph Marsh, one of his assistants, to send in an alarm. Marsh cleared the stairs in three jumps and sprang out of the building. He ran to the corner of Franklin place and Fifth street and sent in an alarm from Box 23, at 9:28, just two minutes after the fire started.

Meanwhile Foreman Bailey had ordered all of the occupants to leave the building. There was no panic, but neither was there delay. The flames spread with wonderful quickness and threatened to block the exit.

Five minutes after the fire started, the chemical engine pulled up in front of the blazing building. It was beyond the efforts of the chemical, however. Dull red flames were pouring out of the front second story windows and several of the side windows. Great volumes of black smoke rolled upwards. The place seemed doomed.

Among the first of the firemen to reach there was Fred Barker, lineman for the New York and New Jersey Telephone Company. He burst through the dense smoke that filled the first floor and made a dash for the books which were in the office. He was assisted by several of the employes. He was nearly suffocated by the fumes.

Four lines of hose were quickly laid and four streams turned on the fire. The telegraph pole in front of the building, which caught fire, was extinguished and the streams were directed in the windows. The flames subsided in a few moments so that

SHOES OF ALL NATIONS.

A Description of What They Were in the Days of Long Ago.

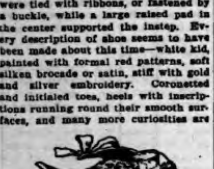
A unique exhibition in London, shows a collection of shoes from the earliest times down to the present. Not only the shoes but the different leathers, machinery and tools used in the manufacture of them are seen.

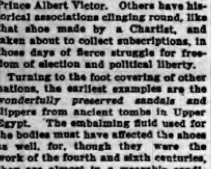
The earliest shoes were of the sandal type, fastened on to the foot by leather thongs, and in many cases the "uppers" are of beautifully pieced work, with loops for the straps to pass through. Many of the children's little shoes are lovely specimens of this open work. Then there are men's shoes made entirely of one piece of leather cut into loops over the foot, believed to be the English of the eleventh century.

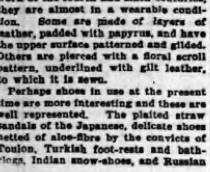
Up to Queen Anne's time, and later, run on the high-heeled, brocaded shoe. Neat little clogs, or patterns, with leather soles and brocaded sides to match the shoes they were intended to encircle, were much used by the fine ladies of eighteenth century, and these were tied with ribbons, or fastened by a buckle, while a large raised pad in the center supported the instep. Every description of shoe seems to have been made about this time—white kid, painted with formal red patterns, soft silken brocade or satin, stiff with gold and silver embroidery. Coronetted and initialed shoes, with inscriptions running round their smooth surfaces, and many more curiosities are here. There are some possessing pathetic interest because of their wearers, like the red and blue baby shoes, with a crown and A. V. embroidered on the tiny toes, which were worn by Prince Albert Victor. Others have historical associations clinging round, like that shoe made by a Chartist, and taken about to collect subscriptions, in those days of fierce struggle for freedom of election and political liberty.

Turning to the foot covering of other nations, the earliest examples are the wonderfully preserved sandals and slippers from ancient tombs in Upper Egypt. The embalming fluid used for the bodies must have affected the shoes as well, for, though they are the work of the fourth and sixth centuries, they are almost in a wearable condition. Some are made of layers of leather, padded with papyrus, and have the upper surface patterned and gilded. Others are pieced with a floral scroll pattern, underlined with gilt leather, to which it is sewn.

Perhaps shoes in use at the present time are more interesting and these are well represented. The plaited straw sandals of the Japanese, delicate shoes netted of aloe-fibre by the convicts of Toulon, Turkish foot-rests and bath-clogs, Indian snow-shoes, and Russian boots fill the different cases. Tiny shoes, three and four inches long, worn by the Chinese ladies, contrast with the comfortable embroidered boots worn by the Tarkund women. Then the quaint, long-toed shoes used by the modern inhabitants of India, recall the pictures of magicians and wizards while the Indian woman's gold and silver embroidered slippers keep up the fame of the celebrated Benares work. Perhaps the most curious foot covering worn by any of the Eastern races are the yellow leather socks, made in five pieces, and mounted on high wood and mother of pearl stands, worn by the Damascus brides. But there are various foot coverings in use in England at the present time—Lancashire clogs and Irish cowhide shoes, roughly cured by the brine of the sea, identical with those worn by the ancient Britons. The Donegal peasants call them "pampooties," but the Shetland peasantry term them "rivlins," and seldom wear anything else in their rough tramps over wild paths to cut and bring home the peat they depend on for their winter fuel.







CURIOUS WEDDING RING CUSTOM.

In Malabar One Is Put On the Bridegroom's Big Toe.

Many curious customs are practised in connection with the use of the almost universal wedding ring. One of the strangest is in Malabar, where an old native custom makes each bride and bridegroom on a dais, and a relative washes the feet of the bridegroom with milk, and puts a silver ring on the great toe of the right foot. He then hands a gold ring to his kinsman, and a necklace and chaplet of flowers are put on the bride's neck and head.

Modern Greek peasants exchange a gold and silver wedding ring, and they drink wine from the same cup. But the regular ritual of the Greek Church ordains that each contracting party must be betrothed in marriage, in which are used a gold and silver wedding ring, blessed by the priest, the gold ring being given to the man, the silver ring to the woman. The form of the espousal is then repeated, and the rings are placed on the right hands, and then exchanged that no inferiority may be betokened by the woman wearing the silver ring, and also to indicate the common ownership of property.

An Armenian mother usually selects her daughter's husband. After all business preliminaries are settled between the families the bridegroom's mother, accompanied by a priest and two matrons, visits the bride and gives her a ring in token of espousal, and with this ring the couple are ultimately married. Among the fishing communities very ancient and elaborate rings are used, and they descend as heirlooms from generation to generation. *In Japan in marriages arranged be-*tween young people the girl always receives a ring in evidence that the union is binding.—Jackson Clarion Ledger.

HIS FIRST DEER.

The Hunter Was Seized with Panic and Failed to Shoot.

Buck fever is a hunter's disease, the symptoms of which are pretty well known, but they have seldom been more feelingly described than by a Marquette citizen, whose first experience in deer-shooting is related in the Mining Journal.

After spending a few hours tramping through the woods, feeling tired, he sat down on a log to rest. Like most hunters, he had taken his pipe and tobacco along. Filling the pipe, he smoked for a time without interruption, when, happening to turn his head a little to one side, he saw a large buck coming straight toward him. As luck would have it, he had sat down to smoke near a deer trail.

The deer came nearer and nearer, until he was nearly opposite the place where th hunter sat concealed. While the hunter was watching the approach of this noble specimen of the cervine, and that the deer was his meat." He began to tremble and shake in every limb and joint, and it was difficult for him to restrain a yell of fright.

He watched and trembled until the deer passed his hiding place, and went into the thicket beyond. Then feeling for his pipe, he discovered that it lay on the ground near his feet. By the time he had picked it up the deer was out of range, and then he discovered that in his excitement he had bitten the mouthpiece of his pipe in two.

He was greatly relieved to see the deer move on, as it seemed to him that he was the game and the deer was the hunter.

Punishment in the British Navy.

Two contrasted cases of punishment in the British navy have lately caused a good deal of comment in the right little, tight little island.

In the first case a boy on the Impregnable struck his commanding officer when the latter was assigning him a punishment for some offense. The penalty for this second offense was threefold: First, twenty-four cuts with the birch before the ship's company, then three months' imprisonment with hard labor, followed by dismissal from the service. The assault could hardly have been more than technical.

In the other case a lieutenant came back to his ship, said in an "explicable outburst of violence"—he was presumably drunk—struck a murderous assault on a subordinate officer, kicking him about the head and face and beating him with a stick. The assaulting officer pleaded guilty before court-martial, was reprimanded and dismissed from the ship, but not from the service. Four months later, after what was practically a vacation of that duration, he was gazetted for a better place than he had before, over the heads of deserving officers.

In the British navy, as elsewhere, the notion seems to prevail that a coarse and abusive brute must necessarily be a "good disciplinarian" and a "fine executive."

His Campaign Figures.

"Here's twenty dollars," said the candidate for the small office, to his campaign manager, "that ought to be enough to insure my election. What do you think?"

"Well, Jim," replied the manager, "you wants the truth erbout it, don't you?"

"Certainly—speak out!"

"Well, takin' yer reputation inter consideration, an sizin' you up at yer full weight, I'm positive it'll take at least twenty-two dollars an' a half ter git you in!"—Atlanta Constitution.

SOME POINTS ABOUT GLOVES.

They Were at One Time More for Decoration Than Utility.

Before the tenth century, English ladies wore long sleeves with pointed flaps that rested on the back of their hands, or when they went forth in winter, drew the loose drapery of their outer garment over their hands.

The first gloves had only a thumb and no fingers, like the mittens of the present day. They were so proud of them that they emphasized them by bright colors, such as violets, reds, and blues. They were wondrously embroidered and starred with jewels. No gloves were found with those of the "dead." They were mostly of white silk or linen, cunningly embroidered, and sometimes fringed with pearls.

One ecclesiastical had a red silk scarf, with the sacred monogram worked on the back, surrounded with a golden glory; and Isidore of Seville had a golden maniple in their different vestments. In fact, gloves had departed from their primary idea of utility and became a decoration. They were too magnificent for common wear, and in contemporary pictures the nobility seemed to have carried them rather in their hands or in their girdles, than on their fingers.

The knight's mailed gloves heltered his hand. It became a sign of power, and when a gracious lord meant to signify his intention to protect a town, he sent his gauntlet as a sign of his willingness. The glove too, was a token of defiance, when one knight declared war against another, and, at the same time, as if to mark the difference between the strong right hand of man and the daintier hand of woman, he bound his mistress's delicate glove to his helmet by way of showing his fealty.

By the sixteen century gloves were common wear, together with farthingales, corsets and low gowns.—Golden Days.

GAS MADE FROM SAWDUST.

About Two Tons Used to Make Five Hundred and Forty Cubic Metres.

The town of Desoronto, in Canada, where there are several large lumber mills, is partially lighted by gas made from sawdust. The sawdust is charged in retorts which are heated by a wood fire, the gas from the retorts passing into a series of coils and thence into the purifiers, which are similar to those used for coal gas. Lime is the principal purifying agent employed. When it passes out of the retorts the gas possesses an odor much less disagreeable than that of ordinary lighting gas, and resembles somewhat that of smoke from a fire of green wood or leaves. The works in use are small, turning out daily five hundred and forty cubic metres of gas, for the production of which about two tons of sawdust are required. A man and boy furnish all the labor needed at the works. The gas in an ordinary burner gives an illumination of about eighteen candle power. The best quality comes from resinous woods. A quantity of one hundred kegs of sawdust leaves a residue of twenty kegs of charcoal.

A Funny Incident Related in the "Wild Sports of the West of Ireland."

A singular incident connected with fishing is related by the author of "Wild Sports of the West of Ireland." A party of fishermen were out in a boat after gudgeon near Sumbury. One of the men, who had loaned his horse some miles from home, had been taken on board, but was not fishing. As a penalty for wearing spurs, he sat in the bow with his feet hanging over the side of the skiff.

Soon after he got into the boat one of the anglers caught a small gudgeon, which he playfully hung on the horseman's projecting spur. The incident was forgotten, and the gudgeon hung there, its tail just touching the water.

Suddenly the man gave a cry of astonishment, and the others, looking up, saw a large jackfish floundering about the dangling foot and splashing the water in vigorous fashion. The boat began rocking, and the man in the bow lost his balance and tumbled into the lake, where he disappeared from sight.

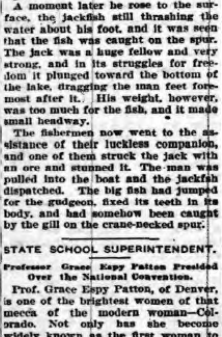
A moment later he rose to the surface, the jackfish still thrashing the water about his foot, and it was seen that the fish was caught on the spur. The jack was a huge fellow and very strong, and in its struggles for freedom it plunged toward the bottom of the lake, dragging the man feet foremost after it. His weight, however, was too much for the fish, and it made small headway.

The fishermen now went to the assistance of their luckless companion, and one of them struck the jack with an oar and stunned it. The man was pulled into the boat and the jackfish dispatched. The big fish had jumped for the gudgeon, fixed its teeth in its body, and had somehow been caught by the gill on the crane-necked spur.

STATE SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENT.

Professor Grace Espy Patton Presided Over the National Convention.

Prof. Grace Espy Patton, of Denver, is one of the brightest women of that mecca of the modern woman—Colorado. Not only has she become widely known as the first woman to hold the high position of State Superintendent of Public Instruction, but in recognition of her splendid services she has won a new honor of a national character. Prof. Patton went to Chattanooga, Tenn., to attend the national convention of the State Superintendents of Public Instruction, over which masculine assemblage she was invited to be presiding officer.



GRACE ESPY PATTON.

Prof. Patton, who is barely old enough to hold her present position, has gathered about her in Denver a clever coterie of feminine assistants. Out of the fifty-nine counties in the State twenty-seven have women superintendents of schools, and every school board has from one to two women members. In fact, the entire department is in the hands of the fair sex, to whom United States Commissioner Harris was able to say recently: "The Colorado schools are the model schools of the country."

A Premium on Wide Tires.

The good roads movement seems to be making better progress in New Jersey than anywhere else. Within the past few years an astonishing number of highways have been converted from mere beds of sand into hard, smooth roads. The movement has become so popular that the farmers, always the last, though they should be the first persons to be come interested in the subject, are beginning to clamor for macadamized, or, as they call it, "stone" roads throughout the State, and Assemblyman Cirgis has just introduced in the Legislature what seems to be a practicable scheme for inducing a general use of broad tires on wagons. This is a device beneficial at once to the road and to the farmer, but one which is winning its way very slowly. Mr. Crispin proposes to stimulate its progress by giving a rebate of $1.50 in taxes for each wheel in habitual use whose tire is four inches or more in breadth. The $6 a year per wagon, an amount great enough to insure prompt consideration, if not acceptance of the offer by every owner of such a vehicle. It is a remarkable admission of the value of broad tires on a highway, statistics show that the saving of wear and tear on the roads will more than pay for the rebate. It is an object lesson that might be applied with profit in other States.

Napoleon Thought He Could Win Glory in Mexico.

When the Mexican empire was planned our civil war had been raging for nearly two years. From the standpoint of the French rulers, the moment seemed auspicious for France to interfere in American affairs. The establishment of a great Latin empire, founded under French protection and developed in the interest of France, which must necessarily derive the principal benefit of the stupendous wealth which Mexico held ready to pour into the lap of French capitalists —of an empire which in the West might put a limit to the supremacy of the United States, such as would counterbalance the British supremacy in the East, thus opposing a formidable check to the encroachments of the Anglo-Saxon race in the interest of the Latin nations—such was Napoleon's plan, and I have been told by one who was close to the Imperial family at that time, that the Emperor himself fondly regarded it as "the conception of his reign."

Napoleon III labored under the disadvantage of reigning beneath the shadow of a great personality, which, consciously or unconsciously, he ever strove to emulate. But however clever he may be, the man who, anxious to appear or even to be great, forces fate and creates impossible situations that he may act a leading part before the world, is only a schemer. This is the key to the character of Napoleon III, and to his failures. He looked far away and dreamed of universal achievements, when at home, at his very door, were the threatening issues he should have mastered. The story is told of him that one evening, at the Tuileries, when the imperial party were playing games, chance brought to the Emperor the question, "What is your favorite occupation?" to which he answered, "To seek the solution of unsolvable problems." It is also related of his younger days a favorite axiom of his was: Follow the ideas of your time, they carry you along; struggle against them, they overcome you; precede them, they support you." True enough; but only on condition that you will not mistake the shrill chorus of a few interested courtiers and speculators for the voice of your time, nor imagine that you precede your generation because you stand alone. He dreamed of far-away glory, and his flatterers told him his dreams were prophetic.—Cornelius Stevenson in Century.

WAX FIGURES FOR SHOW WINDOWS.

A Knowledge of Anatomy, Drawing and Modeling Required to Make Them.

"How long does it take to make one of these?" said the manufacturer in response to an inquiry. "Well, it depends entirely upon circumstances. If it is not a mechanical operation, the finishing off of a wax model as true to life as this," and he pointed to the bust of a laughing child whose rosy neck and bright eyes were framed in clustering curls. "To make these one must have studied anatomy, as well as drawing and modeling. We begin in the same way as a sculptor would to make a statue. After the wax has cooled, the eyes are put in, the face is made up and the beautiful golden hair of the wig is fastened on, and the wooden body is shaped. We make all our hands and feet from life, and they cost about $10. If we have an order for an entire figure, we always model it from life. The life-size wax figures of infants are among our finest things we manufacture, and they add much to the attractiveness of a show window, as was illustrated last winter, when a Washington street retail dealer displayed one during the holiday season. The head and shoulders, such as are seen in the milliner's window, cost from $40 to $45. The wig makes considerable difference in the price, as we use the best hair, and it is expensive, especially the natural blond, which is scarce. The children's heads cost $20 or thereabout.

"All the finishing off imaginable," he continued, "would not make a figure stand the test of a season behind the glare of a glass unless the wax has a natural pink tinge. The reason some of the models look so deathly is because the wax is bad and not properly colored. We use beeswax, slightly colored, and flesh tints are put on in addition."—Boston Transcript.

WOMEN IN BUSINESS.

No Alarm Need be Felt as to Their Encroachment on Men's Work.

Hon. Carroll D. Wright, in his article in the Chautauquan, "Are Women Hurting the Chances of Men in Business?" makes the following assertions:

"The fact is absolutely demonstrated that the proportion of females in all occupations followed is gradually increasing, and that women are to some extent entering places at the expense of the males. A closer study of all the facts, however, will show that while the statement just made is true, women are more generally taking the places of children. Through the influence of a higher intelligence and the action of law, the number of children employed in manufactures is constantly decreasing. In 1870 the percentage of children of the whole number of persons employed in manufacturing was 8.58, while in 1890 the percentage was only 2.65. In very many classes, as children have been *excluded through law and other in-*fluences, adult women have to some extent taken their places. There need not be any alarm, therefore, as to the encroachments of women upon the occupations held by men."

Bravery of the Duke Charles of Bavaria in the Face of Great Danger.

The bravery of battle is surpassed in the quality and fibre of its intrepidity by the courage which faces a conflagration or a wreck, because the battle fervor is helped out by patriotism, esprit du corps, and other emotions which have a distinct place in the soldier's heart. The great fire at Paris, and particularly the heroic death there of the Duchess d'Alencon, recalls a brave exploit of this lady's uncle, Duke Charles of Bavaria, many years ago.

It was in 1823, and some sort of exceptional representation at the Residenz Theater at Munich had attracted a large and brilliant audience. Duke Charles was seated in the royal box. Suddenly an attendant rushed in and whispered excitedly:

"Your Highness, the theatre is on fire! Make your escape before the panic breaks out."

This alarming announcement did not cause a change of expression on the prince's face. First satisfying himself by a word of inquiry that the stage was ready for duty, the prince rose, stepped calmly to the front of the box and said to the audience:

"I am informed that a fire has broken out on the stage. There is time enough for you all to get out before the danger becomes imminent; the only danger is that you may give to fear a panic. I urge you, therefore, to quit the hall in the most perfect order, and I give you my word that if you do so you will all escape. To prove that I mean what I say, I shall now sit down and shall not leave my seat until the last one of the audience is out of the house."

Duke Charles then sat down as unmoved as if the performance was to proceed. The sight of his calmness reassured the audience, and the people moved deliberately out in an orderly manner; the flames burst through the curtain to the proscenium; the people looked at Duke Charles, who still sat imperturbably in his place; no one could make a cowardly rush in the face of such an example.

In ten minutes the house was entirely emptied, no one being hurt; Duke Charles was the last to go out. In another instant, the interior was all on fire and the house was completely destroyed.—Youth's Companion

NEVER SEES MONEY.

Yet a Business is Carried on Running Up to Many Thousands of Dollars.

At Indian Point, Alaska, the principal trader, Kohaeri, does a business of $100,000 a year and never sees a coin. Dr. Sheldon Jackson, agent of the Bureau of Education for Alaska, found him and says of him: "He has a little frame white house filled from floor to ceiling with tobacco, flour and looking glasses, which he buys in bulk from the whalers and from which he supplies the country for hundreds of miles around. This man has been known to have as much as $75,000 worth of whalebone in his store at one time. He does a business of probably $100,000 a year, and yet not a single coin of gold or silver nor a single bank note or bank check is used nor are any books kept. All transactions are by barter, furs and whalebone being exchanged for tobacco, flour and whiskey. This wholesale merchant of the North Siberian coast can neither read nor write, nor can any one associated with him. Although so wealthy, he lives in an ordinary tent and sleeps on the ground on a pile of reindeer skins."

Freemasons in Masons.

In Great Britain the craft is presided over by the Prince of Wales; in Sweden and Norway the Grand Mastership is held by King Oscar, who occupied that office before his accession to the throne. As in the case of the sons and grandsons of the Queen of England, so are also the sons of King Oscar members of the craft.

In Denmark it is the Crown Prince who is the head of the Grand Orient while the late Emperor Frederick held the Grand Mastership of German Freemasons from 1855 until the time of his death. His son, although a Mason has declined to accept the Grand Mastership in succession to his father on to attend any lodge meeting since he became Emperor. In Austria, again, Freemasonry is eschewed by the aristocracy and the reigning family, as it is also in Russia and Belgium, while in Holland the Dutch nobility are nearly all members of the craft.—Toronto Free Mason.

THE YOUNG CHAPLAIN.

The Work He Accomplished at West Point Among Cadets and Officers.

One night in 1825, a clergyman was taking tea with John C. Calhoun, then Secretary of War. Suddenly Mr. Calhoun said to his guest:

"Will you accept the place of chaplain and professor of ethics at West Point? If you will, I will appoint you at once."

The clergyman was Charles P. McIlvaine, then but 28 years of age, and subsequently became the "Bishop of Ohio." He accepted the appointment because West Point then had an unsavory reputation. There was not a Christian among officers and cadets. Many of them were skeptics, and the others were coolly indifferent to religion. He was received as gentlemen receive a gentleman, but no one showed the least sympathy with him as a clergyman. For months his preaching seemed as words spoken in the air. His first encouragement was an offer of a representative.

He was walking home from church one Sunday a few feet in advance of several officers. "The chaplain's preaching is getting hotter and hotter," he heard one of them say.

In a few days he received another bit of encouragement. He was dining with a company at the house of an officer. A Lieutenant, a scoffer, hurled a bitter sneer at clergymen. The officers threatened to send the Lieutenant to "Coventry" if he did not apologize, he called and asked the chaplain's pardon.

Another officer took offense at one of the chaplain's sermons and wrote him a bold avowal of skeptical opinions.

The chaplain, seeing in these incidents that the chronic indifference was giving way to hostility, persevered. But opposition was all the encouragement he received during the year. Not a cadet had visited him or even sought his acquaintance.

But one Saturday, the only day the cadets were allowed to visit an officer without special permission, one of the most popular of the cadets knocked at the chaplain's door. He wished to begin the Christian life then, and asked for counsel. In a day or two another cadet called on a similar errand; then another and another. Then several officers came. A meeting for prayer was appointed twice a week. It was the first public prayer meeting held at West Point. Officers and cadets crowded in, though all who came professed thereby to begin a religious life. A first it required no small courage to enter that room as it did to lead a forlorn hope.

One of the cadets was Leonidas Polk, afterwards Bishop of Louisiana. Intelligent, high-toned and commanding in person, he was a conspicuous cadet. Seeing that it was his duty to make a public confession of his faith in Christ, he asked for baptism.

After baptizing him the chaplain made a brief address, closing with a message to the faithful. "Amen," responded Polk, in a voice that rang through the church. The "amen" was from the heart. Immediately the baptized cadet became a missionary to his comrades.

A solemnity pervaded the academy during the remaining two years that this clergyman served as chaplain. Half the corps became Christian men. Several of them, leaving the army, were promoted to the ministry. Many of those who entered the army rose to eminence. They adorned their profession and the Christian religion.

This era in West Point was created through divine aid by a young man who simply did his duty patiently and left the result with God.—Christian Worker.

JUBILEE STAMP.

Issued by One Department of the English Gov. and Repudiated by Another.

There is a curious complication in regard to the stamps that were issued to commemorate the diamond jubilee. They were proposed by the Duke of York, were engraved and issued by the treasury department but the post-office department declined to recognize them for postal purposes because the proceeds were to be devoted to the hospital fund of the Prince of Wales. The edition was comparatively small and the plates were destroyed by the Duke of York in the Bank of England the other day. While they lose much of their value to collectors because they were repudiated by the postmaster general and cannot be used for postage, it is predicted that they will be all the more precious in future years for the same reason. They are the only stamps ever issued by one department of the British government and repudiated by another.—Chicago Record.

"Yes?"

"So I happened to be passing his office, yesterday, and I thought I would stop and invite him out to take tea with us some evening next week."

"And did you find that he had merely been flirting with you?"

"Oh, it was awful! I never was so shocked in my life! Why, the horrible creature came out from behind his desk in his shirt sleeves! I just fled without saying a word!"

TOWERS OF SILENCE.

How the Parsees of India Dispose of the Bodies of Their Dead.

The most unique and impressive feature of Zoroastrian customs is their method of disposing of the dead. According to their religion, earth, fire and water are sacred elements, useful to mankind and hence not to be polluted in any way. They are strictly enjoined that dead bodies shall not be thrown into the sea, burned in fire nor be buried in the earth. Therefore the only practicable course open to them is to expose the naked bodies of their dead in the open air, so that they may decay and disintegrate under the ordinary action of the elements or be devoured by birds or beasts. This exposure, however, is made with the confident expectation that the corpse will be speedily eaten by vultures, which are numerous and voracious in oriental countries, and that especially so in the vicinity of a tower of silence.

These towers, or Dokhmas, are not as numerous as is generally supposed. Outside of Persia and Russia the only ones in use at present are those in Bombay and one or two in China. Those in Persia are located on the summit of Malabar hills, the highest elevation on the eastern boundary of the city, from which a magnificent view of the surrounding country can be had. The Parsees own about fifteen acres of the hill, and have transformed the place into a veritable paradise. There is nothing suggestive of death about the place. It is a luxurious garden of flowers, ornamental shrubbery, palms, cypresses, bamboo and other tropical trees, laid out with beautiful graveled walks. There are comfortable benches in shady nooks, secluded trysting places and fragrant corpses, where birds of brilliant plumage sing and mate.

There are six of these towers located, each of less than 100 yards of each other, and are visited by an officer without special permission, one of the most popular of the cadets knocked at the chaplain's door. He wished to begin the Christian life then, and asked for counsel. In a day or two another cadet called on a similar errand; then another and another. Then several officers came. HIS LAUGH HIS FORTUNE

It Won Him Friends and Disconcerted His Enemies.

"Ever hear of a man who made a fortune out of his laugh?" said a guest of the St. Charles to a New Orleans Times-Democrat reporter. "I once knew a man whose laugh was positively his fortune. His name was John D. Adams, and he was a local steamboatman of Arkansas, and in addition to his steamboating he was a planter of extensive interests, and was connected with other business enterprises. He was the first man to run a steamboat in the Arkansas River, and his name in that State to-day is synonym for geniality, courage and business success. He was very successful, and his friends used to attribute his success to his wondrous laugh. It was not boisterous, yet loud and was so natural and jolly that one could imagine old Kris Kringle was personified in him. Other river men would say that his laugh got him all the government mail contracts. He would go to Washington, get acquainted with the man who had charge of the contracts, and he, like all of Adam's new acquaintances, would soon come under the infection of his magnetic laugh, and form a genuine admiration for the grizzled old steamboatman.

Amazing tales were told of his courage and his steamboat experiences. On one occasion, when an accident happened to his boat and the passengers became panic-stricken, he calmed them as if by magic by calling their children, and laughing at their fear—his famous laugh compelling confidence and mirth by its very melody and jollity. He even used his laugh when very much angered, but it was then a terrible character, and it always lurked behind it. In a steamboat quarrel with three desperadoes, once, he denounced them with a laughing accompaniment, a cynical, chilling, dangerous kind of a laugh, his eyes glittering like a snake's, and his forehead overhanging foliage of palms and cypresses. Five are used for the exposure of the bodies of Parsees in good standing in their community, while the sixth receives the bodies of criminals and outcasts. The first was built in 1668 and the second in 1756.

Each tower is about 20 feet high, 150 feet in circumference and constructed of blocks of trap rock and sandstone, cemented closely and covered smoothly on the outside by a heavy coating of cement of lime and stucco. A stone parapet about three feet high rises above the three concentric circles of corpse receptacles which slope sharply toward the central well and seem to be hewn out of solid rock.

When a death occurs the body is wrapped in a white sheet and placed on an iron bier. Within twelve hours thereafter it is taken in charge by official corpse bearers, called khandias, and a procession is formed, headed by one or more mobeds, or Parsee priests, followed by the mourning relatives and friends of the deceased, which slowly proceeded to strew it along the right of way. A day or two elapsed before the loss of the ore was discovered, and the excitement that resulted may be readily imagined. When it was found that the ore was lying on high ground and that water had fortunately not reached it and washed it away, the rejoicing of the railroad and smelter men was pleasing to behold. Practically all of the valuable stuff was gathered up and saved.

MONUMENT OF BRICKS.

Unique Building Owned by the United States Government.

"Very few know it, but it is a fact," explained a prominent builder to a Washington Star reporter, "that the Pension Office building is the largest brick building in the world. It has been subjected to much criticism, but it can stand it, for as time passes along there are many things seen about it that escaped notice when it was newer. In all, there are over 10,000,000 bricks in the building.

Gen. Meigs took liberties with bricks that no other architect had ever attempted. He not only used bricks exclusively for the building, but he used them in constructing the stairs and ornamental work. In the center of stair building bricks have often been used for the riser, but the step has always been of iron, wood, slate or stone. In the Pension Office both riser and step are of brick. As a brick building, therefore, pure and simple, it is unique in construction, aside of the fact that it is the largest exclusively brick building in the world."

Puzzles for Nature's Ists.

One of the most extraordinary puzzles that confront naturalists is the remarkable effect climate, soil food, or surroundings have upon animals. Bull-finches fed on bempseed turn quite black; Belgian horses kept in cool cellars for several years lose their natural coat, and become covered with soft, thick fur like a mole. The Thibet mastiff, who in his native highlands is protected from the cold by heavy wool, loses it on being brought down to the plains.

STRANGE SCAVENGERS.

How the Markets of Charleston, S. C. Are Kept Clean.

Charleston, S. C., has the most primitive and peculiar scavengers in the world. Hundreds—it seems thousands—of carrion crows or buzzards, in the very early morning, swoop down upon the historical old city from the tall cabbage palmetto forests which skirt the western suburbs.

In the waking hours any passengers entering Charleston on the Columbia express can see huge black lumps fall from the trees about. They never hit the ground. Out in the open these black lumps gather life, struggling back and flop their way over toward the custom house. They are buzzards. While the twilight is yet gray these vulgar birds go to the city market and infest it for an hour or two.

A stranger who did not appreciate the health value of these buzzards is liable to kill them, for which he is liable to be fined $10, for the city does not allow its curious scavenger birds to be destroyed with impunity.

The Charleston market is a noted place in the South. It runs from Market street to the water's edge, and is the favorite resort of the motley crowd of pedestrians who come and go from the harbor boats. It is a novel sight to see the hurrying feet of workmen treading their way carefully among these wild birds gathered there by the hundreds like domestic chickens, they stand about, and, like domestic dogs, they watch for every piece of waste as it is dropped from a meat block. One would hardly think, as he pushes the big birds out of the way, that these same feathered things roost in the forest, and make their home there. In the markets they never attempt to steal meat from the counter.

Going through the three or four blocks of the big market one morning the writer counted over 300 of these buzzards walking about as nonchalantly as though about their own poultry yard. They will not get out of your way. They fight every dog or cat that attempts to run in opposition, and will scramble with a man or child who competes with them for a fallen scrap of meat. But they keep the Charleston markets clean, perfectly clean. As a result of their thorough scavenger work this is the cleanest and healthiest meat market in the world.

In consideration of their assistance in keeping the city clean the municipal council has made it an offense to injure or kill one of them. An offender not only had to pay $10 fine, but usually gets a free lecture on the laws of health and the value of the buzzards as assistant members of the local board of health. By an hour after sunrise the birds have all left the city. It is for this reason that the visitor to the city, who usually gets up after that hour, and strolls out later, never sees this extraordinary sight of wild birds acting as market scavengers.—Washington Star.

AN OCEAN TROLLEY LINE.

For Carrying Lumber Aboard Large Vessels.

An ocean trolley line, which reaches nearly a quarter of a mile over the sea, conveying either passengers or merchandise, is one of the curious sights to be seen at Bear Harbor, on the Pacific coast not far from San Francisco. While the ostensible object of this strange trolley is the carrying of lumber from the rocky highland aboard the big schooners which form the ocean terminus of the line, dozens of lumbermen ride to and fro attached to the suspended cable on a wheel.

Of course, there is no electricity used in connection with this novel trolley. The power of gravity does most of the hard work. The lumber schooners come from the Mendocino County ports. Arriving at the bay they were towed by the slow process of lighters plying to and from the wharves. By the new trolley system lumber in any quantity can be carried from any island point over a long and high rail road trolley to a sort of cage, where the wooden cargoes are stacked, and thence to the deck of each ship. The trolley line is thrown from the lumber cage to the vessels by means of a rope shot from a mortar.—New York Evening Journal.

Educated Tickers Needed.

A leading Austrian paper calls attention to the fact that Bulgaria would offer a much larger market for agricultural machinery if there were good reliable repair shops for such machinery in the country. If there is but the smallest repair work on such a machine to be done nobody can be found to do it, and in many cases German mechanics have been called for. The Economical Society of the Bulgarian capital has submitted a memorial to the government asking for the state appointment of some 75 to 100 capable mechanics able to do this kind of work. The minister supports this scheme, and decided that these mechanics should have to instruct in the first place the rural population in the application of improved agricultural machinery and implements.

This impetus will doubtless result in a large increase of the imports of all kinds of agricultural machinery.—Philadelphia Record.

PHOTOGRAPHS IN COLORS.

Simple Method of Securing Very Pleasing Results.

A recent American invention promises to make the coloring of photographs a very simple matter, even for the amateur, and no great artistic talent is necessary. By the process, known as the "Kalos" art, ordinary prints may be made more durable, more attractive at small cost and with no great expenditure of time. All that is necessary is a box of "Kalos colors," a dish of clean water and a camel's-hair brush and sponge. These colors are transparent, and the shades and lights of the photograph show naturally. Any desired tints may be secured by mixing or diluting with water. To color any print apply the shades with the brush and wash the surface of the picture with a wet sponge, so that all superfluous color may be removed. This prevents running and insures a more even distribution of the colors. Rinse the brush or the sponge in clean water, after using each color, sponge the whole picture after the coloring is finished. It is better to make the colors a trifle stronger than is needed in order to allow for slight fading in the mounting process. The picture should then be allowed to dry thoroughly, so that the colors may become firmly fixed before mounting. These colored prints may be mounted on cards or transparent glass, in imitation of porcelain paintings. The miniature may be set in pearl or gold for lockets, brooches, sleeve buttons, watch charms &c. This process is warranted to work on photographs of a gelatinous nature, and gives excellent results on platinum prints. Collodion prints may be restored by first giving them a gelatinous surface. This may be done by adding one-quarter ounce of water to one ounce of sheet gelatine, and the mixture heated until the gelatine is thoroughly dissolved; then, with a wide, flat brush, apply the dissolved gelatine to the film side of the print, giving it a smooth, even surface. Heat it gently over a lighted lamp until dry.—Philadelphia Record.

CAR STEALING AS A FINE ART.

Omaha Claims to Have the Most Expert Thieves.

When the traffic of a railroad is limited only by the number of cars it can get possession of the means of securing those cars are overlooked and only the end is considered. Thus it comes that in railroad circles it is rather an honored man that makes a car of some thief. Stealing a freight car is no more regarded as a crime in railroad circles than is stealing a base in baseball games.

The most successful superintendent of a car service is he who can, when his road is short of cars, send out and reach out and steal from other roads enough cars to meet the demand. To be sure, the theft is not a permanent one, as the cars are bound to be returned to the company that owns them some day. But when several roads are ignored in the same strain of empty cars the one that succeeds in capturing it makes a borrowing that is pretty close approach to a theft. This procedure, however, is regarded as legitimate railroading under the conditions now existing in business. The business of a railroad depends practically altogether on its ability to rush empty cars to the stations where there are thousands of bushels of grain awaiting shipment.

In this respect it is generally conceded that Omaha has the most expert superintendent of car service in the business. His is a western railroad, and a pretty big one. Just as soon as a string of empty cars come across the big bridge between here and Council Bluffs they are seized by this smooth borrower of cars, rushed out of town, filled with grain and returned here to be delivered to the railroad east of the river to whom the cars belong. That railroad cannot object very strenuously since it thereby receives the haul on the grain from here to Chicago, but it may be thoroughly embarrassed often when it thinks it has twenty or thirty empty cars in the Omaha yard and plans to send them west on some other line, only to later discover that they have been grabbed and hustled out on the western line that boasts of having the smoothest car superintendent in the United States.—Omaha Bee.

Servants of Olden Times.

Servants were servants away back in 1546, just as now, and, in fact, the wise man who housed them, and both were much as they are in this end of the century year. Servants were fined in those days for each trivial offence. A penny was thought enough to fine a servant who left open a door that should be shut, and the same penalty fine did service for missing family prayers, or leaving the beds of the house unmade later than 8 o'clock in the morning. The cook might have a bean, but she had to pay a fine every time she was found in possession. The rules were enforced now, madam would find herself without "lady help" in short order.

Five is the great sacred Chinese number. There are five virtues, five colors (yellow, white, green, red and black), five household gods, five planets (Saturn, Venus, Jupiter, Mars, Mercury), five ranks of nobility, five tastes, five cardinal points (the middle, east, west, south and north respectively) and five tones.

In one consignment, recently, a feather dealer in London received 6,000 birds of paradise, 400,000 skins of various kinds from the East Indies and 400,000 humming birds. In three months another dealer imported 356,398 birds from the East Indies.

TARGET PRACTICE AT SEA.

The Navy Likely to Use $700,000 Worth of Powder and Shells Next Year.

Target practice at sea by ships of the new navy costs the Government annually half a million of dollars, and with the completion of ships now building the cost will approach $800,000. This includes only the cost of powder and shells. The cost of shells used. Were full powder charges and the regular armor-piercing projectiles employed the cost would be at least $3,000,000. None but the best kind of powder can be used in the big guns, but the shells need not be of the finest workmanship.

From not more than $100,000 a year for target practice to nearly one million is a big jump in the cost of maintaining the navy, and yet officers claim that there is not half enough practice as it is. Economy has prevented the frequent use of the batteries, and the marksmanship records show that gunners are not so proficient as they should be. The fact that the navy has has been well supplied with either powder or shell for years is the cause of the poor scores made by some ships' crews in target practice. The President recommends in his annual message the appropriation of $1,000,000 to provide a reserve supply of powder.

Recent regulations provide that every vessel in the navy at sea shall have a certain amount of target practice annually. The limited supply of powder and shells prevents full service charges from being fired often and in all target practice the charges are greatly reduced and the shells used are of the cast steel variety. All practice is to be conducted on or off soundings and vessels are to steam only 8 to 3,000 yards, the ship circling the target at a speed of not less than eight knots, such practice being intended to simulate, as nearly as possible, the conditions of battle under a spirited and continuous fire. Only so much powder each year all vessels are to be cleared for action, and men are to be stationed as in actual battle, with necessary officers, aids, and quartermaster in the conning tower, and all other officers at stations. Projectiles used in practice are either semi-armor piercing or simply cast iron with little power to break through heavy armor. The powder, however, is of the best furnished the navy.—New York Sun.

A GODSEND LUFKIN OF MAINE.

This Was a Mistake of the Clergyman's but $100,000 Came along with It.

A Godsend Lufkin, of Tilden, Me., has the distinction of owning the queerest name in Maine. He got it through a mistake of the clergyman who christened him.

Lufkin's grandfather, old Peleg Lufkin, owned about all the wild land in the town. When he died he left his property to his four boys in trust, the whole of it to go to the first grandson who should come into the world. At that time none of the boys were married. The day a son was rewarded that fault, every one taking a wife inside of a year from the time the will of their father was made. Six years after his wedding the wife of George Lufkin presented to him a son, who was entitled to the great estate under the terms of the will. It was decided that the boy's mother should bestow the name, but she neglected to tell the minister about it before the party had assembled at the church. Then when the clergyman asked what name he should bestow the child's father spoke up and said:

"I think you'd better call him a god send, because he has proved that to my family."

The words spoken in jest were taken in earnest by the clergyman, who proceeded to formally christen the boy as "A Godsend Lufkin," a name which by the way, has stood for nearly $100,000 worth of property along with his name, he is trying to stand it.—New York Sun.

Teeth Transplanted and Grow as Strong as the Original Ones.

The most wonderful thing accomplished by the dental surgeon is the transplantation of teeth. He can actually take a good fresh-drawn tooth from the mouth of one person and put it into the jaw of another, so that it will grow and be to all intents and purposes as good as if it had sprouted originally in its new situation. A satisfactory connection with the old nerve is established, the fortunate fact being that nothing in the mouth unites more readily than nerve tissue.

The transplantation of bones is another triumph of the new surgery. Where a human bone has become diseased or otherwise damaged beyond repair, it can be replaced under reasonably favorable conditions by a bone taken from an animal.

The nose is an organ liable to damage, and various diseases attack it and impair its beauty. Where the bridge of that organ has fallen in, or has been destroyed, it has been found practicable to put in an artificial bridge of chicken bone. Sometimes gold or platinum is preferred as the material. The proper antiseptic methods being followed, the flesh heals over the new bridge without irritation, and thus life is made worth living once more.

MARY HAD A LITTLE WHEEL.

Mary had a little wheel
That swiftly skimmed the dirt.
And when it needed repair want,
Oh my, how she did flirt.

She flirted up the hill and down,
She flirted by the lea,
She flirted into a stone wall—
Thence to eternity.

THE CZAR'S WATCHMAKER.

He Constructed a Timepiece in Eight Hours.

John Curzon, a Polish mechanic, who was presented with a gold medal for his inventions, performed a most extraordinary thing when he succeeded in manufacturing a complete watch in the space of eight hours, and from materials, too, that another watchmaker would have looked with contempt, says an exchange. It appears that the Czar of Russia, hearing of the marvelous inventive genius of Curzon, determined to put him to the test, and forwarded to him a box containing a few copper nails, some wood chippings, a piece of broken glass, an old cracked china cup, some wire, and a few cribbage board pegs, with a request that he should transform them into a timepiece. Nothing daunted, and proceeding a most methodical way of winning favor at the court, Curzon set about his task with enthusiasm; and in the almost incredibly short space of eight hours had dispatched a wonderfully constructed watch to the Czar. So well was the monarch delighted at the work that he sent for the maker, conferred upon him several distinctions, and granted him a pension. The case of the watch was made of china, while the works were simply composed of the nails and ends accompanying the old cup. Not only did it keep good time, but only required winding once every three or four days. This remarkable watch is believed to be still in the possession of the Russian royal family.

A ROYAL MARTYR TO ETIQUETTE.

Philip III Died Rather Than Sacrifice His Dignity.

In Spain the etiquette to be observed in the royal palaces was carried to such length as to make martyrs of their kings. There is an historic instance.

Philip III was gravely seated by the fire; the firemaker of the court had kindled so great a quantity of wood that the monarch was nearly suffocated with heat, and his grandeur would not suffer him to rise from the chair. The domestics could not presume to enter the apartment, because it was against the etiquette.

At length the Marquis de Totat appeared, and the king ordered him to damp the fires; but he excused himself, alleging that he was forbidden by the etiquette to perform such a function, for which the Duc d'Usseda ought to be called upon, as it was his business.

The duke was gone out. The fire burned fiercer, and the king endured it rather than derogate from his dignity. But his blood was heated to such a degree that he was seriously ill the next day. A violent fever succeeded, which carried him off in the twenty-fourth year of his age.—Golden Days.

Adolphe Thiers' Close Call.

One day a mother who had been to a country house with Mme. Thiers was returning at twilight to the city with her son, a child of eight years, who had been put in a peach basket borne by a donkey, and the mother, fearing the child might catch cold (it was in November), had covered him with a shawl. Tired with a long drive and running around the country all day, cosey and warm under the thick shawl, the child was soon asleep and hidden by the sides of the basket. There is a local custom-house at the gates of Marseilles, and when the inspector surmises that any package contains contraband articles he thrusts a sharp steep pick through it. He was preparing to do this with the basket when the mother, some distance behind, saw his intention and shrieked out that her son was in the basket. It was Adolphe Thiers.—New York Tribune.

Wellington's Quick Wit.

An Austrian princess once asked the Duke of Wellington:

"How is it that we in Vienna speak French so much better than you English?"

To which the Duke replied:

"Well, princess, if Napoleon had twice visited London with his armies, as he has Vienna, I have no doubt we should be much more familiar with the French language."

Louis Philippe, of France, introduced to the Duke of Wellington one of his French marshals, whom he had beaten on the peninsula. The marshal partly turned his back to the duke, which greatly displeased Louis Philippe, who apologized to the duke for his marshal's rudeness.

"Forgive him, sire," said the duke. "I taught him to do that in the peninsula."

To Render a Chain Rust-Proof.

The following advice to make a new chain dust-proof is given in The Wheel: "Coil it up and place it in a small tin box. On the top put pieces of any good candle, and place before a hot fire. The candle will melt and run into the chain, and find its way into the links and blocks. When this has been accomplished, put aside the box and contents to cool, and when the melted candle has solidified, wipe off any superfluity. After this treatment it will be found that grit and dirt can only with difficulty get into the blocks."

YOUNG SOLOMON.....

"Sammy Snaggs," asked the teacher, "what part of speech is the word 'malediction?'"

"Noun," replied Sammy.

"What gender?"

"Masculine gender."

"Indeed?"

"Yes'm. If it was feminine it would be 'malledictrice.'"—Pittsburg Chronicle Telegraph.

America May Fix Fashions.

The hasty and unguarded expression of sympathy for Spain that so many of the French people indulged in may have a more farreaching effect than could have been foreseen by anybody. So soon as the quick sighted Parisians saw what they and their newspapers had done they could have bitten their tongues off. It is broadly stated and generally believed that leading French newspapers offered their services to the United States for a consideration, said services to consist in creating a public sentiment in our favor. Their disinterested offer was declined with thanks. Then they proceeded in revenge to create a hostile sentiment. Immediately it reacted on the most sensitive part of a Frenchman, his pocket. American women love their country, even if they do buy millions of dollars' worth of French fallals every year.

Our ladies abroad refused to patronize the Paris dressmakers and milliners. Many of them actually came home without Paris wardrobes. The French tradesfolk are in despair. They admit the United States is the best market France has. They say American women have better taste than any others and spend more on their toilets, and that they are well capable of designing and executing beautiful costumes at home. Perhaps the result will be that American women will use their native taste and their money to design artistic costumes of their own, and that in time the United States instead of Paris will set the fashion for women's dress.

Magazine Editorials.

We have been looking over the magazine editorials for the current month. Almost without exception they are disappointing. We mention no names, nor do we intend to, but it is a fact that if the average newspaper editorial writer were even for one week to pour upon the large type page such inanity as most of the magazines inflict on their readers and call it editorial he would lose his place at once.

The newspaper editorial is sometimes unreasonable. In the hurry of composition it is not polished so highly as it ought to be. The person who writes 5,000 words a day for a daily has no time for the fine points of rhetoric. But he is generally in earnest, generally has something to say. His words throb with the warm blood of living conviction and come straight out from his thought.

Your magazine editorial writer sits in his chair and spins out a few pages per month of trifling criticisms or mild humor over something that is of the least possible consequence. The great questions of the time, the issues that fill men with enthusiasm and furnish the mainspring of their actions from day to day, the things that the nation thinks about and talks about, the magazine editorial writer somehow misses. It is as if he were a high school girl writing a composition on friendship. We wish the magazine editorial writers would wake up.

The Cincinnati manufacturing firm that found a way to suddenly turn the sympathy of the French nation over to our side are entitled to the thanks of the American people. Their reply to the French business men in New York, who wrote asking them to cement at the French exposition of 1900, settled the matter. They said they would not have anything to do with the Paris exposition while the French people were so unfriendly to us in the war with Spain. The fire of a fine patriotism flashed in those few words. Immediately Frenchmen saw a great light. Straightway the French minister at Washington visited the state department, telling the officials how much France had always loved us and how she had helped us during the revolution. "France always remembers," said the minister. Maybe France has always loved us, but here lately she has taken a queer way of showing it. However, we accept her assurances of friendship in the future and thank her.

So soon as the hurry of immediate war legislation is over congress should turn its attention to the Danish West Indies bill which has already been reported by the senate committee on foreign relations. It is a bill directing the president to purchase from Denmark if he can any one or two or all three of the islands of St. Croix, St. Thomas and St. John and utilize them for coaling and naval stations. The need of these purchases requires no argument with the American people.

Returning Confederate Flags.

When there is a family quarrel, a bitter one even, the members of that family after they have made friends do not preserve in their records any traces of the dispute for strangers to obtain possession of and make sneering comment on. They destroy everything which reminds them of the former enmity and are more devoted to one another than they were before to make up for the temporary alienation.

It is in this spirit that Lieutenant Colonel Theodore F. Allen of the Seventh Ohio cavalry during the civil war and now a prominent business man of Cincinnati makes the recommendation that at the coming reunion of the G. A. R. action be taken to return to their original owners the Confederate flags captured in 1861-5. These flags are held as trophies of victory in some of the northern state capitals and elsewhere. The G. A. R. meets in Cincinnati in September. Colonel Allen is of opinion that it will be the last large reunion of the veterans of 1861, because they are dying so rapidly. He believes the ceremony of returning the old Confederate battleflags will mark the final and complete reconciliation of "Yank" and "Johnny" and destroy, so far as the north is concerned, all trace of the difference.

Colonel Allen himself was a brave and honored officer in Wilson's cavalry corps and had his share of hard fighting. It is a graceful act on the part of an officer like this to inaugurate the move to send back the southern flags to those who first possessed them. It will be still more graceful if the Grand Army of the Republic indorses the action and unanimously votes to restore the captured banners. The cause they represent is only a memory now, but a memory which not even a northerner would lose, for from the civil war dates America's real greatness as a nation.

Colonel Allen bases the restitution of the southern flags on the fact that we all are one now and there is only one flag. Old Glory—may she wave forever! Fits-Hugh Lee and Joseph Wheeler are major generals in the United States army, appointed and commissioned by a Republican president, who knows their worth. There are 50,000 Confederates and sons of Confederates at present in the United States army. We are one, one and inseparable, now and forever. So, says Colonel Allen, give back the flags of the lost cause to fair southland.

In the house committee on election of president, vice president and members of congress there slumbers, waiting a convenient moment to wake up, a bill providing for a six year term of the representatives. This would be a good plan perhaps, as most representatives require a considerable portion of the first term to learn the business. Then, too, most representatives are honored by a re-election, which virtually gives them a term of four years. It would save trouble and expense to elect them for four years in the first place. Nobody solemnly declares, however, that if representatives be elected for four years then the term of a senator should be extended to eight years. Well, no; not if we knew it. More than once in the history of this country after the people had declared by a heavy vote that they desired certain legislation by congress the senate has sat in the way and blocked it month after month, an immovable obstacle. Senators for eight years? No, thank you. If they are useful and popular during the six years' term, each man of them has opportunity to be chosen again.

Real estate belongs in the country in which it is situated. It cannot be taken away. That is the reason why a citizen of one country cannot inherit real estate in another unless he goes to the country where the estate is and becomes a citizen there. This is the law of nations although there are ways of getting around it. Citizens of Spain who own property here may by international usage have their property confiscated, but it is not at all likely this would be done under ordinary circumstances. It would open the door for violent reprisals. Citizens of Spain who on the outbreak of the war declared their intention of becoming American citizens would be entitled to protection for their property the same as other citizens.

In round numbers 13,000 miles was the distance traveled by the Oregon in her journey round Cape Horn to the West Indies. Counting out stops, she made the trip in two months. That she made it in such time without a break to her machinry is a splendid tribute to American shipbuilding, particularly that of the Pacific coast, where her keel was laid. It also shows that a vessel of the heavy battleship type can be constructed so as to make very fair speed.

No state can now forbid the sale of intoxicating liquors within its borders or the transportation of such liquors through its territory. The United States supreme court has decided that such a law would be an interference with a citizen's right to earn his living in any way he chose that is not forbidden by generally recognized law and custom.

One of the most pleasing sights in this Union just now is an American millionaire who is a robust patriot and all round manly man and not a dude and a milk and water traitor.

The Jews Remember!

Hebrew newspapers in America are taking warm interest in the war with Spain and urging the young men of their race to volunteer and fight for the United States. Some of the wealthy Jews have given money to the government to prosecute the war. Hebrew citizens of the United States are always patriotic. They know better than any other people what it is to be persecuted and oppressed, and they appreciate a country where all citizens are free to pursue their callings as they choose. But at present they are unusually enthusiastic for the success of the United States arms. A writer in The Jewish Press says his people in America "pray daily in the sacred language of the prophets for the victorious progress of Uncle Sam, whose disinterested intervention on behalf of freedom and civilization will add a glorious page to history."

The Jews all over the country hope and pray and expect that the present war will result in the downfall of Spain. Why? The Hebrew race does not forget. Four hundred years ago in Spain their people were subjected to the bloodiest persecution that even the Jew had ever known. The writer in The Jewish Press speaks of the bondage in Egypt and adds, "But what is the Egyptian tyrant in comparison with the Spanish inquisitors who roasted as alive for the crime of being born of Jewish parents, who burned our homes and finally exiled us in the name of Christianity, which we have given to them, in the name of the meek Nazarene, the great Jewish teacher, who was only a Jew?" The Jewish Gazette says that of the 300,000 persons put to death by the Spaniards then "perhaps the greatest part of the victims were Jews."

These things happened 400 years ago, yet the remembrance lives and burns in the breasts of the descendants of those who suffered. It should be a warning to any nation against doing injustice. The Jewish Gazette is glad that the United States has opened a war on "that hotbed of religious intolerance and bloodthirsty persecution which is known as the kingdom of Spain." It says:

It is sinful to think of revenge, but the Jewish people cannot help remembering Spain. The hour of Spain's end has struck, and its awful career of brutality is nearing an end. It is fortunate indeed that this glorious land of liberty should be assigned the duty of punishing that iniquitous land of tyranny, cruelty and bigotry. May the punishment be terrible, for it has been deserved! And in this hour, when our soldiers are marching onward to fight in a holy cause, what is the duty of every brethren? Can they forget the martyrs of the Inquisition? Can they forget the rack, the wheel, the auto da fe, the smoke and the flame? Can they forget the holy men and women, the flower of the nation, who died with "Hear O Israel" on their lips? Can they forget those who died for God and Judaism? Can they forget the Marranos, who are still found in one day? No! No! "They have forgotten to forget—they have forgotten to forget!"

There is no reason to doubt the good will of Great Britain to us. It is not out of place, therefore, to call attention of Canadians to the fact that although that arch spy Polo has gone home he arranged for the secret Spanish service to be conducted precisely the same as before from the safe vantage of Quebec. That Du Bosc, who was first secretary of the Spanish legation in Washington, has taken a house permanently in Canada, has should be taken note of by Canada and Du Bosc can send no cipher dispatches to his master in Spain, revealing every movement of this government, the size of our army and fleets, their whereabouts and other facts which can be used to our injury. The United States this moment is full of spies in the pay of Spain. It is Spain's way of doing business. England should not let them make report to their employers through her territory.

President F. R. Thurber makes in the New York Journal a valuable suggestion to the bakers and people of America. The price of flour has been raised, therefore bakers must suffer loss or raise the price of bread. Mr. Thurber says: Mix corn flour with the wheat flour to make a loaf of bread. This mixture makes a sweeter, more nutritious bread than wheat flour alone. It has been tried in Europe with advantage by those who were endeavoring to make a market for our corn there. The corn wheat loaf is delicious, and the people will like it. Corn is cheap and can be ground as fine as wheat flour. If the bakers, with the knowledge and approval of their customers, add it to the wheat flour in mixing the bread, they will not be obliged to raise the price of the loaf.

At the beginning of the century, when we had a navy equal even to that of England, as navies went then, the cost of a large and complete warship, called a frigate in those days, was from $200,000 to $300,000. Our largest and most formidable frigate was the old Constitution, which was of 1,575 tons and carried 44 guns. Our whole navy at that time did not cost so much to build as one first class battleship now does.

There have been nearly a dozen powder and dynamite explosions in various parts of this country in the past two months. Are these a part of the Spanish military operations directed from the safe retreat of Canada by the Polo-Du Bosc combination?

Abraham Lincoln was one of the great men who believed in prayer, and himself prayed habitually, but quite privately to himself.

Russian Women's Struggle.

If a search were made for the most intellectual and forceful women of civilization today, it is by no means certain they would be found in America. It is quite possible they would be Russians. In the United States the highest education a human being can receive is in one university or another open to women. If a state university or school for higher learning in one locality shuts its doors churlishly against ladies, they have only to step across the border to a sister state, there to be welcomed in the lecture rooms of whatever course of instruction they elect, whether law, medicine or theology. The American woman has so many privileges that she does not value them as she would if she considered how many of her sisters, even in so called civilized nations, are deprived of them.

Russian women have had to struggle desperately for that higher education which the American lady may have by simply taking it. For 30 years the brilliant and gifted women of the empire of the north have been making the fight for the right to university education. Their fight is against the Russian government. Occasionally the women are ahead. Then the government lays its iron hand on them and crushes the splendid hope out of their souls. The women students had it the best in 1886, when there were courses in four universities open to them besides a medical academy. Then the government, like any despotism without a parliament, became alarmed and at one stroke closed every one of these courses. Russia knows well that the thing most to be feared by a despotism is education, especially education of the women.

It is to be remembered that in Russia no law or enactment by any legislative body is necessary for anything. A simple arbitrary order from a cabinet minister, and the thing is done. So soon as the Russian ladies began to throng in numbers to the schools and show by their brilliant attainments the activity of a noble order of intellect the Russian minister of education, who ought to be called the minister of ignorance instead, swooped down upon them and abolished the university courses for women. Then began a regular exodus of high bred and brilliant Russian ladies from their own country. To France they went and to America, but mostly to Switzerland, so that the learning denied them at home. Finding that iron despotism though it was, it could not hold the women in ignorance, the Russian government in 1889 granted in a cramped and crippled way the reopening of the universities to the sex. The women will win yet.

Horse Traders Growing Virtuous.

Devout souls not a few tell us they see in the spiritual sky of today signs that the millennium which Christians have prayed for these many years and centuries is near at hand. If so, one sign of it surely must be that horse dealers are growing honest. The National Stockman and Farmer, commenting on the fact that a Boston horse trader was lately sentenced to a year's imprisonment for swindling, declares that the day of the horse shark and bunko man is over. The Boston dealer who was shown to have cheated his customer was sent to the penitentiary just like any other thief and swindler.

It is a fact that the snide horse auctions that for so many years disgraced our large cities are disappearing. In their place are sale stables presided over by men of honor, men wise enough to know that the best way to get money is to give fair value in your sales.

The improvement in common honesty among horse dealers is a result of the change in the character of the stock bought and sold. The customer who patronizes the city sale stable is now the rich American who buys horses for pleasure. He will have the best. The horse dealers do not dare to cheat him. This demand for fine carriage and saddle horses has brought up the price for such fine stock. Dealers now take pride and pleasure in furnishing the best type of horseflesh, perfectly trained and without blemish. They believe it pays in the long run and in the short run.

The pocket will ultimately decide on which side the sympathy of the powers of Europe will lie as between Spain and the United States. They upheld Turkey in the war with Greece because they thought Turkey would be more apt than Greece to pay what she owed them. In like manner they will let Spain alone till they see she is determined to fight to the bitter end and die in the last ditch. Then they will force her to give up Cuba, perhaps other possessions, just so she may save enough of herself to pay European capitalists the money she has borrowed. No doubt some of them are just aching to unite and go in on the side of Spain and all together give her a whipping. But they know that the moment they should make any move in that direction England would declare at once for us. The war vessels of the United States and Great Britain together could destroy the united navies of the earth, especially as in Asia we should have Japan on our side. It would be the most colossal warfare this earth has ever witnessed, a battle of the giants of the earth.

It seems odd now, but one of Gladstone's first speeches in parliament was in defense of negro slavery in the British West Indies.

HONORED SOLDIER BOYS

CATHOLIC CLUB RECOGNIZE THE PATRIOTISM OF IRISH BOYS.

Noble Sons of Celtics Made Honorary Members of the Catholic Club—Nominations of Officers for Coming Year.

A meeting of the Catholic Club was held Monday night, and nominations of officers made for the coming year. An honor was also conferred on the members who have volunteered to go to war and who are now serving their country on land and sea, as soldiers or sailors. These were all made honorary members without exception.

The members are James McCormick, Charles Flynn and F. T. McCarthy, all of whom are in the Third Regiment.

D. J. O'Keeffe, of the Detroit, M. O'Keeffe, of the Topeka, and James Lannigan, who is on the Boston with Dewey in Manila harbor, were also thus honored.

Nominations were then made for the coming year. The present incumbent, George J. Tobin, was nominated for president, but refused to accept.

J. H. Hillman was then nominated, and Michael Nevins was nominated for vice-president, Edward Flynn for financial secretary, and Frank McInearney for corresponding secretary. A board of directors to serve for two years was nominated as follows: Geo. Tobin, P. Traynor, J. Moran and Thomas Comerford. A committee of seven was nominated to act in conjunction with the house committee in arranging for the strawberry festival next week.

THE WONDERS OF SCIENCE.

Lung Troubles and Consumption Can be Cured

An Eminent New York Chemist and Scientist Makes a Free Offer to Our Readers.

The distinguished chemist, T. A. Slocum, of New York City, demonstrating his discovery of a reliable cure for Consumption Pulmonary Tuberculosis, bronchial, lung and chest troubles, stubborn coughs, catarrhal affections general debility and weakness, loss of flesh, all conditions of wasting away, will send THREE FREE TRIALS (all different) of his New Discoveries to any afflicted reader of this paper writing for them.

His "New Scientific Treatment" has cured thousands permanently by its timely use, and he considers it a simple professional duty to suffering humanity to donate a trail of his infallible cure.

Science daily develops new wonders, and this great chemist, patiently experimenting for years, has produced results as beneficial to humanity as can be claimed by any modern genius. His assertion that lung troubles and consumption are curable in any climate is proven by "heartfelt letters of gratitude," filled in his American and European laboratories in the thousands from those cured in all parts of the world.

The dread Consumption, uninterrupted, means speedy and certain death.

Simply write to T. A. Slocum, M. C., 98 Pine street, New York, giving post-office and express address, and the free medicine will be promptly sent direct from his laboratory.

Sufferers should take instant advantage of his generous proposition.

BURIED BY THE MASONS

FUNERAL OF LATE FREDERIC CASPAR HELD MONDAY AFTERNOON.

Various Societies to Which the Dead Man Belonged Paid a Marked Tribute of Respect—Large Amount of Flowers.

The funeral of the late Frederic Caspar was held Monday afternoon from the house on East Front street at 2 o'clock and from the German Reformed church at 2:30. The attendance was large and included delegations from all of the local lodges to which Mr. Caspar belonged. The services were in charge of Jerusalem Lodge, No. 26, F. and A. M. At the house Rev. George Hauser, chaplain of the Masonic Lodge, and pastor of the German Reformed church, offered prayer and made a few remarks consoling the bereaved ones.

After this service the funeral cortege proceeded to the church on Craig place where a service was held. At this service Rev. Mr. Hauser, pastor of the church, and Rev. Mr. Schamberger, of Newark, a retired minister, and personal friend of the deceased, each delivered a sermon in German.

An impressive part of the services was the singing by the singing section of the evening and Turn Verein, both at the church and grave. The society attended in a body.

At the grave the Masonic Lodge took charge of the services and interred the dead man with Masonic honors. B. Frank Coriell, past master of the lodge, was in charge. Rev. Mr. Hauser also took part. Martin Heubner spoke a few words for the Gesang and Turn Verein, while for the Independent Gun Club, H. Schoetlin made a few remarks. As a part of the service performed by the Germans the American flag was waved three times over the grave.

The display of floral offerings was especially handsome. From every lodge to which Mr. Caspar belonged a set piece was presented, while C. Fiegenspan, of Newark, also presented a beautiful set piece. There were eleven set pieces in all and a number of smaller bunches of flowers.

Interment was in the North Plainfield cemetery and those who acted as pall-bearers were George Kesselring, J. C. Pope, J. E. Flennery, M. C. Dobbins, Jacob Blimm and C. W. Krausse.

ONE OF THE CHARACTERISTICS OF THE JAPANESE.

The People of the Land of Tea Described by a Missionary Who Has Been Among Them for a Great Many Years.

A very interesting address on missionary work in Japan was delivered by Rev. Hilton Pedley, a returned missionary from that country, in the congregational church last Monday. He described the different islands of the group and told something of the inhabitants of each and their manners and customs. He gave an interesting account of his own land trip in Japan and how he learned the native language. He taught in a private school for boys there, later to begin regular missionary work after he had become somewhat acquainted with the customs and learned something of the language.

His description of the different cities of the missionary were very interesting. He dwelt especially on the work of touring from one native church to another. He referred to the love of the Japanese for conundrums, and how they gathered together drank tea and ate cake and settled in five hours what the average American would in thirty minutes.

His stories of his experiences with the interpreters were, some of them, very amusing. In addressing the natives, he explained, the missionary would talk for five minutes and then the interpreter would tell what he could remember and make up the rest. The interpreter, the speaker said, reminded him of the American reporter in that particular.

At the close of the address, the audience was invited to ask questions and certain other interesting points were brought out. Then Rev. Mr. Pedley exhibited a number of photograps of Japan and Japanese people.

Arranging for a Festival.

The associate members of the Catholic Club met their president, George Robin, Sunday afternoon to talk over matters pertaining to the strawberry and ice cream festival which the club is to give Wednesday and Thursday of next week. A committee of five was appointed to make the final arrangements. The programme will consist of musical features and dancing. Thursday night the associate members will meet again and perfect the arrangements, and several sub-committees will be selected.

Distended Knee Cap.

Gertrude, the oldest daughter of Thomas Martin, colored, warden of the city jail, is suffering from a dislocated knee cap as the result of a fall Monday at Flemington. Gertrude and her father were returning from a visit in Pennsylvania, and in crossing from the Pennsylvania to the Central Railroad depot at Flemington, the girl stumbled over a rock in her path and fell, cutting her knee, as well as dislocating the knee cap. Dr. Long is the attending physician.

ANOTHER HAVEN TO SAVE SOULS FROM SIN

New Building of East Third Street Mission Dedicated.

TO BE CALLED FAITH CHAPEL

THE SERVICES WERE HELD IN THE BUILDING SUNDAY AFTERNOON.

The New Building is a Neat Structure on East Third Street, Near Richmond Street, on the Very Site Where The Mission Tent Was Erected Seven Years Ago — $1,000 Still Needed to Clear the New Chapel From Debt—Eight Clergymen and C. W. McCutchen Made Addresses.

Sunday afternoon the dedication exercises of the new East Third Street chapel were held, and the occasion was made one of general joy and thanksgiving on the part of the workers and supporters of the mission.

The members held their last service in the old building Thursday evening, and when they entered the new structure yesterday they entered with a name, for they are no longer the East Third Street mission, but "Faith Chapel."

The chapel has been recently finished and made ready for use. It is a neat structure near Richmond street, right in the midst of a portion of the town where a mission of some kind had long been needed. Seven years ago several members of the First Baptist church got together and erected a tent on the very ground where Faith chapel now stands, and it is fitting that the larger and more substantial structure should stand as a monument to make the spot where the first evangelistic work began.

The chapel contains one large auditorium with a gallery, which will be used for Sunday evening and week night services as well as for Sunday school. There are besides several smaller rooms, a library, etc. The interior is finished in Norway pine, and makes a pretty appearance, especially was this noticed yesterday, when the front of the main room was bright with flowers and green plants, and American banners hung on the walls.

The treasurer's report, which was read Sunday by L. W. Serrell, showed that the mission still needs to raise about $1,000 before it can declare itself free from debt. The total cost of the building, including the lot, carpenter and mason work, furnishings, and an amount of rent due on the old building amounts to $7,879.10. $6,000 was subscribed before the work was begun; the balance will have to be made up, and it is hoped that it can be raised in six months, with the addition of the $400, needed annually to run the mission.

An invitation had been sent out by C. W. McCutchen, L. W. Serrell, R. K. Case, I. L. Brady, and L. W. Randolph, trustees, to several to attend the opening exercises Sunday, and the eight clergymen who responded and occupied seats on the platform were Revs. Dr. Yerkes, Dr. Richards, J. W. Richardson, A. E. Main, M. Cubberly, of South Plainfield, George Bowers, of Warrenville, Mr. Chambers and Arthur Crane.

The services were opened with singing by the congregation led by the choir of the First Baptist church; prayer by Rev. Arthur Crane, and Scripture reading by Rev. J. W. Richardson.

Each of the clergymen mentioned above and C. W. McCutchen spoke a few words, their addresses being limited to five minutes each. They all congratulated the mission on its phenomenal growth and welcomed it into the sisterhood of churches. The suggestion as to what we would do were there no churches in town was made, and the fact emphasized that a chapel such as this meant something to a city.

The services were attended by people from all the churches, every denomination uniting in wishing the new chapel and its members success. During the afternoon Mrs. Ward and Miss Harris, of the First Baptist church choir, sang a duet.

The chapel, although not dedicated until 4:15, was used as a meeting place for the Sunday-school at 3 o'clock. L. W. Randolph is the Sunday-school superintendent. The chapel has no pastor, but the services will be conducted in the future as they have been in the past, under the leadership of several prominent Christian workers of the mother church.

Sunday evening Rev. Arthur Crane opened the first of a series of evangelistic meetings which will be continued all this week.

A Home for Church of Redeemer.

As a sufficient amount of money has been received by the members of the Church of the Redeemer, the work of building their new church will probably be started in the course of a month at the corner of Grove street and Prospect avenue. A movement is now on foot among the young people of the church to raise a sufficient amount of money to erect a parish house adjoining the church.

A BURGLARY PREVENTED

OFFICER WATSON SURPRISED TWO MEN IN A BLACKSMITH SHOP.

Probably Planning to Steal Tools With Which to Enter a Dwelling House or Store and Secure Valuable Booty.

Officer Watson surprised two men in Wm. McCready's blacksmith shop at Clinton avenue and South Second street Monday night at 1 o'clock. The men heard the officer coming, and while he was a hundred yards away ran so fast that he could not follow them or even see what kind of looking objects they were.

It was afterward discovered that the men had gained an entrance through one of the windows, which they had pried open. When they got inside they opened the door, and must have just entered it as they heard the approaching footsteps of Watson, for nothing was taken. It is thought the thieves were after some tools with which to break into a dwelling house near by, as that is one of their old tricks. The timely approach of the policeman probably prevented two burglaries.

Appointed Administrators.

Saturday Surrogate Parrot issued letters of administration on the estate of Charlotte Park, deceased, late of this city. Her brother, Meeker Hatfield, of Dunellen, and her legal adviser, Counsellor W. S. Angleman, of this city, were appointed administrators, and gave bond in the sum of $20,000 for the faithful performances of their duties. The estate consists of five-dollar mortgages placed for her by Counsellor Angleman.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease, and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials Address,

THREATENED TO SUE BOARD OF EDUCATION.

The Claim of the Dudley Engineering Company Refused.

BOARD MEETING MONDAY.

THE BOARD DECLARES THAT COMPANY DIDN'T KEEP ITS CONTRACT.

Report of the Medical Inspectors Showed a Remarkable Percentage of Children Whom They Examined Had Not Been Vaccinated—Mr. Probasco and Mr. Lounsbury Appointed Delegates to Attend the National Convention of School Boards—Committees For Judging Contests Appointed—Some Other Business.

The Plainfield Board of Education and the Dudley Engineering Company, of New York, are not of the same mind regarding the amount of a bill. The Dudley Company has threatened to bring suit, but still the Board sticks to its decision in the matter. The Dudley Company put in the heating apparatus in the Lincoln School by contract. By contract they agreed to do certain things in regard to the foot-warmers. When the apparatus *was first put in it did not ac*complish the ends promised by contract and some alterations were necessary. The payment for the work was consequently delayed and a check protested.

At the May meeting of the Board, a bill came in from the Dudley Company for $79.92. There was a charge of $7.75 for changing the foot warmers, the remainder being for pretest fees, extra labor, interest and expenses to and from Plainfield. The Board laughed at the bill and sent it back.

At the June meeting of the Board, held last Monday, the Board received a communication from the Dudley Engineering Company, making a final demand for settlement before the bill was placed in the hands of their attorney. Mr. Lounsbury remarked that he did not see how the company could ever collect the bill and thought the whole affair was a bluff to bulldoze the Board. After a discussion, the Board decided not to be bulldozed. If the charge of $7.75, for changing the foot warmers, was approved by the architect, they agreed to pay that charge, but the rest they declared that they would not pay and the clerk was instructed to inform the Dudley Company of their decision.

*All the members, except Dr. Jen*kins, were present. The report of the collector, showed collections amounting to $518.90, with interest of $21.96, making a total of $540.14.

Superintendent Maxson reported collection notices to the amount of $422.70 for the summer term.

The report of the medical inspectors showed that 343 children had been examined during the month of May, of whom 261 were found to be unvaccinated. There were 15 cases of defective vision and 7 cases of defective hearing discovered.

A communication was received from the Department of School Administration of the National Education Association inviting the Board to send delegates to the National convention of School Boards at Washington, July 8-9. President Probasco and Secretary Lounsbury were appointed delegates.

The committees for judging in the prize contests at Commencement time were appointed by the president as follows: English composition, Mrs. George Wharton Edwards, Mrs. Eugene Hatch, Mrs. J. Everitt Kimball, Penmanship, Dr. M. Long, J. Kirtland Myers, Councilman Wm. N. Runyon.

PECULIAR BICYCLE ACCIDENT.

Charles Nightingale's Ankle Caught Between Crank and Frame.

A peculiar accident occurred to Charles Nightingale, youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles T. Nightingale, of 40 Sandford avenue, Monday afternoon, at the corner of East Front street and Watchung avenue. The little fellow was riding his wheel, when in some way his right ankle became fastened between the crank of the wheel and the frame. The pain was intense, but the little fellow bore it patiently. Finally John Vetterlein was sent for and he removed the crank of the wheel.

The boy was then taken into the private office of J. H. Leggett, the druggist, and Dr. T. B. Davis, of Park avenue, was sent for. The latter came and made an examination and treated the injured member. He learned that no bones were broken, but that the leg and ankle were badly bruised. Today the boy is doing exceedingly well.

Children's Day.

Next Sunday morning at 10:30 the Sunday-school of Grace M. E. church will hold their annual Children's Day service. The programme will be appropriate to the occasion, consisting of singing and recitations, class exercises and a short address by the pastor. Parents having children to be baptized will please present them at this service.

PLAINFIELD'S AUTHOR-ARTIST.

Deserved Tribute Paid to the Ability of George Wharton Edwards.

The art-lovers among Plainfield society women had a treat Monday afternoon in the informal lecture on "American Painters," given by Mrs. Semmes Craig, of New York, in the Casino.

Mrs. Semmes Craig said, in opening, that America had no cause to be ashamed of the artistic talent she had produced. The speaker mentioned, one after another, a number of our best known artists, telling a little concerning their lives and their finest pictures.

Of the author-artist resident in this city, George Wharton Edwards, Mrs. Semms-Craig made special mention. She said that while Mr. Edwards was best known as an illustrator, every year he produced at least one notable canvas, and many exquisite water colors. She also spoke of his literary work, and said that in both lines he was a man who had something to say, and who said it. Of his work as an artist, she said, "His pictures give one the impression of great delicacy and reserve strenth, and that God given something called 'instinct'".

A Quiet Wedding.

George Haurand, of Grove street, and Miss Gretchen Schultz, of Montclair, were quietly married last Sunday at the rectory of St. Joseph's Roman Catholic church of North Plainfield, by Rev. Father Miller. Otto Keller was best man and Mrs. Joseph Haurand stood up with the bride.

After the ceremony the party went to the new house which the groom had rented and furnished at 225 Grove street where a wedding supper was served. The groom is employed in his brother Henry's cafe on East Front street. The ceremony was witnessed only by the immediate members of the families.

Lawyer Nash Dead.

Stephen P. Nash, the well-known New York lawyer who has a summer home at Bernardsville, died Saturday. He was known to many Plainfielders in a pleasant way.

CRESCENTS WON IN AN ERRORLESS GAME.

Met and Defeated the Bergen Field Club Saturday.

THE SCORE WAS 10 TO 3.

TIMELY HITTING AND GOOD FIELDING WON THE GAME.

The Game Was Close During the First Three Innings and Then the Crescents Ran Away From Their Opponents—MacLaughlin Pitched An Excellent Game and Had the Best of Support—The Visitors Made Only One Bad Error—The Day Was a Cold and Windy One—A Small Audience Present.

In an errorless game the Crescents defeated the Bergen Field Club, one of the crack semi-professional teams of Brooklyn, Saturday afternoon. The day was by no means an ideal one for baseball, being cold and windy, while a few drops of rain promised a greater downfall later. Nevertheless the Crescents were in magnificent form, winning by a score of 10 to 3.

"Warty" MacLaughlin was in the box for the home team. Despite the strong north-east gale blowing, he had good control of the ball. In the first and third innings the visitors were able to hit his pitching somewhat, but when he warmed up to the game his curves were too puzzling. Then, too, he had perfect support.

The visitors were young men and good players, having only lost two games out of the ten they have played this season. They had met their match, however, and were frank in admitting that the Crescents were the best team they had met this season.

The visitors went first to bat. The first ball struck Nolan in the side of the head and he took first to be forced out by Lippert's easy grounder to MacLaughlin. Patterson forced Lippert out in a similar manner. Then singles by Leonard and Price sent Patterson around the circuit of the bases for a run. The Crescents did not score in the first inning.

In the second, errors by second base and short stop filled two of the bases, then a single by Charley Mumford brought them both in. Mac hit for two bases to score with Mumford on a hit by Metz. Four runs were the result.

The Bergens did the last of the scoring in the third, when singles by Patterson and Leonard, a base on balls and two stolen bases netted two more runs.

Two more Crescents rounded the bases in the fourth inning on singles by Hollister and Metz and a two-bagger by Dave Vroom.

In the sixth inning Metz was struck on the shoulder. A wild throw of Cavanaugh's grounder by Price sent Metz home. Vroom was also struck by a pitched ball. C. Vroom sacrificed to first. Then an error by Patterson, and singles by Mumford and McLoughLoughlin made the total score for the inning four.

That ended the scoring for both sides and the men followed each other in one, two, three order on both sides.

The wind made it difficult for the fielders to judge the high flies and for that reason several hits were scored that might have otherwise been caught. The batting of the local team was excellent, however. They hit the ball and at timely intervals.

There was barely a corporal's guard in the grand stand and bleechers but the chilly weather was responsible. The game was a good one, and the excellent playing of the Crescents made a profound impression on the visitors.

The detailed score was as follows:

May Build Up "Battle Row."

As yet it is not known whether "Battle Row" will be built up again or not. The insurance companies are figuring on the loss, and E. Frank Vail, the owner, has carpenters making estimates. Some decision will probably be reached in less than a week.

DISGRACEFUL CONDUCT.

SCIONS OF WEALTHY FAMILIES RIDE HORSES IN NUDE CONDITION.

The Daring and Capricious Youngsters Startled the Staid Agriculturists Who Reside Near Lambert's Mill Pond.

The young sons of two or three of Plainfield's most respected and wealthy citizens amused themselves Saturday in a most disgraceful manner. The party of boys, who are old enough to know better, journeyed to Lambert's mill pond, back of Short Hills, to take a swim.

The boys drove to the pond in two runabouts. After their swim they unhitched the horses from the runabouts, and in a nude condition they commenced a steeple chase through the farmer's orchard and corn fields.

The boys jumped fences with the horses and indulged in all sorts of pranks, and did not stop until they were tired of the sport. Then they resumed their dress, hitched up the horses again and drove home.

The antics of the boys were seen by a number of people, who were shocked at such conduct. It is said that Mr. Lambert will make a complaint to the county authorities.

A MODEL DRUG STORE.

John F. Powers' Business Venture Has Proved a Successful One.

One of the most complete and handsomest drug stores to be found in this vicinity is the one conducted by John F. Powers, at the corner of Somerset street and Craig place. Mr. Powers recently opened this store and the liberal patronage accorded has convinced him that he is located in the right place. The store is an attractive one and presents a neat appearance. There is a place for everything and everything in its place, and accuracy is the imperative rule. The store is well stocked with the purest drugs to be obtained on the market and the popular proprietor will maintain the highest standard. Mr. Powers also has a full line of toilet articles and extracts which are sold at prices that are right—in fact, everything is sold at the right figure.

A valuable addition to the store is one of John Mathews' latest and most improved soda fountains. Mr. Powers is the special agent in the borough for Sparkling Kolafra.

WARREN TOWNSHIP WINS.

North Plainfield is Responsible for Care of Malford Rost.

The case of the Overseer of the Poor of Warren Township against the Overseer of the Poor of North Plainfield Township was decided by Judge Bartine Friday in favor of Warren Township and against North Plainfield. The Township Committees of these two townships entered into a battle royal Thursday last at Somerville, not in a contest for more territory, but for the purpose of getting rid of keeping a pauper named Malford Rost. The Warren Township men defeated, although she, under the leadership of Messrs. Pope & Runyon, her attorneys, put up a good fight. Warren was led to victory under the careful and experienced generalship of ex-Assemblyman W. R. Codlington.

A DAY ON A HOUSEBOAT.

Guests of F. H. Ball Enjoyed Themselves on "Sommerheim."

F. H. Ball, of the borough, entertained a party of North Plainfield people on his sailing houseboat, "Sommerhim," Saturday, in the Raritan Bay. In the party were: Mr. and Mrs. Douglass, Mrs. VanDeventer, Mrs. Miller, of Buffalo; Miss VanArsdale, Miss VanDeventer, Miss Anna Murphy, Fletcher Hallock, John Brower and the members of Mr. Ball's family, the entire party numbering about eighteen.

The boat was sailed out into the outer bay and a very pleasant time enjoyed by all. Luncheon was served on the boat. Next Saturday Mr. Ball expects to take another party of North Plainfield people out.

Schoverling—Wyckoff.

A quiet wedding took place June 1st when Miss Gertrude A., daughter of Mrs. Peter Wyckoff, of 402 East Sixth street, was united in marriage to Rudolph Schoverling, of Brooklyn, N. Y. Rev. J. W. Richardson performed the ceremony. Only the immediate family were present.

BILLY RUNYON MAY BE A G. O. P. MAYOR

Republican Slate For City Election Being Fixed Up.

J.A. MARTIN FOR COLLECTOR.

HIS SELECTION TO BE MADE BY COUNCIL IN BIRD'S PLACE.

Mayor Fisk is Calculated to Get the State Senatorial Nomination to Succeed Acting Governor Voorhees and Then the Second Ward Councilman Will Probably be Advanced—Calculated That Martin Will Capture Collectorship Nomination, But He Will Have Opposition—In Fire Department.

It is now practically settled that James Martin, first assistant chief of the fire department, will take the place to be left vacant by Collector Elias Bird, who has just been appointed postmaster. A few weeks ago this paper mentioned Mr. Martin's name as a possibility for this office. Mr. Martin will hold the office until the next election, when it is thought that he will be nominated by his party for an election to that office. That there will be opposition goes without saying. Among the other candidates for the office is William Abbott, the North Avenue insurance agent, and B. T. Barnes.

There is no doubt but what the Democrats will put a ticket in the field, but they may run it as a citizen's ticket, the same as was done at the last election. There is no denying the fact that there are many Republicans who are counting on giving their support to a citizen's ticket, and in this respect the Democrats seem hopeful.

It is stated on good authority that in part the Republican slate is made. It is said that Mayor Fisk will undoubtedly be a candidate for State Senator, and that Councilman William N Runyon will be a candidate for the office of Mayor of Plainfield.

In taking Mr. Martin from the fire department, that department will lose a valuable man. He has been associated with the department for a number of years and has won merited praise for his excellent judgment, cool head and management of affairs coming under his supervision. It is quite likely that his place will be taken by Second Assistant Chief J. W. Murray, Jr., who has also served the city in that department faithfully for years. This will leave another vacancy, that of Second Assistant. Just who will be placed there is not yet known.

PORCH FAIR A SUCCESS.

Young Women of the Borough Aid the Red Cross Society Fund.

While the weather was not all that could be desired, the porch fair for the benefit of the National Red Cross Society, held on the piazza at the residence of Edward A. Overton, of 91 Rockview avenue, proved a great success. The attendance was large and everything salable was purchased even before the end of the fair.

The sum of the afternoon was the Punch and Judy show conducted by Miss Grace Elting Overton and Miss Eleanor Thurston VanDeventer. Besides the usual characters, the American and Spanish soldiers were introduced. A number of funny sayings, many of them original, were given by the puppets.

The candy table was presided over by Miss Saidee Mae Howell and Miss Katherine Dwight. Miss Marguerite Burnett looked after the lemonade booth. Miss Eleanor Williams was in charge of the general table. The waitresses at the ice cream tables were the Misses Rita Pond, Virginia Hegeman, Isabel Milne and Dora Waring. Miss Grace E. Overton and Miss Eleanor T. VanDeventer had general charge over the affair.

While returns have not been made from all the tickets, a neat sum has already been netted for the benefit of the Red Cross work among the soldiers of our army.

Closing Exercises.

The Young Women's Mission Band of Trinity Reformed church held its closing session for the season in the lecture room of the church last Thursday. The president, Mrs. E. Woodruff, presided. The main part of the evening was devoted to questions and answers regarding China. This exercise was in charge of Miss Minnie Arnold. Refreshments were served by the entertainment committee consisting of Mrs. Will F. Williams, Miss Etta Krymer, Miss Ada Chandler, Miss Minnie Williams and Miss Mabelle Woodruff. The Band will not meet again until the first of next October.

The Senior Dance.

The class of '98 of the Plainfield Seminary has sent out invitations for the Senior dance to be held at the Seminary, on West Seventh street, Saturday evening, June 12th. The patronesses are Mrs. George A. String, Mrs. George W. VanBoskerck and Miss Arnold.

Charles A. Haynes, of First place, is confined to his home by illness.

SOLONS PROVIDE FOR BOROUGH EXPENSES.

Annual Budget Made Up By the Council Friday Night.

MONEY FOR GOOD STREETS.

COUNCILMAN WOOLSTON DEFEATED EFFORT TO REDUCE STREET FUND.

He Claimed That $4,000 Was Too Small a Sum to Make the Improvements That are Necessary—As a Result $2,400 Was Appropriated—Tax Rate Discussed and Mr. Valiant Said That It Ought Not to be Raised—Several Amounts of Back Taxes Deducted to the Credit of Mr. Spencer.

The members of the Borough Council held a very important meeting last Friday, but a greater part of the evening was taken up with the discussion of street work for the coming year. During the evening the appropriations for the year were fixed, and Mr. Woolston objected to an appropriation of $4,000 for the street work, claiming that streets could not be kept and approved for that amount. The discussion arose out of a suggestion offered by Mr. Valiant that no committee exceed the appropriation granted. As matter stands now there is about $1,800 left for the street department, including the amount already expended. The question of macadamizing Rockview avenue was brought up and discussed at great length. Some of the property-owners were willing to pay their proportionate share while others said that they would not unless compelled to by law. It was thought that inasmuch as the owners feel that way about the matter it would be just as well to let the matter rest for the present.

Mr. Woolston said that the building of the new school house on Watchung and Mountain avenues would compell the Council to do some macadamizing and flagging in that vicinity. He also said that there are other streets in the borough sadly in need of attention. Regarding crosswalks, he said that he would not recommend any more for this year, providing the appropriation was left at $4,000. The Council engaged in a general discussion, but no definite action was taken, except to give Mr. Woolston the authority to fix up some side streets, including Westervelt and Summit avenues.

Another discussion arose of the purchase of crushed stone. Some of the members thought that the Council was not under obligation to purchase the stone from Mr. Wilson, while others thought it would not be fair to go elsewhere when the Council practically agreed to get the stone of Mr. Wilson. No action was taken in this matter after a lengthy talk about it.

Mr. Valiant's resolution regarding the appropriations was then taken up, lowing amounts be decided upon for the several departments: Streets, $5,400; police, $4,000; fire department, $2,300; macadamizing and cleaning of streets, $4,000; poor, $1,800; water, $1,200; $500 fire bond certificate with interest, $6.50; interest on bonds of $34,000 bonds Watchung avenue improvement, $1,700; incidentals, $3,000; total $26,000.

Mr. Valiant offered another resolution to the effect that inasmuch as $6,500 will be received from back taxes, licenses, etc., the amount of balance to complete that appropriated will be $19,500, and that the assessor assess and the collector collect borough taxes to the amount of $19,500. The resolution was adopted.

Mr. Valiant stated that it would be unjust to the taxpayers to increase the tax rate this year in view of the fact that additional sums have been received by the borough through a recent action in having the books examined, and he suggested that no more than the amount appropriated be expended. This step on the part of Mr. Valiant brought out the above discussion. The matter was finally dropped for the present.

The monthly report of Clerk Arnold was presented and was as follows:

Borough, balance, $3,861.89; lights, $731.64; roads, deficit, $61.53; fire department, $1,134.72; poor, deficit, $983; paid county and State, $3,450.85; total balance, $1,803.87. Received from license fees, etc., by Clerk Arnold, $77.85.

Collector Brown reported that during the month of May $1,457.55 was collected. The summary of taxes collected to date amounts to $6,004.50. At present there is a borough balance of $4,047 17, and a balance of $366.21 to the Watchung avenue accounts.

A communication was received from Former Collector H. N. Spencer, in which he asked the Council to furnish him with all books, accounts, reports of the special committee and copy of resolution adopted by the Council regarding his account, also for a copy of the expert accountants' report. The communication was filed.

Special Marshal F. E. Winn was appointed a regular marshal by the Mayor and confirmed by the Council.

Mr. Woolston made a report for the street committee, and stated that during the past month $944.19 was expended on the borough streets.

Mr. MacLaughlin stated that during the past month Delinquent Tax Collector W. W. Rowley had collected $1,100. Later Mr. MacLaughlin moved that Mr. Bowley be allowed the sum of $110.70 for his services for the month of May.

On motion of Mr. MacLaughlin several tax amounts deducted by Mr. Spencer, when he was collector, were allowed by the Council. From time to time the Council will be obliged to make similar allowances according to a recent resolution adopted.

Mr. MacLaughlin offered a resolution that the sum of $39.45 be allowed Mrs. Carney, of Lincoln place, in accordance with her request at the last meeting that she be allowed certain exemptions from taxes on account of her being a widow of a soldier.

Mr. Carey stated that he had purchased a water wagon in New York about two months ago and he offered a resolution that the sum of $75 be drawn to pay for the same. Mr. Rogers offered a resolution that the chairman of the finance committee report each month the balance of money in each department. A resolution was offered by Mr. Valiant that the clerk pay to the credit of the borough collector all money received. These resolutions were all adopted by the Council, after which the meeting adjourned.

A MAIL BAG SOCIABLE.

A UNIQUE MISSIONARY MEETING IN CRESCENT AVENUE CHURCH.

Endeavorers Acquainted With What is Going On in All Fields of the World in a Very Interesting Manner.

A unique missionary meeting was held in the Crescent Avenue church last Friday under the auspices of the Christian Endeavor Society, by which the members were made acquainted with what is going on in the missionary fields of the world in such an interesting manner that the subject was void of its usual dry aspect.

The service was called a "foreign mail bag sociable," and the principal part of it consisted in reading missionary letters from missionaries stationed in all parts of the world, and directed to members of the Christian Endeavor Society. These letters were very interesting.

Dr. B. VanD. Hedges, who led the meeting, acted as postmaster, not accepting that office very willingly, he said, for two reasons—first, because there was no salary attached to it, and secondly, because it was not a civil service position, and he was likely to be ousted by his successor at any moment. But Dr. Hedges was not deposed during his short term and he made a most painstaking, careful, reading off the addresses on the envelopes with many laughable remarks.

As usual the mail was late, but soon the messengers were seen coming in the room, bearing between them a heavy United States mail bag which was borrowed for the occasion. The messengers were Mrs. L. W. Travell and Walter Cahoone, both dressed in Syrian costume according to their sex. Dr. Hedges claimed that the mail steamer, which brought this batch of mail, had circumnavigated the globe, nearly, and brought letters from foreign fields under every sun. Some of the letters were written by missionaries at these particular posts, to be read at this service, while others were made up for the occasion from magazine and newspaper clippings.

Dr. Hedges' first letter was dated Honolulu, and was addressed to Mrs. Charles Hall, who arose and read it. It told something of the work among the lepers in the Sandwich Islands, as carried on by the good Father Daniel in '65, and something about what is being done there today; Mr. King received a postal from Tokyo, Japan; Miss Mary Miller and Miss Mary Sutton letters from China; Miss Sadie Brown one from Jerusalem; Miss C. R. Yates, Miss Burnette and Miss Maria Newman letters from Syria; M. Voorhees one from Mayfield, and Miss Downey and Miss Sadie Hunter one each from the west coast of Africa.

The most interesting letter was received by I. W. Travell, and was written by Louis Walz, who is engaged in missionary work in North Carolina. Pictures of the lands represented and a number of curios from China were exhibited. The evening closed with a sociable, at which the refreshments consisted of orange glace, chocolates and marshmallows, the latter eaten with chop sticks. The social part was under the auspices of the social committee of which Mr. Travell is chairman.

New Method of Bookkeeping.

The Borough Council has decided to change the methods of keeping books for the borough, and the change will affect Clerk Arnold. As a result all money is to be placed to the credit of the borough and not to each department, as heretofore. The clerk is then to assign to each department the amount voted as the appropriation for that department. Each month a statement is to be made as to how the finances stand in each department. The change is made on the recommendation of Councilman Valiant.

WILL HAVE CLASS DAY

GRADUATES AT PLAINFIELD HIGH SCHOOL START AN INNOVATION

The Exercises Will Be Held in the Franklin Building on Tuesday of Commencement Week—Class Day Now.

The class of '98 of the Plainfield High School is preparing for an innovation of the old established customs at that educational institution. A "class day," something that has never been held in Plainfield before, is being planned, and the class is preparing to entertain its friends in a very pleasant manner before its members say good-bye to school life forever.

The day set for the exercises is Tuesday evening, June 21st, two days before Commencement. The exercises will be held in the assembly room of the Franklin building. Admission will be by invitation. Three hundred and fifty tickets will be issued.

The programme for the occasion will consist of the class ode, the class history and the class prophecy. Then the members of '98 are preparing for something else which they have not yet announced.

While the matter has been under advisement by the class of '98 for some time, it was not until Friday afternoon that it was definitely decided that a class day should be part of the graduation ceremonies. A meeting of the class was held yesterday afternoon. The details of the programme have not yet been settled, but they will be announced before the Class Day exercises take place.

WORK OF CHAPTER NO. 1.

Increase in Membership and a Well-Filled Treasury for Epworth League.

The work of Chapter No. 1, Epworth League, of the First M. E. church, for the past year, was reviewed at the annual meeting of that chapter held in Vincent chapel Friday evening. An increase in membership and a well-filled treasury were among the chief tokens of the activity of the League.

The meeting was presided over by the retiring president, Robert Davis. The report of the spiritual work was made by the first vice-president, Miss Anna H. Smalley. The report of the mercy and help committee was read by Miss Elsie Horne, second vice-president. Third vice-president Miss Ida Angleman gave the report of the literary committee. Miss Persis Snodgrass, as fourth vice president made the report of the social committee. The report of the treasurer, D. S. Dunavan showed a balance of $42.23 in the treasury.

James A. Stafford, as secretary, reported a membership of 117, a gain of 17 over the membership a year ago.

The election of officers was then held and resulted as follows: President, Harry Gee; first vice-president, Miss Jennie Davies; second vice-president, Miss Elsie Horne; third vice president, Miss Ida Angleman; fourth vice president, Miss Persis Snodgrass; secretary, Chas. Sprague; treasurer, Albert Steiner.

A Card of Thanks.

The committee in charge of the convention of the State Association of Letter-carriers, which was held on Decoration Day, extend their most hearty thanks to those citizens who so kindly assisted them in making it a success.

Class Day in the Borough.

Class Day in the borough school will be held June 21st, and the Commencement exercises will be held the evening of June 23d in the Y. M. C. A. Hall. The Class Day exercises will be held at the school.

Cure Constipation

and you cure its consequences. These are some of the consequences of constipation: Biliousness, loss of appetite, pimples, sour stomach, depression, coated tongue, nightmare, palpitation, cold feet, debility, dizziness, weakness, backache, vomiting, jaundice, piles, pallor, stitch, irritability, nervousness, headache, torpid liver, heartburn, foul breath, sleeplessness, drowsiness, hot skin, cramps, throbbing head.

Ayer's Pills Are a Sure Cure for Constipation

Dr. J. C. Ayer's Pills are a specific for all diseases of the liver, stomach, and bowels.

"I suffered from constipation which assumed such an obstinate form that I feared it would cause a stoppage of the bowels. After vainly trying various remedies, I began to take Ayer's Pills. Two boxes effected a complete cure."

D. BURKE, Saco, Me.

"For eight years I was afflicted with constipation, which became so bad that the doctors could do no more for me. Then I began to take Ayer's Pills, and soon the bowels recovered their natural action."

THE PILL THAT WILL.

FAIR ENTERTAINERS ON THE LOCAL STAGE.

Closing Reception of Miss Addie Parker Jackson's Classes.

A VERY LARGE AUDIENCE.

A DELIGHTFUL PROGRAMME WAS RENDERED DURING THE EVENING.

The Reception Was Held in Y. M. C. A. Hall Thursday Evening—It Included an Eastern Temple Drill and a Scarf Drill, Numerous Recitations and a Farce of One Act—The Monologue by Miss Constance Patton Was One of the Hits of the Evening—The Young Women Received Many Bouquets.

As a fit closing for a very successful year, the pupils of Miss Addie Parker Jackson's classes in physical culture, gave a reception in the Y. M. C. A hall last Thursday. The programme showed the large audience that crowded the hall, the success of Miss Jackson's methods and her ability and skill as a teacher.

The programme opened with a flag march by the members of her class to the tune of "The Star Spangled Banner." They were all gowned in white and carried flags. Miss Mabel Maxson acted as accompanist. Then followed an "Eastern Temple drill." The exercises were adapted from the the various forms of Oriental worship. The young women taking part in it were gowned in white and wore red sashes. They were the Misses Ethel Bowen, Evelyn Benton, Alice Conast, Euphemia Demarest, Katharine Dwight, Aimee Emmons, Stephanie Krom, Lydia Loiseaux, Cora Lains, Marie Newman, Lucy Pound, Constance Patton, Elsie Smith and Ella Serrell.

Following it was a scarf drill by the younger girls. They, too, were gowned all in white. The scarfs were red and white and made a charming effect. The participants were the Misses May Bachelor, Lucie Budlong, Jean Dunham, Edith DeLong, Mabel Pound, Norma Northrop, Katherine Rocap, Ella Serrell, Margaret Townsend and Lena VanCampen.

"The Ballad of Tonio Manzi," a recitation full of action, was well given by Miss Lucy Pound. "Ten Robber Toes" was a little recitation, for a little girl, Miss Laura Van Campen. The selection given by Jerry Manning, "The Flag Goes By," was received with much applause. He was presented with a handsome flag. Miss Mabel Pound recited "Praying for Shoes" very satisfactorily. The first of the costume recitations, "Little Red Riding Hood," was given by Miss May Batchelor, who acted the character most charmingly.

Miss Margaret Townsend, although a little tot, evinced a decided talent in her pleasing little recitation, "For the Slumber Islands, Ho." "Lucy's First Swimming Lesson" was a humorous selection by Miss Euphemia Demarest. "Afternoon Tea" was well given by Miss Lucie Budlong. Miss Katherine Dwight made a charming "Evangeline" and her rendition of a part of the well-known poem was decidedly satisfactory.

"The Coming Out of Miss Cummings," a monologue by Miss Constance Patton, was one of the events of the evening. It was the eve of the 'coming out" of an up-to-date "bud" of seventeen from the far west. Miss Patton carried out the entire piece with an ease and lack of consciousness that displayed much ability.

A sweet little poem, "The Pride of Battery B," was pleasingly given by Miss Katherine Rocap. "Molly" was the title of Miss Jean Dunham's excellent recitation. There was humor and pathos combined in the "Volunteer Organist," which was well given by Miss Lydie Loiseaux. Miss Edith DeLong made a very pretty "grand ma" in her character recitation. "When Grandma Was a Little Girl."

A pathetic story, "Mary Elizabeth," was particularly adapted to the abilities of Miss Aimee Emmons, who gave it with much effect.

The "Village Gossip," as recited by Miss Ella Harold Serrell, was very realistic. "College Commencement" was effectively given by Miss Marie Newman.

The programme closed with a farce in one act, "A Blind Attachment." It was well given and brought down the house. The characters were: Mrs. Philips, Miss Elsie Smith; Mary Philips, daughter to Mrs. Philips, Miss Cora Lains; Miss Maria Fosdick, aunt to Mr. Philips, Miss Stephanie Krom; Elinor Christy, school friend to Mary, Miss Ethel Bowen; Mrs. Fogarty, boarding house keeper, Miss Alice Conant.

All those who took part were remembered by their friends with handsome bouquets. A large bouquet of roses, a gift from her pupils, was presented to Miss Jackson by the head usher, Henry W. Brower. The other ushers were Walter T. Serrell, Lindley M. Hillman and Fred Shepard.

The Misses Ettridge, of Watchung avene, have gone to Sheepshead Bay for the summer.

STUPENDOUS WORK IN PLAN OF COUNTY TROLLEY

CIVIL ENGINEER HUBBARD HAS COMPLETED HIS SURVEY OF PROPOSED ROUTE.

The Boulevard Will Commence on North Avenue in This City—Lots of Buildings Are in the Way and Will Have to Be Removed—Will Change Topography of the Whole Adjoining Territory.

There is no subject of such general interest to the citizens of Union county at present as the proposed county boulevard from Elizabeth to Plainfield, with the trolley line running its entire length. The making of such a boulevard and the sale of the franchise for the trolley road is now within the power of the Union County Board of Freeholders, since the Squire bill became a law and received the Governor's signature.

That the Board of Freeholders is considering such action is known. Plans for the proposed thoroughfare are now completed and the Board is awaiting the completion of the estimates of its cost. Then the capitalists of the State will be given a chance to bid for the franchise. The present plan is, should the highest bid cover or exceed the cost of the building of the great roadway through the county, the franchise will be sold under such restrictions as the Freeholders may decide on to the highest bidder, and the money expended to buy necessary property, move the buildings that are now in the path of the proposed boulevard, and construct the road itself. Thus would the county secure a magnificent road and speedway of twelve miles in length through the finest part of New Jersey, and at no expense to itself.

The plans of the county boulevard and its proposed course have been completed by Engineer Frank J. Hubbard, of this city. They give an excellent idea of what changes to property the widening of the road to 100 feet, the proposed width of the boulevard, will necessitate.

The trolley road will start from Watchung avenue on Third street, and will continue eastward on that street to Richmond street and thence to North avenue where the boulevard proper begins. Third street and Richmond street will not be widened, and only a single track will be placed in those streets.

North avenue is 66 feet wide. The additional 34 feet will be taken from the north side, starting at Richmond street. The Sorensen meat market, at the corner of Richmond street and North avenue, will have to be removed entirely. The next building in the way is the old oil-cloth works, which has a frontage of 120 feet on North avenue. It will be necessary to take 30 feet off the front. The works of the Aluminum Plate and Press Company, at the corner of Berckman street, with a frontage of 100 feet on North avenue, will have to be moved back thirty feet, or else have a portion of the front removed.

There is some talk of making a bow in the road to pass south of these buildings, but such a move would interfere with the freight house yard.

At the corner of Hull street, a residence belonging to A. J. Gavett will have to be moved back. On the opposite corner, a house, the property of the Mutual Life Insurance Company, will have to be moved back thirty feet. The house and lot at the corner of Johnson avenue will be wiped out entirely. The adjacent lots are all low and the loss of the thirty-four feet in front will probably spoil that property.

Near the corner of Leland avenue, beyond the Netherwood station, two small houses will have to go, but there is plenty of room to move them back. Three houses on the Taylor and MacDonald property will meet the same fate, but the lots are deep and will not be injured. From that tract to Terrill road, however, the lots are shallow and will be injured by the widening of the street.

Through Fanwood, North avenue is now quite winding. The extra property for the boulevard will be so taken as to straighten it, taking off the turns but following the same general line. In Fanwood borough and township, only four buildings will be required to be moved. One of these is the present postoffice near the Fanwood station.

The property to be taken for the widening of the road is, through Fanwood, taken from first on one side and then on the other as the turns in the road necessitate. At Westfield avenue, it returns again to the north side.

Without interruption the boulevard continues to Westfield, moving one house only, to Charles street. Beyond that thoroughfare, it is the intention to run the road right through the town of Westfield a hundred feet wide. It will be necessary to purchase the property of Mrs. Mary E. Cox, corner of North Broad street and North avenue. The house of John M. Clark will have to be moved back. The road will take the corner off of the Methodist church lot, leaving the church itself twenty feet from the sidewalk while the trolley will be seventy feet away.

The little building on the point formed by Broad street and Westfield avenue will be moved an end to front on North avenue, and its former site converted into the new boulevard.

The line of the proposed widening takes in the handsome brick building now occupied by The Union County Standard. This it will be necessary to move, or else build a new one on the remainder of Alfred E. Pearsall's lot which is still vacant. Over a half of the new bowling alleys and clubhouse of the Westfield Social Club, fronting on Prospect street, are within the limits of the proposed boulevard. They will have to be torn down and rebuilt elsewhere.

Across the way, the front of the livery stable on the property of Theodore S. Bird will have to go. The Park Hotel, owned by Charles E. Burtis, will have to be demolished unless arrangements can be made to purchase the property in the rear and move it back.

The house at the corner of Elm street will have to be moved back as a third of the property comes in the limits of the new road. Two small houses of Mrs. Mary K. Cox and another building will have to be purchased to get the right of way. A triangular lot, belonging to C. E. Burtis, corner of Picton street, will be wiped out entirely.

There has been some talk of stopping the widening of the street between Westfield avenue and Picton street on account of the valuable property affected. The large grounds in front of the station would give an outlet and prevent crowding.

At present there is a decided zigzag in the county road beyond Picton street for the distance of a block. It is the intention to cut right through the block from Central avenue to Elmer street. It will take two-thirds of the property of Alfred E. Bormer, including his greenhouses, and will make it necessary to move three buildings on his property. The rear half of Ezra Miller's lot and a corner of the property of Mrs. Sarah Townley, both fronting on Central avenue, will be included in the path of the new boulevard.

On Elmer street a large portion of the property of John S. Irving is taken, but it will not interfere with his lumber yard. The adjacent house of L. M. Whittaker will have to be moved. The rear portion of Julius Scheele's property will also have to be acquired.

From Elmer street the boulevard will follow the course of North avenue, the strip of land necessary to widen the roadway coming from the north side. The sheds belonging to Woodruff will have to go first.

Then no buildings come inside the line until Garwood is reached where the new road house will have to be torn down or moved back. Three houses in Garwood will suffer the same fate.

The crook in the road between Garwood and Cranford will be straightened and the additional strip for the road way will shift to the south side on entering Cranford. It will run into Cranford on the south side and the twelve buildings included in its limits will have to go.

At Eastman street, the widening will end and the road way and trolley tracks will follow the present course of North avenue past the post office block to Alden street. It was suggested that the boulevard follow a course behind the post office block and continue a hundred feet wide.

The extra property for the enlarged roadway will, from the bridge over the Rahway river, be acquired on the north side. The bride will have to be widened. Ten houses will have to be moved, but the Episcopal church at the corner of Forrest avenue will not be touched.

The road will then continue through Union township on the county road, which at that point changes its name from North avenue to Westfield avenue. It will narrow up to pass under the present bridge where the Lehigh Valley railroad crosses. Many houses are in the path of the enlargement in Roselle, every house on the north side will have to be moved or torn down.

In Elizabeth, the widening stops at Orchard street. No houses are affected in that city. The boulevard then stops. The east bound trolley track will go along Westfield avenue connecting with the present line on Morris avenue, while the west bound track will follow Orchard street, connecting with Morris avenue and thence to the railroad station.

At the meeting of the Board of Freeholders at Elizabeth Thursday a special committee of three was appointed to go over the route of the county trolley and estimate the value of the property which will have to be bought and the cost of moving the houses. This committee is composed of Louis Quien, a contractor and engineer, of Elizabeth; Mr. Wilcox, a builder, of Westfield; and John D. Runyon, the coal dealer, of this city. The members of the committee are to report at a meeting to be held in two weeks. It was the desire of the Board to have this committee composed of men who were well acquainted with the value of real estate.

SMOTHERED TO DEATH.

TWO-MONTHS-OLD BABY SLEPT TOO CLOSE TO ITS MOTHER.

Mr. and Mrs. William Hall's Daughter Died During the Night—Second Child Lost in That Way—Parents Grief-Stricken.

The two-months old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Hall, of Somerset street, was found dead in bed June 2d by its parents. When Mr. Hall arose at 5 o'clock to go to work he picked his little daughter up to kiss her good by when he discovered that she was dead. It was decided that the little one had been smothered by sleeping too close to the mother.

A peculiar circumstance in connection with the sad affair is that about a year ago when the family was living on what is now known as Watchung avenue another daughter, very young, was smothered in the same way and died. The parents are grief-stricken over the death of their child.

SOMERSET BOY GOES TO WEST POINT

Result of the Examination Held Under Direction of Congressman Howell.

The examination of candidates desiring appointment to West Point was held at New Brunswick Thursday, and there were thirteen who took the examination, five from Somerset county, five from Middlesex and three from Monmouth. The examinations in the six subjects—reading, spelling, arithmetic, grammar, geography and history, were conducted by the superintendent of schools of the three counties, each superintendent taking two subjects. The questions submitted were fair and well calculated to test the student's ability.

Somerset carried off the laurels, as three from Somerset county attained the highest averages, and from these, whose names will be submitted to Congressman Howell, the appointment will probably be made.

This is a splendid showing for Somerset's school facilities, and should spur pupils on to further work.

The representatives from the county who were examined were: Richard P McCullough, age 17 years, and Orville F. Waring, age 17, of North Plainfield; E. Llewellyn Bull, age 20, Basking Ridge; H. D. Aller, age 18, Peapack; Asher Lipman, age 16½, Bound Brook.

QUIET HOME WEDDING.

A Sister of Mrs. E. H. Ladd Married at Letter's Home.

A very quiet wedding was celebrated June 2d at the home of E. H. Ladd, of Franklin place, when Mrs. Ladd's sister, Miss Elizabeth Evans, of Westfield, was married to Henry Holbert Porter, of Hartford, Conn. The wedding was attended by the members of the two families and was a quiet affair.

The best man was Edgar F. Peck, of Norwich, Conn., and the ushers were Howard Atterbury, of Norwich, and Sheldon Peck, of Newark. Rev. Chas. Fiske, rector of St. Paul's Episcopal church, of Westfield, officiated.

Guests at a Wedding Reception.

The marriage of Anna L. Fowers to Joseph P. Gavin, of North Plainfield, which was solemnized at St. Joseph's church in Roselle Wednesday, June 1st, was followed by a very pleasant reception at the home of the bride's parents near Cranford. A large number of guests were present, among whom were the following from this city: The Misses Schartz, Miss Lizzie Gavin, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Arthur Neely, Den Gavin, Bert Vail, Werner Heidloff J. B. Martin, Lyman Spencer, E. M. Southard, John and Garret Powers, Thomas Hughes and wife, John Keely, Ernest Barrett and wife, and others.

The Alumni Reception.

Arrangements are now in progress for the alumni reception of the commencement exercises of the Plainfield High School which is to be held at the Casino, Thursday, June 23d. The committee in charge has announced that members of the alumni may purchase subscriptions for the reception from any member of the committee or by addressing the chairman, Miss Grace E. Overton, 91 Rockview avenue.

Coal Takes a Drop.

The driver of one of Rushmore & Company's heavy coal wagons attempted to drive up a steep bank on Watchung avenue Friday afternoon, opposite the rink, when a bolt broke and the wagon plunged down the bank to the gutter and there upset. As it was well filled with coal, the contents were strown over the street. No other damage was done to the wagon.

SCOTCH PLAINS WILL GET A TROLLEY ROAD

Township Committee Granted a Franchise Friday Night.

ONE TRACK PART THE WAY

IF ROAD IS WIDENED TROLLEY COMPANY WILL PAY FOR IT.

The Point at Issue in Granting a Franchise Was Whether the Property-owners or the Company Should Pay for Expense of the Changes to Allow Double Tracks—Company Finally Agreed to do the Work, and Then the Franchise Was Granted—Committee Consider That They Have a Model Franchise.

The township committee of Fanwood township met in the town rooms Friday evening at 8 o'clock to bring to its second reading the long delayed trolley franchise asked for by the Elizabeth and Westfield Street Railway Company. Chairman T. J. Nicholl called the meeting to order and trolley business was immediately taken up. The committee and their counsel, Wm. R. Coddington, together with Mr. Riker and Mr. Gaddis, representing the company, took up the franchise by sections, making such alterations as were suggested and agreed upon.

The only point that was argued or discussed to any extent was the section calling for a double track. This the property-owners along the route objected to, as the road is entirely too narrow for anything but a single track. But by widening the road to the sixty-six feet limit, called for by the township map, the double track could be laid easily. The property-owners want the trolley but are not willing to tear up their fences and reset them for a double track unless the company will pay all expenses.

The company seems willing to be willing to do this, but the township committee wants the property owners to agree whether they will have it widened to the sixty-six foot limit or not. This was the point the property-owners have not agreed upon.

Mr. Nicholl, for the committee, assured the company that Scotch Plains wants the trolley as bad as the company wants to build it, but before granting a franchise the committee wished to be sure that they were protecting the interest of the property-owners, along the route and that all would be satisfied. This was the committee's intentions and the point was argued pro and con without making any changes in the committee.

It was finally agreed upon that the section should be amended so as to read, "A single track only shall be laid from Forest avenue to what is known as Cook's corner, and from Cook's corner to the borough line, until such time, as the road shall be widened to the width of sixty-six feet, and the company shall bear all expense of widening said road."

The franchise was then passed to its third reading and on motion was taken up and the long delayed franchise was granted, all voting in the affirmative. So in nine months from March 1st, 1898, Scotch Plains should have communication with the outside world. It has been rather slow and discouraging work, but the people can rest assured that the franchise, as granted, is a model one and protects the township in every way.

INCREASED Y. M. C. A. INTEREST.

Results of Work Shown in the Report of Directors.

At the regular meeting of the Board of Directors of the Y. M. C. A. held Thursday the following officers and directors were present:

E. R. Ackerman, A. B. Beets, E. L. Bonny, Stephen Caboone, A. C. Dayboyteaux, H. J. Martin, W. D. Murray, H. C. Newman, R. H. Bedford, Conover Rittenhouse, Nelson Runyon and John Vallant. The following were some of the interesting matters presented in the reports: The average attendance at the Sunday afternoon meetings has been 138 per cent. larger than for the corresponding month last year, and the Bible training showed an increase of 37 per cent. Men were helped to work, recommended to boarding houses and furnished with letters of introduction.

Matters of too confidential nature for publication were also presented. Mr. Heywood reported for the outdoor work of the physical department.

His Services Appreciated.

As a pleasant reminder of nearly twenty years of faithful service at the Potter Press Works, former Councilman Arthur T. Gallup was presented with a valuable grandfather's clock when he retired from his position last Friday. The present was a gift from his fellow-employes in the office. Mr. Gallup was wholly unaware of the intended surprise and found it difficult to express in words his appreciation for the gift. Mr. Gallup resigned his position to go into partnership with John M. Hetfield in the ice business, and both have the best wishes of all for success.

ALL ABOUT THE FLAG.

A PATRIOTIC SIDE TO A STRAWBERRY FESTIVAL.

Unique Event Arranged by the Women of the Seventh-Day Baptist Church—Informal Programme Very Interesting.

Strawberries and flags were the all important features at the festival in the chapel of the Seventh-Day Baptist church June 1st. It was really a strawberry festival, but the committee from the Ladies' Society for Christian Work of the church, under whose auspices it was given, departed from the beaten path and made it altogether a very delightful affair.

The main room of the chapel was gay with American flags which were hung about the walls in an artistic fashion. One of the alcoves was devoted to the serving of lemonade and was fitted out as a parlor lighted by electric piano lamps. Little tables were arranged in the parlors on which the prevailing decorations were in red and white. Here the refreshments were served.

The waitresses were all gowned in white, with red sashes and bows of ribbon on their jaunty little caps. A bunch of artificial strawberries, red and tempting, was worn on each of the caps. The waitresses were under the charge of Miss Luella Clawson and Miss Ida Randolph. They were: Miss Mary Green, Miss Carrie Randolph, Miss Etta Randolph, Miss Ernestine Smith, Miss Ida Spicer, Miss Jessie Utter and Miss Anna Woodruff.

The lemonade booth and its charming reception room were under the charge of Mrs. Frank J Hubbard and Mrs. Frank Smith.

An informal programme was arranged for the evening. Here the strawberries gave place to the flag as the central object of interest. Miss May Rose read a paper on "The Evolution of the Flag," telling in an interesting way the history of the Stars and Stripes. Then followed an essay on "The Symbolism of the Flag," by Miss Ernestine Smith, which was of equal interest.

A chorus of young girls and children, gowned in white, next sang Rudyard Kipling's "Recessional," after it had been read aloud by Rev. A. E. Main.

The third of the series of papers on "The Proper Use of the Flag" was read by Miss Luella Clawson. A short poem, "The Flag Goes By," was recited by Charles Neagle. Then the chorus ended the programme with "Red, White and Blue. D. E. Titsworth acted as master of ceremonies. A social hour followed.

The festival was arranged by a committee of which Mrs. D. E. Titsworth was the chairman. She was assisted by Miss Mabel Mitchell, Miss Mabel Maxson, Mrs. F. A. Dunham, Mrs. T. W. Saunders, Miss Ramsay and Mrs. Wm. C Hubbard.

Hospital Donations.

Donations for the month of May at the Muhlenberg Hospital have been as follows: Mrs. Wright, flowers; Mrs Julius, 6 glasses of jelly; Friend, a bottle of cod liver oil; Mrs. Denton, literature; Miss Hagan, Sunday papers; Mrs. Brooks, 6 quarts of milk; Mrs. Clay, magazines; Dr. Rushmore, flowers; Miss Webster, literature; Mrs. Kuhn, flowers; Warren chapel C. E., flowers; M. An Old Plainfielder Interred.

The body of the late Stephen L. Miles was interred Thursday beside the remains of his wife in Evergreen cemetery, Plainfield avenue. Mr. Miles was the father of James O. Miles, of Somerset street, Mrs. George Bullman, of Washingtonville, and Rev. E. S. Miles, of Pine Bush, Sullivan county, N. Y. He died at Jersey City March 4th, 1884, and the body was interred at that time in the cemetery at Pine Bush, N. Y. He was a former resident of this city.

For Violating Game Laws.

Several weeks ago Howard Breach and William Abbott, of Blackwell's Mill, were arrested by Game and Fish Warden Charles Sebring for having set lines in the Raritan river. They were taken to Somerville, tried and convicted. The sentence was that they pay a fine of $25 each or spend 25 days in the county jail. They took the latter and their time is now about completed.

Hurt While Playing Golf.

While playing golf on the links of the Hillside Tennis and Golf Club Friday afternoon Miss Edmee Corlies, of Road Ending, was struck on the ankle by a golf ball. A sprain was the result. She was assisted to her home.

FIRST WEDDING OF THE MONTH OF ROSES.

Fashionable Nuptials of Worth-Long Celebrated

IN HOLY CROSS CHURCH.

CEREMONY PERFORMED BY REV. T. LOGAN MURPHY.

The Church Prettily Decorated for the Occasion and Filled With an Admiring Assemblage of the Young Couple's Friends—Bride Looked Handsome in a White Satin Gown, Trimmed With Duchess Lace—Names of Those Who Took Part in the Ceremony—Reception Held at Bride's Home.

One of the first June weddings of the season took place June 1st, the bride being Miss Mara Louise Long, the second daughter of General Eli Long, of the borough, and the groom George Cokelet Worth, of Grove street. The wedding was solemnized in Holy Cross church at 8 o'clock, Rev. T. Logan Murphy performing the ceremony. It was one of the events of the season, and was very pretty and select As both people are well known in the younger society set of the borough, the company that gathered at the church and afterwards at the house was a fashionable and congratulating one. The police were summoned, and Mayor Pisk also came. An investigation was made and it was found that some one had thrown kerosene inside the window, which had been left open, saturating the woodwork, lace curtain, a light tablecloth and the shade.

A match had been applied and, had it not been for the quick work of the two men, the fire might have gotten under good headway before it was discovered.

The Bow belongs to Postmaster John Hetfield, and is occupied by a dozen families, mostly all colored. Scott had no insurance on his furniture. He cannot imagine who would have tried to burn him out, as he has no enemies.

A few days ago Augustus Runyon, who is in charge of some work being done around the Row, lost several valuable tools which were stolen out of a tool box belonging to A. B. Thorn, the plumber. At the same time a thief took a pocket-book containing $8 and a few rings out of a vest which hung in the box, and which belonged to one of the workmen.

NUPTIAL EVENTS CELEBRATED.

Two Couples of Popular Young Colored People Wedded.

Thursday the marriage of Miss Estella Martin to William Anderson, both of 421 East Sixth street, was celebrated at the above residence. Rev. Mr. Groves, pastor of the Mt. Zion A. M. E. church officiated. Miss Lobenia Turpin acted as bridesmaid, while Walter Daniel was the best man. A reception followed the wedding, and there was a large attendance of colored society people of this city and neighboring towns. Mr. and Mrs. Anderson will reside at 521 East Sixth street.

The marriage of Miss Josephine Davis, of Harmony street, to Edward Banks, of Scotford, Va., was celebrated last evening at the home of the bride. The ceremony was performed by Prof. Laws, of Scotford, Va. The bridesmaid was Mrs. Scott, sister of the bride, and James Ross, brother-in-law of the bride, was best man. The bride and groom left last evening for a short honeymoon, after which they will reside in the borough.

Cleveland Wedding.

An out-of-town wedding of interest to many Plainfielders is that of Collins P. Bliss, assistant professor in the engineering department of the New York University, and Miss Jessamine Coon, of Cleveland, O., which took place in the latter city June 1st. Prof. Bliss spent his boyhood in this city, being the elder son of Rev. Dr. John C. Bliss, former pastor of the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church.

AN INCENDIARY ATTEMPT

A LIVELY BLAZE STARTED IN HETFIELD ROW THURSDAY NIGHT.

A Quantity of Kerosene Oil Thrown in a Window in the Apartments and Then a Match Touched by an Unknown Party.

What seems to have been a deliberate attempt at incendiarism was discovered at a late hour Thursday, while Frank Scott and his family, colored, who live at 314 Arlington avenue in one of the apartments in "Hetfield's Row," were out calling some unknown person saturated one of the window casings of their parlor with kerosene and touched a match to the wood. The blaze was discovered just in time to prevent a disastrous conflagration by two neighbors.

Scott and his wife left their rooms about 8 o'clock, or a little after, and went over the brook. It was nearly 10 o'clock when Thomas Smith and Augustus Johnson, colored, who live in the same building, saw a bright light in Scott's front room. Both men knew that Scott and all his folks were away, and suspected that something had taken fire in the parlor.

Smith and Johnson ran up to the front door and putting their weight against it forced the lock, and tore down the blazing curtain. A pail of water, judiciously thrown over the window-sill and carpet, put out the remaining sparks.

When Scott and his wife came home, they were very much surprised at what had happened. The police were summoned, and Mayor Pisk also came. An investigation was made and it was found that some one had thrown kerosene inside the window, which had been left open, saturating the woodwork, lace curtain, a light tablecloth and the shade.

A match had been applied and, had it not been for the quick work of the two men, the fire might have gotten under good headway before it was discovered.

There are three conditions: When the blood is poor; When more flesh is needed; When there is weakness of the throat or lungs.

There is one cure: that is Scott's Emulsion.

It contains the best cod-liver oil emulsified, or digested, and combined with the hypophosphites and glycerine. It promises more prompt relief and more lasting benefit in these cases than can be obtained from the use of any other remedy.

THE CENTAUR COMPANY, NEW YORK CITY.

SAID HE WAS ON HIS JOURNEY TO HEAVEN.

Strange Hallucination of a Demented New York Man.

HAD TRAMPED ALL DAY.

FOUND IN NETHERWOOD AND TAKEN IN CHARGE BY A POLICEMAN.

Proved to be Daniel Crossingham, a Resident of Fifth Avenue, Who Had Slipped Out of His House Early in the Morning and Could Not Explain How He Got to Plainfield—Taken Care of by Brother Masons Until His Son Arrived Late at Night and Took His Demented Father Home.

Patrolman Higgins picked up a demented man wandering around Netherwood Monday night, and after bringing him to Chief Grant, it was discovered that he was Daniel Crossingham, a New York man. He was able to tell his own and his son's name. The son was communicated with at once, and later in the night came to this city and took his father home.

Crossingham was well-dressed, and looked as though he was in good circumstances. His address is 1,390 Fifth avenue, New York, where he lived with his son. Early Monday morning, he said, he arose, slipped out of the house, and while no one was around, locked the door and set off on a journey.

The man could not tell which way he had gone, or how he came to be in this city. He had a little money, and must have ridden some part of the distance, although the police say that his shoes looked as if he had walked every step of the way. He was very tired. He made known to the Chief that he was a Free Mason, and he was at once taken to William Sebring and Frank Corliell. They made arrangements with Jacob Blimm, who keeps a hotel, to care for Crossingham for the night.

In the meanwhile the Chief had telephoned to Police Headquarters in New York, and they in turn notified the man's son, Edwin. The latter came to this city at once, and took the father away on the 2:14 train.

Crossingham was a man of about 65 years of age, and made use of some strange expressions when talking to the people he met. To some he said that he was hungry and wanted some of the nice oysters his son used to get at Macey's. To others he said that he was on his way from earth to heaven, where his son had already gone. He was perfectly harmless and a good talker. The son is a bicycle manufacturer in New York.

Promised to Leave Town.

Two vagrants, who gave their names as William Smith and Thomas Holland, were picked up by Officer Higgins in the Netherwood district Monday night and locked up in the city jail for safe keeping. One of them was found asleep in one of Manning's wood wagons, and the other had made a soft bed of his coat on the Netherwood station platform. Sentence was suspended in both cases with the condition that they get right out of the city. This they promised to do.

CHILDREN DAY EXERCISES.

First of the June Juvenile Events Held in the Christian Church.

Children Day exercises were held last Sunday at the Christian church on Grove street. The church was decorated with flowers and American flags. The exercises were in charge of Superintendent John Staats, of the Sunday-school.

The exercises consisted of singing by the school, an address of welcome by John Baldwin, a two-minute address by the superintendent, and exercises by the infant department. There were recitations by Miss Nanie Ackerman, Helen Woolley and Etta Staats, while a vocal duett was given by the Misses DeMott, and a reading by Miss Belle DeMott. A collection was given by the scholars at the close while the collection was being taken. There was a very large attendance of members and friends at the church, and a profitable evening was spent by all.

A BRAVE BROTHER.

Five Year-Old Saved From Drowning by Nine-Year-Old Lad.

A narrow escape from drowning and a subsequent rescue by a nine-year-old lad was an exciting event over in the borough Sunday afternoon. Frank Haurand, the five year-old son of Joseph Haurand, was playing by the waters of Stony brook, where it is quite deep.

His brother, Henry, who is but nine years old, was playing with him. Suddenly Frank saw something near the water and reached for it. He missed his footing, and fell into the water.

Henry, instead of being frightened and screaming, bravely jumped in the water to the rescue, and by holding on the bank, was able to seize his brother and hold him close to the bank until help arrived in the shape of the child's mother. Neither one was any the worse for the wetting.

MORE GOLF PLAYERS.

Board of Directors of Hillside Club Elect New Members.

At a meeting of the directors of the Hillside Tennis and Golf Club Monday night, the following were elected into active membership: Sinclair Stewart, Jr., Miss Julia Bodman, William C. Kinney, John B. Drayton, James R. Blake, J. Whitney Baker, Irving W. Clark and John Dumont.

The following were made associate members: Mrs. John B. Drayton, Miss Elizabeth M. Cone, Miss Isabella M. A. Duncan, Walter C. Scott, Miss Christina B. Scott, Miss Isabella M. Scott, Mrs. E. W. Hedges, Miss Frances S. Smith, Miss Evelyn W. Smith, Miss Helen Harman and Miss Elsie Harman.

Little Girl Has a Party.

Miss Mildred Long, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. F. A. Long, of Summit avenue, gave a birthday party Monday afternoon from 4 to 6 o'clock in honor of her fifth birthday. The little Miss invited several of her friends, and the hours were passed very pleasantly in games, etc. Refreshments were served.

Will Be a Pleasant Trip.

Mr. Honeyman has reduced the time of his foreign tour of June 23d to fifty days and limited it to Great Britain. It includes coaching, the Isle of Wight, English lakes and plenty of time in London. His circulars can be had at 181 North avenue.

TROLLEY ASKS TO GO EAST IN THE CITY.

Long Delayed Application Finally Appears in the Council.

DAY FOR HEARING TO BE SET

SITE FOR FIRE DEPARTMENT HOUSE CHOSEN IN THE WEST END.

Land on West Fourth Street, Opposite Darrow Street, Bought From E. M. French for the Purpose—Cost of Building and Site Will be $5,000—Mayor Fisk Wants to Make the Position of Policeman Secure From Political Influence—Ordinance Introduced Authorizing Electric Wires Put Under Ground.

The city fathers spent much time last Monday in transacting business of more or less importance. There were many new measures and ordinances introduced. Some matters were laid over until next Monday evening when the Council meets again, while other matters went through in a routine manner. All of the members except Mr. Moffett were present. Progress was made regarding the location of a new firehouse in the West End, while the effort to give the city bike coats life tenure was laid over for one week. Nothing was done regarding the collectorship, as was expected, but the matter will probably come up at the next meeting, when it is believed that Collector Bird will tender his resignation to the Council. As soon as he does James A. Martin will be appointed to the place. Other business transacted will be found in the report as follows:

After Mrs. Rosetta Caspar, in a communication, asked the Council to transfer the hotel license, recently held by her late husband, to herself, the regular order of business was suspended, and bids for the construction of storm sewers in the city were received. The only bids were Patsy Christmas, and it was referred to the street committee. The regular order of business was then resumed, when an application from the Plainfield Street Railway, for an extension of the tracks, was received.

The routes asked for include a direct line through East Second street to Scotch Plains and another line from the corner of East Fifth street and and Richmond street to the corner of Richmond and East Second streets. A single line is asked for in case at some future time the company will run a line out to Hillside cemetery. Mr. Adleman says that the company has two-thirds of the consents along the line.

President Baker referred the matter to the street and sewer committee, but Mr. Hetfield desired that it should go into the hands of the laws and ordinance committee, as it will be necessary for a suitable ordinance to be drafted. Mr. Hetfield finally waived his claim and concurred in having the matter go to the street committee.

Mr. Barrows offered a motion that an evening be set for a public hearing on the trolley matter, and that the time be advertised as prescribed by law.

Residents on East Front street asked for four electric lights between Leland avenue and Terrill road. A long petition was received from property owners on Park avenue asking Council to take steps toward repaving Park avenue with asphalt pavement. Mr. Barrows stated that the matter would be attended to at the proper time, when all wires are placed underground.

The Plainfield Electric Light Company and the Plainfield Water Supply Company reported to the Council the location of electric lights and fire hydrants as ordered by the Council. They are now 268 fire hydrants in the city.

Mayor Fisk appointed Michael McCarty and John Keller special police, and they were confirmed by the Council.

The Board of Engineers recommended that E. P. Thorn, of Gazelle Engine Company, be placed on the exempt list, and the recommendation was adopted.

Building Inspector T. O. Dosne reported the granting of fifteen permits during the past month, and Street Commissioner Gavett reported the granting of twenty-three sewer permits during the same time.

Mr. Van Herwerden, of the finance committee, moved that in anticipation of the collection of taxes, the sum of $20,000 for the general fund, and $3,000 for the fire and poor fund, be borrowed.

Mr. Barrows stated that the work of repairing West Fourth street was started yesterday, in respone to a request of the property-owners on that street. At the request of Mayor Fisk, Mr. Barrows offered an ordinance which provides that no member of the police department shall be removed for political reasons, and so long as he conducts himself rightly and retains his residence in the city. If a member of the police department is absent five days without leave, he shall lose his job.

On Mr. Hetfield's motion the ordinance was referred to the laws and ordinance committee. Mr. Hetfield said that he thought the State laws carried the points mentioned in the ordinance, and he saw no reason for its adoption. However, it will be reported upon at a later meeting.

Mr. Runyon reported on the matter regarding the location of a new fire department house in the West End. He said that the committee had obtained an option on a lot, located on West Fourth street opposite Darrow avenue, 50x113, owned by Elston M. French and that the lot can be purchased for $275. This location, Mr. Runyon said, is not an ideal one, but the many advantages make it desirable. He also said that E. V. French, architect, had furnished plans for a suitable fire house, and the same can be purchased for $50. The building will be erected under the supervision of Inspector Doane, and thus an architect's fees will be saved. Mr. Runyon then offered a resolution that the lot be purchased, also the plans as furnished by E V. French. The resolution was adopted. Mr. Runyon stated that the entire cost of property and fire house would not exceed $5,000. The resolution offered by Mr. Runyen provides for the receiving of sealed bids for the erection of the fire house, and that bids be advertised for.

Mr. Barrows offered an ordinance which provides for the placing of the electric light wires underground. The ordinance obligates the Plainfield Electric Light Company not to charge more than the present rate, while the city can give any company the franchise to furnish light for the city. At the end of twenty five years the city can purchase the plant if it desires to. If not it can lease the same for terms of five years. All city offices are to be lighted free of cost. Copies of the ordinance will be sent to each member of the Council and at the meeting next Monday night the ordinance will be considered.

Mr Barrows offered a resolution to the effect that the collector of taxes be authorized to accept assessments levied for the widening of Westervelt avenue, and that payment of the assessments be demanded.

Mr Hetfield called up the ordinance which amends the liquor ordinance. The matter was very thoroughly discussed, although nearly all the members confessed ignorance as to the meaning of some parts of the ordinance.

Mr. Hetfield wanted the word "arrested" taken from the ordinance and the word "convicted" substituted, where it applied to a saloon keeper being compelled to apply as a new applicant if detected in committing any crime. Mr. Barrows objected to that change, and while he admitted that he did not altogether like the word "arrest" he preferred it to the word "convict." His latter case it might be very hard to convict a man. There were other members who had views on both sides of the question. Regarding the changing of the hour to 11:30 instead of 11 o'clock as the time for closing the saloon, that section was stricken out. After much threesome debate the ordinance was finally laid on the table until the meeting next Monday evening. The Council then adjourned.

Refused to Prosecute.

The complaint against Henry Smith, of Westervelt avenue, has been dismissed by City Judge DeMeza because of the prosecuting attorney's failure to prosecute. Codington & Swackhamer, who represented Smith, appeared before the City Judge last week and asked to have the complaint dismissed, and this was granted. Smith was arrested on complaint of his wife, who charged him with calling her names and annoying her on Watchung avenue one Sunday.

A Patriotic Mess.

The flag that is raised daily on the top of the mountain every morning is performed by Abram Freeman, the colored patriot, who resides in that vicinity and is employed by Alexander Thorn, the grocer.

Fat Over the Term.

The case of Wallace V. Miller against Mrs. H. E. Rider, demand for a broker's commission, which was to have come up on appeal at Elizabeth, was postponed Monday until next term.

Baptist Delegates.

Rev. Dr. D. J. Yerkes, Mrs. White and Miss Thickstun, of the First Baptist church, went to Newark today to attend the annual meeting of the East New Jersey Baptist Association.

Personal From the Central.

Dr. Murray, secretary of the Board of Health, has received a letter from the Central Railroad officials saying that they will begin work on the Clinton avenue storm sewer at once.

To Talk to Children.

Dr. Robert Lowry, of Madison avenue, will speak to the children of the Park Avenue Baptist church at the Children's Day exercises there next Sunday morning.

Judge of Oratorical Contest.

FACTORY ALL ABLAZE.

ladders could be raised to the windows. The firemen then gained control of the flames rapidly and after twenty minutes hard work had the fire about out.

The residence of John Day, 303 East Fourth street, caught fire. The fire spread under the cornice of the house and the firemen had to tear off the cornice to extinguish it. The side of the house was badly scorched. The furniture was badly damaged by the water. A dozen bags of flour were stored away on the upper floor, but the firemen rescued them without damage. The house was owned by Mr. Day. The loss to the house was $300, and $100 to the furniture, all of which was covered by insurance.

In the store room on the second floor of the factory was $2,500 worth of bicycle sundries. This was scorched and partially ruined. The salvage will be about seventy five per cent. $1,500 worth of stock of bottle stoppers and the like was ruined. The machinery, valued at over $1,000, was not destroyed owning to the quick response of the firemen who did not give the flames a chance to remain there long.

The building is the property of Charles T. Nightingale, who is the head of the Climax Stopper Company. The upper floor was gutted by the fire while the first floor was flooded. The loss to the building will amount to $1,000. Mr. Nightingale is out of town and the exact amount of the insurance is not known. The loss will undoubtedly be fully covered, however.

GOOD RACING COMING.

FINAL ARRANGEMENTS FOR MEET OF N. J. DRIVING ASSOCIATION.

The Meet Will Be Held at the Gentlemen's Driving Park June 22d and 23rd—Matinee Races Every Saturday.

After twenty years of quietude, the enthusiasts in the speeding of fast horses are preparing to give Plainfield a race meet equal to any held in the State or Metropolitan district.

This paper has already told of the organization of the Central New Jersey Driving Association. Monday the Association held a meeting in the law offices of Reed & Goddington, President W. A. Goddington, of this city, presiding, to make final arrangements for the race meet that is to be held in this city the afternoons of June 22d and 23rd.

Beginning on Saturday afternoon, matinee races will be held at the Gentlemen's Driving Park in which the local trotters and pacers will take part. They will be held every Saturday afternoon this summer or until further notice.

The committees to take charge of the race meet were appointed and have begun an active campaign to interest the people of Plainfield in the coming races. The committees include a number of prominent Plainfield and North Plainfield business men and residents who are endeavoring to give a race meet that will excel anything of the kind ever held there.

The race meet will be essentially for Plainfielders and will be under the best of management. There will be no objectionable features and everything will be so arranged that women and children can attend and witness the races.

It is necessary for the promoters of the meet to guarantee a large amount of money to bring horses here from all over the State. There will be over fifty participants in the different events and their expenses must be met. While the contests will be for money purses, they will be competitive races from start to finish. With this end in view, the promoters are trying to make it plain that they need the support of the people of this city. With good men at the head, fast horses and clean racing, they deserve the aid of their fellow-citizens in trying to furnish good sport and elevate it as well.

New Members for Trinity.

At the communion service in Trinity Reformed church Sunday morning there was a very gratifying accession to the membership of the church, nine persons being received, eight by letter and one on confession.

Two Ounces of Blood Daily

are added to your veins by taking one of Dr. Campbell's Red Blood Forming Capsuloids with each meal three times daily. This is the only Natural Iron Medicine known. It is the Natural Iron extracted from fresh Bullocks' Blood.

Another letter from Mrs. Cummings, the wife of the prominent Insurance agent of Main Street, Syracuse, N. Y. She has improved so much by taking Capsuloids since she last wrote us that she has of her own accord sent the following communication:

THE CAPSULOID COMPANY, New York.

GENTLEMEN:—Since I last wrote you I have steadily improved in health, owing to your Capsuloids. The only drawback was due to a fall I got down stairs, but I rapidly recovered from that and feel that I am almost entirely cured, though I have been taking your Capsuloids only two months and my ailments were several years. The Capsuloids have cured my indigestion completely; my stomach, which was so sore that I was afraid to eat anything, will now digest anything I eat; my strength and voice have increased. I still feel hot flushes at times, but I am improving so rapidly in every way that I will soon be rid of this. Both myself and my friends are surprised that such a terrible case of dyspepsia and indigestion as mine could be cured so quickly. It is all due to Capsuloids.

This is not a patent or secret medicine. It is prescribed largely by doctors.

A Prominent Physician.

A prominent New York physician in discussing the merits of Ripans Tabules with a brother M. D. said: "Several years ago I asserted that if one wished to become a philanthopist, and do a beneficent deed—one that would help the whole human race—nothing could be better than to procure the Roosevelt Hospital prescription, which is the basis of the Ripans Tabules, and cause it to be put up in the form of a lozchup and distributed among the poor."

Sales Increasing.

The largest retail drug store in America is that of Hegeman & Co. on Broadway in New York City. A reporter went there to learn how Ripans Tabules were selling bought a five-cent carton and asked:

"Do you have much call for these?"

He was referred to a gentleman who proved to be the head of the department. He said:

"The sale of Ripans Tabules is constant and is increasing. Our especially to the influential character of the testimonials in the daily press, and growing out of these, through the recommendation of friend to friend. Satisfaction with them is very general. When once they are begun I notice that a permanent customer is usually made. This, I believe, is through their intrinsic merit, which proves the bona fide character of the advertising. I think these are specially useful in the general run of stomach troubles."

An Elderly Lady.

An elderly lady living at Fordham Heights, a part of New York City, and who was known to be a warm advocate of Ripans Tabules for any case of liver trouble or indigestion, said to a reporter who visited her for the purpose of learning the particulars of her case: "I had always employed a physician and did so on the last occasion I had for one, but at that time obtained no beneficial results. I had never had any faith in patent medicines, but having seen Ripans Tabules recommended very highly in the New York Herald concluded to give them a trial, and found they were just what my case demanded. I have never employed a physician since, and that means a saving of $3 a call. A dollar's worth of Ripans Tabules lasts me a month, and I would not be without them now if it were my last dollar." At the time of this interview there were present two daughters who specially objected to their mother giving a testimonial which should parade her name in the newspapers, but to do this the elder lady argued: "There may be other cases just like mine, and I am sure it will be a great pleasure to recommending the Tabules to any one afflicted as I was. If the telling about my case in the papers enables some other sufferer to easily obtain to be as greatly benefited as I have been, I see no objection." The daughters, knowing how earnestly she felt about the benefit she had received, decided she was quite right.

TEN FOR FIVE CENTS. RIPANS ONE GIVES RELIEF

A new style packet containing TEN RIPANS TABULES enclosed in a paper carton (without glass) is now for sale at most druggists' in the United States. Ask for the 10 for 5 cent style. The 60 cent bottle contains a supply for one year. The 12 cent packet contains a supply for one week. The Ripans Tabules may be had of druggists generally. The Ripans Chemical Co., 10 Spruce St., New York. Sample vials, with agents and all necessary information, will be sent for 10 cents. One gives relief.

WAR NEWS!

HELP SOON TO REACH OUR BRAVE MARINES.

Fast Transports Are Pushed Forward Under Strong Escort.

All is Ready at Guantanamo Bay For the Landing of Troops—The Main Body of Shafter's Expedition Will Land Nearer Santiago—Santiago Without Supplies.

TO HASTEN RELIEF.

Fastest Transports Rushed Forward To Relieve Marines At Cuba.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

Washington, June 15, 2 p. m.—The officials in the war department intimate that a change has been made in the plans for Shafter's expedition as first arranged.

It is said that the swifter vessels of the fleet of transports have been selected and pushed forward in all possible haste under a strong convoy.

The slower vessels will follow under the guidance of the remainder of the convoying fleet. The object of the division of the fleet is to relieve the marines at Guantanamo as soon as possible.

By this change, it is thought that the first detachment of troops will be landed on Cuban soil tomorrow morning.

READY FOR TROOPS.

American Forces at Guantanamo Bay Are Awaiting Arrival of Shafter.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

Mole St. Nicholas, June 15, 1:19 p. m.—The transports bearing Major General Shafter's army of invasion is expected to arrive off the southern coast of Cuba every day.

The little gathering of marines still remains on top of the hill awaiting the arrival of the troops. The marines are greatly exhausted, but still willing to fight.

The launches from the American warships in the outer harbor of Guantanamo have been dragging the bay and have found the sub-marine mines planted there by the Spaniards.

All is now ready for the landing of the expected troops. On their arrival the warships are expected to bombard and destroy the Spanish forts at the entrance of the inner harbor and capture the town.

ANOTHER BASE.

The Main Expedition Will Not Land at Guantanamo Bay.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

Washington, June 15, 10:37 a. m.—While it is understood that General Shafter will reinforce the marines who are now landed at Guantanamo Bay, it is known here that the main part of the expedition will land nearer Santiago.

Shafter will probably leave 2,000 men at the present encampment of the marines and move the rest near Santiago.

Major General Lee now has eight regiments at Tampa and other points on the coast ready for the movement against Porto Rico.

The expedition against San Juan is expected to embark Monday.

FAMINE AT HAND.

Americans Have Shut Off Sources of Supply For Santiago de Cuba.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

On board despatch boat, off Santiago de Cuba, June 14, via Kingston, Jamaica, June 15, 1:25 p. m.—Sampson and Schley have now cut off the three sources of the Spanish supply and reinforcement.

Santiago is now isolated and its inhabitants are compelled to live on famine rations.

The Spaniards still prepare to defend the place. The cruiser Vizcaya has been anchored in a position where she can command an entrance to the port.

The Oquerdo controls the third narrow entrance, with the Christobol Colon and the Maria Theresa close by.

A VOTE THIS AFTERNOON.

Hawaiian Annexation Resolution Will Be Passed by House Today.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

Washington, June 15, 1:04 p. m.—A bill was passed by the House this morning granting American registry to foreign steamships to be used as transports.

The debate on the Hawaiian annexation resolution was resumed this morning. Congressman Fitzgerald, of Massachusetts, argued in favor of opposition because he said it violated the fundamental principles of the Democratic party.

The government, he said, rested upon the consent of the people governed. There are 40,000 natives in Hawaii who have not been consulted in the matter of annexation. He was confident that time would show his opponents their error.

The vote on the measure will be taken before adjournment this afternoon It will undoubtedly be adopted by a large majority.

Practically all the Republicans in the House and a number of the Democrats will vote in favor of the measure.

The fight in the Senate is the only danger confronting the resolution. There a possible attempt at filibustering to prevent a final vote may be made.

INSURGENTS READY.

9,000 of Them Gathered Around Santiago de Cuba.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

Tampa, June 15, 10:20 a. m.—Colonel Hernandez, of the Cuban army, has arrived at this place with a letter for Major General Miles from General Garcia, of the insurgent troops.

The letter says that 9,000 insurgents have taken possession of points near Santiago de Cuba where they will be in a position to co-operate with the American troops in the attack on the city.

Spaniards Still There.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

Tangier, Morocco, June 15, 1:29 p. m.—The Spanish reserve squadron still remains at Cadiz.

A Prize Debater.

Among the students who will speak in the Hardy prize debate at Amherst College, June 27th, is C. B. Tyler, of this city. He will be one of the six men who will compete for the Hyde prize in oratory, June 28th.

WEDDED IN CHURCH AMID JUNE FLOWERS.

Miss Delphine LaC. Bowers and Rev. W.C.O'Donnell Married.

AN IMPRESSIVE CEREMONY.

IT WAS ONE OF THE PRETTIEST CHURCH WEDDINGS OF THE YEAR.

Over Seven Hundred People Witnessed the Ceremony at the Crescent Avenue Church—Enjoyable Reception at Bride's Home Followed.

Surrounded on every hand by a throng of well-wishing relatives and friends, Miss Delphine LaClair Bowers, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Oliver Bowers, of Franklin place, and Rev. William Charles O'Donnell, Ph.D., pastor of the Monroe Avenue M. E. church, plighted their troth last Tuesday at one of the prettiest church weddings that Plainfield has seen.

The marriage was held in the Crescent Avenue church and was witnessed by a large and fashionable audience, that filled every available space in the great auditorium. There were over 700 guests present.

The church itself was beautiful, indeed, with the magnificent floral decorations that were tastefully arranged about the platform and front of the church. The general effect was in green and white. Palms and potted plants were so arranged as to completely hide the pulpit and form a floral pyramid on either side. White flowers were intermingled in the bank of green with pretty effect. The decorations reached over the entire width of the platform and about the chancel.

The ceremony took place promptly at 8 o'clock and was a very beautiful and impressive one. After the organist, Miss Jessie Utter, had played several selections on the organ, the grand melody of the Tannhauser wedding march pealed forth. The door to the left of the platform opened and the bridesmaids and ushers passed into the auditorium and up the aisle with slow and stately step. The procession was led by two of the bridesmaids who were followed by another The other three followed in the same order. They were all gowned in white organdie with green ribbons and carried handsome bouquets of American beauty roses. The bridesmaids were Miss Louisa Patton and Miss Arleen Crane, of Plainfield; Miss Katharine Thorne, of New York; Miss Emilie Oakley, of Rutherford; Miss Katharyn Mitchell, of Philadelphia, and Miss Alice Holmes, of Eastport, Me.

The bridesmaids were followed by the ushers, walking two by two, wearing the conventional evening dress. The ushers were Benjamin Oliver Bowers, Jr., of Plainfield, a brother of the bride, John S. Oliver, of Brooklyn, Avenue, Frank MacDaniel, of Newark, Rev. F. L. Erp, of Madison, N. J., Edward W. Van Deusen, of Englewood, and Leland M. Burr, of Montclair.

At the entrance in the back of the church, the procession was met by the bride, escorted by her father. The bride wore a beautiful gown of white satin, entrain, with timmings of chiffon, pearls and point de Venice lace, the last an heirloom of the family. She carried white roses and wore a tulle veil. They were preceded by the maid of honor, Miss Katheryn Terry, of Albany, a cousin of the bride, who was attired in white organdie, trimmed with white ribbons. She carried a basket of pink sweet peas.

Then bridesmaids and ushers turned and were followed by the bride and her father down the aisle while the strains of the Tannhauser march were changed to the Lohengrin wedding march. While the bridal party slowly made its way down the long aisle, the groom and his best man, Dr. Frank LeRoy Purdy, of Buffalo, accompanied by Rev. Dr. W. R. Richards, pastor of the church, and Rev. Dr. George W. Smith, presiding elder of the Elizabeth district, entered from the right and met the others in the chancel.

The bridesmaids and ushers separated and formed a semi-circle about the chancel while the rest grouped within. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Dr. Richards, assisted by Rev. Dr. Smith. The bride was given away by her father.

The organ had played a faint accompaniment while the solemn words were said and the responses given, and as the couple were pronounced man and wife the Mendelssohn wedding march rang out and Mr. and Mrs. O'Donnell led the bridal party down the aisle and out of the main entrance.

After the ceremony a reception was

BLOW TO BERGEN PLAN.

CRANFORD BELIEVES THE SQUIRE LAW TO BE A DEAD LETTE .

The Chose Compelling Majority of Property Owners' Consents Finally Increased Before Governor Voorhees Signed It.

Cranford, June 14.—Those residents of Cranford who are opposed to the construction of a county boulevard under the Squire law, are jubilant over what they claim a victory in the form the law received Governor Voorhees' signature Monday. When the law was first sent to the Governor it was found that through the error of the Assembly clerk the amendment passed making it necessary to get the majority of consents of property owners whose land would come under the provision of the law, was left out The opponents of the law made a great outcry against this disclosure and claimed that it was a deliberate attempt to enact the law so as to carry out the Bergen trolley scheme in Union county in defiance of the people. Governor Voorhees said, when the mistake was discovered, that the law would have to stand as it was. Since then, however, the missing amendment has been incorporated in the law and is a part of the measure that received his signature Tuesday. It is believed that this amendment practically kills the Bergen trolley scheme, as there is but little probability of the advocates of the county trolley being able to secure the majority of consents from property owners through Cranford and Westfield, where the Elizabeth and Westfield Street Railway Company has already been granted franchises.

BROKE AT SLOW SPEED.

A SERIOUS DEFECT IN A LOCOMOTIVE DRIVING WHEEL.

Central Engine Disabled at Dunellen—If It Had Been Running Fast a Bad Smashup Would Have Resulted.

Dunellen, June 15—Just as train No. 206 from Somerville was pulling out from the station this morning at 7:10 on its way to Newark, one of the driving wheel axles on the fireman's side of the engine broke and stripped the rod on the engineer's side. The engine was No. 146. The accident to the engine blocked the tracks for some little time and the trains following were obliged to switch over on track No. 4. Several of the trains were combined and thus the loss in time was made up.

The train was in charge of Conductor Hodge, of Somerville. Had the accident occurred while the train was under full speed, serious results might have been recorded, as no doubt the broken rod would have forced its way through the cab of the engine. Engineer Frank Naylor, also of Somerville, brought his engine to a full stop almost as soon as the accident occurred.

There was no damage outside of that to the engine. Later in the morning the engine was taken to Elizabethport for repairs, and the trains following carried the passengers from the belated train.

THE AMERICAN VOLUNTEERS.

Captain Milford Again in Charge of the Post in This City.

Captain Milford, of Philadelphia, has taken charge of the local post of the American Volunteers in place of Captain Waldron, who has gone to Baltimore. Captain Milford was here last summer and conducted a very successful series of evangelistic meetings in the large tent which the Volunteers erected in the borough.

Saturday Lieutenant Worthington, of Philadelphia, will be here, and will remain the balance of the summer. Lieutenant Colonel Lindsay, who is in charge of the New Jersey and Pennsylvania district, is expected Sunday, when a memorial service will probably be held for Theodore Hermann.

Captain Milford was asked by a reporter whether there was any truth in the report that the Volunteers were running so far behind in their expenses that they would soon be obliged to give up the hall where they are now holding meetings, and he said there was not. Captain Milford said that the Volunteers would very likely hold their meetings in a tent this year, just as they did last, although no location has been picked out yet. There is a debt on the post which troubles the members, but this is diminishing slowly.

Train Load of Club Women.

Today a special train will pass through Plainfield on the way to Denver, Col., carrying delegates to the annual National Convention of the Federation of Women's Clubs. The train will stop at Plainfield to pick up the delegates from this city.

VAUGHN AN EMBEZZLER.

OUT OF A LOVE SCRAPE HE IS NOW IN DEEPER TROUBLE.

Collected $6 From a Customer of J. M. Smalley and Then Disappeared—Found Asleep in a Stage Early Wednesday.

Oscar Vaughn is again in trouble of a more serious nature than that which brought him to justice when he threatened to kill himself because a young woman would not marry him.

This time he is in the borough lock-up charged with the embezzlement of $6 from J. M. Smalley. Soon after the conclusion of the first trouble when N. B. Smalley furnished bonds in the sum of $500 to guarantee that Vaughn would keep the peace, he went to work for J. M. Smalley. He got along very well until last Saturday when he collected $6 and quit work. When he met his employer he told him that he had given the $6 to his father to keep for him, and that he would return the money later in the day.

In the meantime Vaughn skipped and could not be located. About 4 a. m. Wednesday Marshal Wise found young Vaughn asleep in Thos. Newman's stage on Chatham street. The officer was passing along the street, and on looking toward the stage, which stood close to the street, he saw a dark object. He found it to be Vaughn. He arrested him and put him in the lockup.

When Vaughn was questioned he said he spent Tuesday at South Plainfield. He was arrested on a warrant issued by Justice Crosley on the complaint of J. M. Smalley, and arraigned in the afternoon for his hearing.

N. B. Smalley, it is understood, will ask Justice Mosher to release him as bondsman from Vaughn's bond to keep the peace.

BENCHES FOR THE PARK.

A Pleasant Public Benefaction Plans for Plainfield People.

Through the generosity of several Plainfield citizens the City Park is to be equipped with benches and grass guards. The park, thanks to the efforts of the Town Improvement Association, is now in a condition as to be really an ornament to the neighborhood. The work on it has not been wasted. All that it needed was some benches which are now on their way.

A Patriotic Talk.

Winfield Scott Post, No. 73, G. A. R., met last Tuesday in regular session and enjoyed a patriotic talk from Past Commander L. V. F. Randolph, who has been absent from the Post meetings for a time. There were remarks by other comrades, all of which were enjoyed. The members made final arrangements for their excursion to Long Branch June 23d, at which time the annual encampment is held at that place.

Heights of Ground Water.

By the monthly measurement of the ground water, the well at the corner of Fifth and Richmond streets shows that the water is one and one-half feet lower than it was a month ago. The water is still two feet three inches higher than it was in November. The Water Company claim that the water near their wells is now higher than it has been in years.

Workmen Assaults a Boy.

George Polger, who was employed by an East Second street liveryman, was arrested Tuesday for being drunk and striking one of the employes. The prisoner was very penitent next morning and promised to leave town at once if Judge DeMeza would let him off. He was fined $5 or 20 days, and will have to go to Elizabeth.

Soldier Boys Home for a Short Visit.

Charles Flynn and Frank Carver, of Co. H, N. J. N. G., came to their homes in this city last Tuesday on a leave of absence of twenty-four hours. They were welcomed by their many friends, who inquired after the other Plainfield boys at Fort Hancock. All were reported to be doing well.

In the Fire Department.

The vacancy that will be caused by resignation of First Assistant Chief James Martin from the fire department, will be taken by the present Second Assistant Chief J. W. Murray, Jr., and his place will be taken by Andrew Jennings, who will be appointed by the Mayor.

Paterson Man Arrested.

Fred Fronson, of Paterson, came to this city Tuesday night and drank too much beer. Officer Lunger found him wandering around the western part of the city hatless and dazed. He was locked up and this morning the Judge suspended sentence on him.

—This evening Franklin Council, No. 41, Jr. O. U. A. M., will meet and consider important business.

—Woodhull & Martin announce the arrival of some fine-corded piques (imported) which include some fancy weaves at 50, 55 and 59 cents.

HELPING CITY NURSE.

ADVANCE CIRCLE CONDUCTED A PROFITABLE FESTIVAL.

The Chapel, Decorated With Flowers and Rugs, Looked Very Pretty—Those in Charge—Music by Leslie' Orchestra.

The chapel of the First Presbyterian church looked remarkably pretty Tuesday, with its decorations of flags and flowers, as the amusement festival given there by the Advance Circle of the King's Daughters of that church. The proceeds went towards the support of the city nurse, and because of the good cause for which the money was to be expended, the festival was well patronized.

The side walls of the chapel were hung with flags, and the flower booth in the centre of the large room was a pretty sight. The booth was a mass of flags and flowers, and set off the rest of the room to advantage. The booth was presided over by Miss Katherine Glen and Miss Margaret Cave.

Tables of candy and cake were in other parts of the room. The candy table was in charge of Mrs. J. E. McClintock and Mrs. J. E. Beerbower. The cakes were sold by Mrs. G. Wean and Mrs. Wm. A. Coddington. Joseph Haynes served the ice cream and the several waitresses were Miss Lottie Boesen, Miss Evelyn Searing, Miss Charlotte Meigs, Miss Lillian Glen, Miss Isabella Scarborough and Miss Violet Beerbower.

During the evening Mrs. Buckley's Ladies' Orchestra rendered selections. Mrs. Howard A. Pope and Mrs. Joseph Haynes were the committee of arrangements and had an oversight of the affair.

GOOD TERMS FOR CITY.

PEOPLE PROTECTED FROM AGGRESSION BY ELECTRIC LIGHT CO.

The Permission to Lay Wires Underground Will Give the City a Chance to Purchase the Plant in Twenty-five Years.

Even before the introduction of an ordinance in the Common Council placing the wires of the Plainfield Gas and Electric Light Company under ground in the city, the subject has been under discussion. Some have said that the city has given way to the corporation in everything. The agreement, that is to be signed by the city officials and the company, as soon as the ordinance is passed, is a distinct proof of the contrary, however. According to the terms of this agreement, the company agrees to contract the system of subways and keep them in the proper condition. Then the city is given the privilege of stopping or starting at any time its contract with the company for the lighting of the streets, at a rate not higher than the rate at present. Neither is the company to charge any person, persons or corporation any more than the present rate.

The city offices and the City Hall, when it is completed, are to be lighted free by the company. So, too, are the city jail, the station houses and the fire department houses.

The trenches after the laying of the conduits are to be put back to the satisfaction of the street commissioner.

The final terms of the agreement provide that at the expiration of twenty years after the signing of the contract, the city shall have the privilege of purchasing the plant if it so wishes. The price is to be settled by three arbitrators, one appointed by the Common Council, one by the officers of the company and the other to be selected by them or, if they cannot agree, to be appointed by the Judge of the Union County Circuit Court. If the city does not care to purchase at that time, the city is to have the right every five years after that of purchasing.

Street Work.

The Street Commissioner's men started in pegging Madison avenue between Seventh and Fourth streets for macadamizing yesterday. The entire street between these two points is in poor condition, having been left that way ever since the sewers were put down. Charles Meeker signed the contract Tuesday night in the Mayor's office for macadamizing Madison avenue from Ninth street to Stelle avenue. Last night David Bowden signed the contract for macadamizing Stelle avenue from Madison avenue to Plainfield avenue.

Divorce Case Laid Over.

The divorce case of Corey against Corey, which was to have come up before Vice Chancellor Stevens at Newark Saturday, has been laid over indefinitely owing to the illness of the vice chancellor. William Howorn was the attorney for the petitioner.

Settling Claims.

The Plainfield Sanitary Company has fixed Thursday, June 16th, as the day for the settlement of the claims of the creditors.

GIRL GRADUATES BID ADIEU TO SEMINARY.

Closing Exercises Held at the School Tuesday Afternoon.

MUSIC, ART AND DIPLOMAS.

MISS KENYON'S PRACTICAL ADVICE TO THE GRADUATES.

Their Future Success in Life Work Would Depend Upon the Resolution and Determination They Accorded Their Tasks.

The hall of the Plainfield Seminary, with its pictured walls and a cool background of giant ferns, was a pleasant place Tuesday afternoon when the graduating class and their friends met for the closing exercises. The graduates were eight in number, Misses Ruby Gilbert Kieb, Margaret Allen McCready, Helen Herbert Obendorf, Ruth Peckham, Emma Hawley Sterling, Harriet Ether Strong, Ethel Lucile Titsworth and Ethel VanBoskerck.

The first part of the programme was a musicale under the direction of Miss May, the successful teacher of instrumental music at the seminary. With much spirit and artistic skill the following programme was rendered, all of the pupils meeting and receiving hearty applause:

Country Dance.....Nevin
Misses Harriet Strong and Ruby Kieb.
Sonatina.....Beethoven
Barcarolle.....Kullak
Master Will Schoemaker.
Shepherd's Dance.....Grieg
Miss Elsie Bushnell.
Loure.....Bach
Song Without Words.....Sartorio
Miss Ruth Dudley.
Papillon.....Grieg
Barcarolle.....Jensen
Misses Mary Wadsworth, Shepherd's Tn'e.....
Shepherd's Tn'e and Wedding Pair.....Nevin
Miss Emily Greenleaf.
Spring Time.....Grieg
Miss Harriet Strong.
Mazurka.....Godard
Miss Ruby Kieb.

The absence of any music sheets is always noticeable at Miss May's entertainments, as her method involves the memorizing of the music when learned. In compliance with request, Miss May played, with exquisite touch and wonderful expression, "The Flatterer," by Coaminade, and for an encore, "A Govotte," by Klein.

The presentation of diplomas followed, in which Miss Kenyon, the principal of the school, reminded the class that success in their life-work would depend upon their attitude to their work. If they considered it beneath them, they would slight it; if they looked upon it as above them, they would be discouraged and do it imperfectly. Success either as housekeepers or in professions would depend upon the resolution and determination with which they set about their tasks. In conclusion, she wished that theirs might be the happy lot to succeed in the highest sense.

The Seminary farewell song, "Roses Blow," written by Miss Kenyon years ago, was sung by Misses Grace and Gladys Kaufman, Florence Beebe and Louise Curtis.

The walls of Seminary Hall were hung with pictures drawn and painted by the art class, under the instruction of Mrs. Charles Sprague Smith, of New York. Many fine specimens of art work were on exhibition, executed by the following pupils: Miss Jessie Bushnell, Miss Holmes Corlies, Miss Edith Fisk, Miss Margaret McCready, Miss Mary Anderson, Estabart, Miss Christina Scott, Miss Isabella Scott, Miss Ethel Titsworth, Miss Grace Vanslickel and Miss Helen Weir.

The first prize for life drawing and second prize for composition, a reproof "Springtime" by Edwin H. Blashfield, was awarded to Miss Jessie Bushnell.

Not in Favor of a New Light.

It is estimated that the new Welsbach light that is now being exhibited in this city will cost about $31 a year, while the present electric light costs about $15. In the judgment of the Council the new light is hardly worth the difference. It is said that Plainfield cannot get along with any less number of lights, which the Welsbach company claim can be done, and that the light is not as far-reaching in its effect. The Council is not by any means agreed in favor of the new light.

Mr. Bird's Resignation.

It was expected that at the meeting of the City Council last Monday evening that the resignation of Collector Bird would be received and acted upon, but owing to the fact that Mr. Bird has not yet received his commission as postmaster he could not be expected to resign his other office.

Harry Loughlin, of New York, is visiting Plainfield relatives.

SUN BONNETS FOR HORSES.

They are Worn During Hot Weather and Have Decreased the Mortality.

Horses in London wear straw hats during the warm season. For some time the English Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals has been agitating the question of protecting the heads of horses during the hot weather. This agitation has finally had a good effect, and nearly every horse that is compelled to draw heavy loads through the London streets is now protected from the sun's rays by a bonnet.

This plan has long been followed in France and the hat adopted in England is the same as that used in Bordeaux. It looks much like the straw hats familiar to visitors to American summer resorts and bathing beaches. The brim is wide and there are holes through which the horse's ears project. It is held in place by being tied to the bridle.

Manufacturers of straw goods are delighted with the innovation, as they have been kept busy all summer making the hats. They sell for a trifle, but such tremendous numbers are used that the total cost is considerable.

The mortality among horses has decreased greatly since the use of the hats became common. As the hats have high crowns, there is plenty of room for ventilation.—New York World.

STREET ARAB A GOVERNOR.

He Was Adopted by a Gentleman and Given a Fine Education.

John Green Brady, of Indiana, who has been appointed governor of Alaska, never knew his parents, says the Savannah News. He grew up a veritable street arab in the utmost poverty. In 1860 he was sent to Indiana with a carload of waifs. The car reached Tipton, a county seat thirty miles north of Indianapolis, and a number of the youngsters were committed to the care of residents. Judge John Green, a prominent citizen of the place, called for the "ugliest, raggedest and most friendless" in the lot. Jack, as he was afterward known, was promptly presented, and the Judge took the lad home. He appreciated his home and the kindness of his benefactors, and diligently applied himself to study. A course at the public schools was followed by a year at Waveland Academy, and that by four years at Harvard. After he had graduated at Cambridge he was sent by Judge Green to England to pursue his theological studies. Returning to Tipton in 1876, the next year he went to Alaska as a missionary under the auspices of the Presbyterian Church, and he has since remained there.

New Way to Light Matches.

A profitable noonday pastime among the gamins who frequent the vicinity of the Standard Theater never fails to draw a large and interested crowd, says the Philadelphia Press. One of the boys will lay ten matches in an even row on the hard asphalt. The heads of the matches all point the same way and the matches are about an inch apart. Then the youngster swings a cord on the end of which is fastened a piece of lead.

Swinging the cord rapidly, he handles it so deftly that he hits at will the head of each match and sets it blazing. The requirements with which the crowd that if he succeeds in igniting in this manner each of the ten matches without missing he is to have ten cents. Usually the business men who watch the performance are so well pleased that the gamin gets considerably more than a dime for his trouble and skill.

The Wrong Man.

"Hold on, gentlemen, before you adjourn; I notice that you elected Charlotte Corday as an honorary member this evenin'."

"That's all right, ain't it? She killed a man."

"Yep, that's all right that far. But th' man she killed was the biggest Antichrist in all France."

"Sho! you don't say! Gentlemen, I move that Mrs. Corday's name be stricken from the roll and that we give her three groans. Carried."—Cleveland Leader.

A Precise Definition.

"Oi must confess," said Mr. Rafferty, "that it ain't clear ty me what's meant by architecture."

"It's a great t'ing," replied Mr. Dolan. "Oi'll explain it till yez. 'Spose two people hev a quar'l"—

"Which is liable to happen any day"—

"They call in three or four other people to take a hand and ixpress an opinion, an' the result is absolute peace or a gineral free fight,ayther of which is to be desired.—Washington Star.

An Unsympathetic Mood.

"Is it not sweet and inspiring," she said, "to stand on the shore where the waves sing eternally and gaze into the offing?"

"Well," replied the young man, who lacks sentiment. "I suppose that is enjoyable if you know how to appreciate it. But the last time I went to the seashore I didn't give much thought to the offing. What I wanted was an awning."—Washington Star.

Serving on the Instalment Plan.

Preacher—My man, how long are you in for?

Hooser (serving sixty days for the fortieth time)—Well, boss, dis is de way of it. I keeps on as I have been, I'm doin' a life sentence on de instalment plan.

"What makes Bumply so down on the long distance telephone?"

"He called up a man in Toledo that owes him $2.50. They wrangled till it cost Bumply $11."—Detroit Free Press.

Society Letter No. 24.

There should be in every home, especially where there is a large family, a place to put the mail when it arrives, so that each member of the family will know just where to look for the expected letter. One which is not only convenient but also a dainty ornament for the wall is made of a piece of thin wood or thick cardboard, fifteen by eighteen inches, enamelled in white or any pretty tint. Strong ribbon or silver or gold braid is used for the strings. These are stretched as tightly as possible in crisscross fashion and fastened at different points with gold headed nails. If one is handy with the brush a few dainty sprays may be painted at the bottom and with a clever bow of bright ribbon this makes a very decorative panel for the wall.

Tailor-Made Skirt.

In Paris some of the very fashionable tailors are making for their fair customers very handsome tailor-cloth skirts, to be worn with lace blouses made of the same cloth or of the cloth skirt. A jewelled belt and dob-collar to match completes the toilet, which is worn at small dinners, concerts, and the theatre. Other tailors send home a cloth skirt, elegantly silk-lined, with two or three flounces edging the skirt—a diaphanous one, like chiffon over silk, and two of satin brocade, violet, cerise, orange yellow, or whatever color is most becoming and accords best with the color of the cloth skirt.

The Natty Short Coat.

The early prediction by some of the tailors and importers, that the long, full mode would be very popular this season, has not yet been fulfilled. The model has appeared upon a few very special cloth costumes designed for tall women, most of these elaborately braided. But the greater portion of stylish cloth coats and jackets are short, and not a few accompanying tailor costumes are in the little Eton bolero and similar styles so familiar for seasons past. These, likewise, appear en suite with summer suits of pique, linen, gingham, chambray, and like materials.

Celebrated Lovers.

Heinrich Heine, the poet, was terribly jealous. One day he poisoned a parrot belonging to his lady love, for fear it should claim too much of her attention.

"The Rivals" is a true story of Sheridan's courtship, the character of Lydia Languish in the life play being taken by Miss Linley, who afterwards became the author's wife. Thomas Moore was always in love. If one looks through his poems, one may find the names of some sixteen different ladies to whom he swore eternal fidelity.

Dainty Scotch Ginghams.

The new Scotch ginghams and French zephyrs rival the taffeta silks in pattern and artistic coloring, and the summer girl who does not wear made of these charming fabrics, with the dainty ribbon trimmings, and carries the parasol which comes to match the goods will look quite as pretty at half the cost as the girl who walks in silk attire.

Glass Spoons for Medicine.

Glass spoons are sold at the drug stores for the taking of medicines which may tarnish silver. Better, however, than there are the glass tubes which keep such powerful drugs away from the teeth as well; and better, perhaps, than both, is the attention to the needs of a liver which does away with the necessity of any such heroic dosing.

Cotton Counterpanes.

White cotton counterpanes after being washed should never be wrung out, but carried to the drying-ground in a washing tub. Before they are thoroughly dry they should be folded quite smooth and flat, and left for 10 or 12 hours, and then well aired.

THE SPANISH PEASANTS.

A Patient and Long Suffering Class—The Cream of the People.

In the Spanish lower classes you will find poverty and appalling ignorance—a neglect of the intelligence which is positively animal—yet nevertheless not disallied with an obvious capacity of education and improvement, an actual and admirable pluck and cheerfulness, a temper grateful, hospitable, and affectionate, and a marvelous sobriety of living.

There is one especial word particularly applicable to this gente bada. It is the Spanish word sufrida, which we must render in a single English word by patient; but it means more than patient; it means patient and unvindictive under grievous injury and wrong.

Such are the Spanish peasantry—the cream of the Spanish people. Their only province in relation to their government is to pay. They are a passive vehicle for ministerial extortion. The contribuciones are already heavier than they can bear, and grow more merciless as each successive administration plunges the country deeper and deeper into debt. In return for this continuous disbursement they receive nothing. Their lands are without a road, their children without a school; their navy is furnished with ships contracted for at double the price of ours, whose only quality is to go to the bottom without the shadow of a cause; their army is unpaid, unofficered, and undrilled, and absolutely incompetent to engage with any European power. The last Spanish census shows that of a total population of 18,000,000 over 5,000,000 can neither read nor write, while over half have no determined occupation. This statement is in itself so damaging that it appears hardly necessary to inquire further.—Westminster Review.

A USEFUL ANT-EATER.

Nearly Exterminated the Caterpillar from the Trees.

When a horde of hairy, yellow caterpillars infested the linden trees in the Philadelphia Zoological Gardens the superintendent was much troubled for a way to get rid of the pests. Poisonous sprinkling mixtures, tar and coal oil were all applied to the trees, but the results fell far short of what had been hoped. The caterpillars flourished in spite of all, and seemed to increase in numbers.

Then the ingenious head keeper had a happy idea. He took the South American ant-eater from its cage, and securing it with a collar and a long cord, started it up one of the trees. The way the creature laid about with its long, sticky tongue, scooping the caterpillars by the dozen, more than realised the keeper's greatest expectations. It took to them with as much relish as though they were its natural food, and in the course of half an hour completely cleared the tree.

Then the ant-eater was put up another tree, and it ate until it was gorged. Since then it has been turned out three times a day, and so great have been its industry and appetite that the caterpillars are nearly exterminated.

THROWN OFF THE SCENT.

Device by Which Burglars Fooled the Bloodhounds.

Sometime ago a bank in Shipshewana, Ind., was visited by burglars, who blew open the safe and secured a large sum of money. A famous pack of bloodhounds was brought from Indianapolis and turned loose upon the robbers' trail. The man hunt lasted only a few minutes, however, the bloodhounds being all found howling dismally and refused to go farther, and it was impossible to continue the chase.

Later a prisoner in jail at Ligonier, Ind., turned State's evidence and gave the police all the information concerning the bank burglary and the subsequent escape of the men. He said the bloodhounds were thrown off the scent without any trouble by rubbing an onion on the shoes worn by the burglars. He added that no bloodhound can be introduced to follow an onion trail.—Chicago Times-Herald.

Compressed Flour.

The importance of lightness and compactness in the kit of soldiers has stimulated the manufacturers of army food stuffs to produce all manner of concentrated products for use on the march or in camp. Of these the latest and most remarkable is one which is now being tested by the British War Department. The objection to the establishment of national granaries is the impossibility of storing wheat for any length of time. The grain soon germinates and the flour is lost. The new method is to bricks by hydraulic pressure, in which shape it is unaffected by damp, is mold-proof and sweet and wholesome. The compression is said to destroy all forms of larval life, and the bricks are impervious to and against the attacks of insects. Since the cubic space occupied by 100 pounds of loose flour will hold more than 300 pounds of the compressed flour, it will be seen that the saving in storage is immense.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Inherited the College Yell.

"My dear," said the young wife, "there was a time when I was proud of the powerful voice you put into your college yell, but now I wish it had been merely a whisper."

"Why, dearest?" asked the astonished young husband.

"Because," she replied, "the baby has inherited it."—Chicago News.

AN HONOR MEDAL.

It Was Granted to a Union Soldier on Confederate Testimony.

"The Secretary of War granted a medal of honor recently to a Federal soldier on the affidavit of a Confederate," said Charles I. Evans of Texas, "and it is probably the first instance on record of this kind. The Federal soldier who received the medal was Thomas Higgins, now of Hannibal, Mo. During the war he was the color-bearer of the Ninety-Ninth Illinois regiment, and was holding that position at the siege of Vicksburg. In an assault, on the 22nd of May, 1863, the Ninety-Ninth Illinois was ordered to charge and not to look back. I was a member of the Second Texas regiment, and we confronted the charging Illinoisans. We repulsed the Illinois regiment a short distance from the breastworks, and sent it back in confusion. Higgins, however, was literally obeying orders. He never looked back. He never noticed the retreat of his regiment, but came bounding forward, his colors flying as prettily as a soldier ever saw. Within forty yards of our works word was passed along the line not to shoot the brave soldier, and all firing ceased. When Higgins saw his predicament he started to retreat with his colors, but was told him to come on or we would have to shoot him. Several men ran out and brought him within the breastworks. We kept him several days, during which time we learned to like and admire him. He was then paroled. I was one of the men who witnessed his heroic deed, and made an affidavit to that effect. Several of my companions who remembered Higgins and his charge also made affidavits. On these the Secretary of War granted a medal.—Higgins could have been vouched for by members of his own regiment, but the novelty of the recommendation by his former foes led to that course."—Washington Star.

Pretty Verbosity.

Here is a good story of how a father cured his son of verbal grandiloquence. The boy wrote from college using such long words that the father replied with the following: "Although somewhat circumlocutory, hyperbolical, and superbombastic in his language the father is something of a phraseur himself." Here is the letter: "In promulgating your esoteric cogitations or articulating superficial sentimentalities and philosophical or psychological observations, beware of platitudinous ponderosity. Let your extemporaneous descantings and unpremeditated expatiations have intelligibility, without rhodomontade or thrasonical bombast. Sedulously avoid all polysyllabical profundity, pompous prolixity and ventriloquial vapidity. In other words, speak truthfully, naturally, clearly, purely, but do not use long words."

Marble Ponds of Persia.

That beautiful transparent stone called Tabris marble, employed in the burial places of Persia and in their grandest edifices, consists of petrified water of ponds in certain parts of the country. This petrifaction may be traced from its commencement to its termination; in one part the water is clear, in a second it appears thicker and stagnant, in a third quite black, and in its last stage it is white like frost. When the operation is complete a stone thrown on its surface makes no impression, and one may walk over it without any fear of its sinking. The substance thus produced is brittle and transparent, and sometimes richly striped with red, green and copper color. So much is this marble, which may be cut into large slabs, looked upon as a luxury that none but the king, his sons and persons especially privileged are permitted to take it.

How Alaskan Indians Trap Bears.

Strips of whalebone are folded into the shape of the letter "N," enveloped in "blanket" fat, and frozen hard. That way the fat thus prepared is left in promising spots for the great white bears to devour. Along comes one of the monsters, gulps a lump down whole; the gastric juices melt the fat and eat away the strings of tendon by which the whalebone is bound; the whalebone springs out straight across the animal's stomach, and presently it dies. Next day Mr. Eskimo comes along and gathers in a bearskin worth several quarts of whiskey.—Oregonian.

ONE WOMAN'S WIT.

How an Idea Added Materially to Her Success in Business.

A Washington modiste, who enjoys he patronage of many fashionable women in the official set, said recently hat she doted her success exactly rom the time she hit upon a little idea hat being a novelty immediately won or her a reputation. "One night," she said, to relate, "I was finishing up a gown for a senator's daughter, and though I had tried hard to please my young lady, knowing if I succeeded it would be the means of increasing my business, the thought came to me that if I could make up the package and send it home with some stamp of individuality about it, it would be a feather in my cap. At that moment I was sewing hang-loops on the waist, and the great idea flashed through my brain. I jumped up, seized a candle and made for the cellar. Arrived there, I grasped a hatchet and knocked a barrel hoop. Dividing the hoop in half, I hurried back up stairs with my embryonic waist holder. It did not take me long to cover the curved stick with some pieces of material left from the gown and attach a ribbon bow. It made a very dainty and useful accompaniment to the gown, and my customer was delighted. Wasn't it a happy idea? Why, I never send a gown home now without a pretty waist holder to match, and I put sachet powder in the hangers in the dresses. My attitude at the witness. I only know how quickly the news spread that "Miss was such a clever dressmaker with such original ideas."

Honestly believe my little barrel hoop creation procured me my present large business."—Washington Star.

ORIGIN OF THE CAKE WALK.

Formerly a Marriage Ceremony but Its Significance Now Lost.

The cake-walk proper had its origin among the French negroes of Louisiana more than a century ago. There is little doubt that it is an offshoot of some of the old-time country dances, and resembles several of them in form. From New Orleans it spread over the entire South, and thence North. It *was found of convenience to the plan*tation negroes. They were not wedded by license, and it was seldom that the services of a minister were called in. At a cake-walk a man might legitimately show his preference for a woman, and thus publicly claim her for a wife. In effect the cake-walk was not different from the old Scotch marriage, which required only a public declaration before the contracting parties. So this festival became in some sense a wooing, an acceptance or rejection and a ceremony. This explains its popularity with the blacks, outside of its beauties, with the sexes, and the prize which it comes. Present at all times to command negro support. Cake-walking has improved, as do most things that are constantly practised. It has lost its old significance in the South. Negroes now get married, when they marry at all, in white fashion, and the walk becomes, however, a pantomime dance. Properly performed, it is a beautiful one. The cake is not much of a prize, though the negro has a sweet tooth. —New Orleans Times-Democrat.

HORSE WITH AN EYE FOR BUSINESS

Old Hector Wouldn't Allow His Master's Sickness to Stop Work.

A remarkable display of animal sagacity was given recently in Kensington by the horse driven by old Harry Pindle, an itinerant coal dealer. Harry has been a small dealer for years, and many a bunch of coal he has sold to customers of twenty years' standing. Hector, the old bay horse, has been owned by Harry for several years, and, although he is old and lame, the animal serves his master well. Last week, Harry fell ill with a bad attack of grippe, was taken sick, and, leaving his six-year-old grandson on the wagon, he went into a friend's house to rest. Now, Hector evidently got tired of waiting, for when Harry, who had become very sick, came out with the intention of driven home the team was gone. Late that afternoon the grandson came home with an empty wagon and explained that Hector had gone over the regular route, and that the people who had been waiting for their coal came out and took what they wanted and paid for it. Harry became very ill and was confined to bed for over a week, but the supply of coal never stopped, as Harry's oldest son would load the wagon before going to work and the team would go out of itself. Harry's little boy. It has been proven since that old Hector never missed a customer along the route, and he is now pointed out as a remarkable horse. —Philadelphia Record.

A Tall Fish Story.

The following is vouched for by F. Makett, who lives in Ledford county, Miss., near Cane Lake. Mr. Makett went out a few mornings ago to a marshy place that had dried out on account of the continued dry weather, to dig fish bait, and while digging with a grub hoe, to his great surprise, instead of finding fish bait, he dug up a fine fish that weighed three pounds, and upon examination he found that in the med for 100 yards around there was a great quantity of trout, white perch and bass. Mr. Makett carried home a half bushel of the fish, and now, instead of digging bait, he goes out every morning and digs a mess of fine bass. The fish are under the surface about ten inches.—Memphis Commercial Appeal.

Striped Taffeta Waist.

For the dressy waist nothing is more appropriate than the dainty striped and figured taffetas which are now so popular. A waist of this sort worn with a handsome black skirt or one of contrasting color to the blouse, makes a costume suitable for theater or church wear.

A bodice of pale violet and gress striped taffeta, was opened down the front over a vest of finely tucked plain taffeta. Tucks and insertion adorned the blouse and small sleeve. The skirt was of green amazon cloth.

White taffeta silk with colored polka dots is one of the novelties of the season for waists and very dainty they are combined with white mohair skirts.

Old-Time Fashions.

Corsets have been found on the mummies of Egyptian princesses of the Royal Family.

In 1816 Francis I. gave his queen the equivalent of £2,200 in our money to buy her a hat.

The women of the Middle Ages always carried their hair with a small dagger. When not in use it was carried in the girdle.

Wire hairpins were invented in England in 1545. Before that time the female coiffures were held in place by fine wooden skewers.

Philippe le Bel of France, ordered that no tradesman's wife should wear a gown made of stuff costing more than twenty pence a yard.

In 1364 the pointed hoods worn by the ladies often reached 4 feet above the head, making the lady's face appear about the middle of her body.

From 1784 to 1787 the style of hairdressing in Paris changed seventeen times, and went from the extreme of short curls and a skull cap to a hat three feet broad.

In the Roman catacombs have been found several sets of false teeth, manufactured from ivory, to repair the ravages of time in the mouths of Roman beauties.

Kid and silk gloves came into use in Europe about the end of the fifteenth century. At first only princesses and ladies of high rank were allowed to wear them.

For Summer Wear.

For spring and country wear in the summer improved patterns and qualities of the light-weight woolen fabrics have been brought out which are those which the best business houses import year after year, and which are bought as regularly by conservative women, and by fashionably dressed women also, who consider a tailor-made costume of such a material an essential part of their annual outfit. The choice among these suitings this year is unusually varied and handsome, both in monochromes and pretty fancy mixtures. A well-made, well-hung silk-lined skirt of these fine wool fabrics, and an open jacket neatly fitted and finished, with which various pretty vests, both light and dark, are en suite, will always give the wearer a sense of being well-dressed, and can be appropriately worn on more occasions than one would suppose.

People neither acute nor profound often say the thing without effort which we want and have long been hunting for in vain.

JAPAN'S AMBASSADOR.

A Highly Cultivated Man—His Life Reads Like a Romance.

No better evidence of the development of Japan into a great civilized power can be found than by contrasting its Legation at Washington with that of China and Korea. The great mandarins of the Flowery Kingdom are the same in manners, customs, speech, thought and even tendencies as were those described by the English, Portugese and Dutch navigators in the seventeenth century. The Korean representatives go about with the curious two-storied hats and the other quaint articles of wear which they employ in their own land, and their best representatives at Washington are exactly like the one thousand and one petty nobles who make up the aristocracy of the Hermit Kingdom.

Forty years ago Japan sent out no legation, and its people were on a par with those of its two neighbors, but today the land is as civilized as our own, and the Legation at Washington is as like that of the European powers that in many respects they may all be regarded as casts from the same mold.

In some respects the Ministers from Dai Nippon set an example to those from other lands. Not only all a college men, trained soldiers and jurists and linguists of no mean ability. The preceding Ambassadors, M. Kurino and M. Tateno and the present one, M. Toru Hoshi, are all men of extraordinary ability. The last named is a character whose history is almost a romance. He belongs to what may be termed the reform liberal party, and is almost a democrat in his ideas and views.

He was a leader of the popular uprising in his early youth, when the people, growing out of their former customs, demanded greater liberty and privileges for themselves and the curtailment of the powers of the ruling classes. In those years he was mobbed, assaulted, arrested, convicted, imprisoned, and once banished from the capital, yet during that period he found time to prosecute studies of all sorts, and became, through study and practice, one of the best parliamentarians and jurists in Japan.

He has acquired distinction as a politician, orator, stateman and executive. In the eighties he went around the world on a tour of study, in which he paid particular attention to the political and social institutions of Italy, Austria, France, Germany, Russia and England. He reads and writes English with rare fluency and speaks it admirably.

He has a fair knowledge of French and Latin and a great familiarity with Korean, official Chinese and Canton-ese. He is also one of the native scholars that have studied the ancient Loo Choo and other ancient dialects and tongues of his country.—New York Mail and Express.

THE ONLY RELIC LEFT.

The Importunate Lightning Backed Down Before Burns.

Robert Burns's wife, after his death, continued to live at Dumfries, and it was customary for strangers to visit the place. A young Englishman one day called upon the widow and, after he had seen all that she had to show, the poet's portrait, the poet's family portrait of Nasmyth, and his family Bible, he entreated her to present him with some relic which he might carry away with him.

"Indeed, sir," said Mrs. Burns, "I have given away so many relics that I have not one left."

"Oh, you surely must have something," said the persevering Saxon. "Anything will do—anything you please."

Some further altercation took place, the lady reasserting that she had no relic to give, and he as repeatedly renewing his request. At length, fairly tired out with the man's importunities, Mrs. Burns said to him with a smile: "Treat sir, unless you take me, then, I dinna see how you are to get what you want."

Her suggestion had the desired effect and the petition was at once withdrawn.

The King of the Woods.

Very few persons ever visit the southern portion of the United States and become at all familiar with its woodland life without being captivated by that prince of singers, the mocking bird. Not only as a musician, but in general "smartness," he is far and away ahead of anything else that flies. He is the "Yankee" among birds. In vivacity, in cleverness, in a quick and dexterous use of his small but brilliant brain, he is the last word to point out his equal. And when in the springtime the woods resound with his clear, flutelike, and exultant notes, even the man, if such there be, "who hath no music in his soul," would find it to come into consciousness as a good humor of his glad and gleeful song.

And yet the mocking bird is incorrectly named. He is by no means a natural mimic. Half a dozen birds could be mentioned that in this particular far surpass him. This may seem a strong thing to say, in view of the stories current so abundantly illustrating and emphasizing this supposed gift.

TWO LIVES RUINED.

Love, Whiskers and Sorrow This Young Woman's Lot.

Whiskers have prevented a marriage and practically ruined two lives in Butler County, Ky. This sad state of affairs is the result of a bride-to-be trying to make herself more beautiful. Instead of beauty she gained whiskers, long, black, luxurious affairs, which would adorn a man as much as they distress the young woman.

Miss Belcher, of Bowling Green, read an advertisement in a metropolitan paper which extolled the virtues of a cosmetic, asserting that a single facial application would render the skin soft and smooth. She sent for the preparation, and when it came followed the accompanying directions.

A week passed. One morning when Miss Belcher took her customary magnified glimpse of the looking-glass she noticed unfamiliar little black specks all over her face. Greatly distressed, she waited a day for developments. Horror of horrors! The next morning she found the specks were nothing less than the ends of countless black hairs that went on growing until they formed a heavy black beard. Almost crazed by this fact, Miss Belcher at first contemplated suicide. Then she was persuaded to have her face shaved, but the relief was only temporary, for the hair continued to grow.

At last she determined to live the life of a recluse. Her affianced begged her to marry him, but she steadfastly refused, and then declined to see him at all. This almost drove the young maid insane, and he too retired from the world.

Physicians are unable to aid Miss Belcher. She has given them all an opportunity to try their skill, but each one has had the same experience.—New York Journal.

WHAT HARVARD HAS DONE FOR U. S.

Many of Her Men Have Become Prominent in the Public Service.

A recently compiled list of graduates at Harvard, including both academic and professional school graduates, who have been in the public service, shows that Harvard has furnished three Presidents of the United States, two Vice Presidents, twenty-one Cabinet Officers, forty-two ambassadors and Ministers Plenipotentiary, thirty-seven United States Senators, 179 Representatives in Congress, twenty-five Delegates to Colonial or Confederational Congresses, five members of international commissions, five delegates to the Constitutional Convention, three members of Parliaments, thirty-four United States Judges, fifty-eight Governors, five military and naval officers, and one foreign judge; total, 647. This list does not include many names of well-known men who studied in Harvard, but did not take a degree. Among these are Chief Justice Fuller and Justice Brown, of the United States Supreme Court; ex-Secretary of State John W. Foster, General Horace Porter, William C. Whitney and Senator Gray, of Delaware.—New York Tribune.

Complexities of Law.

Soon after Jim's admission as a learned counsellor, an old neighbor to give him a start gave him a lot of hard claims to collect, telling him he could have half that was collected. Jim soon collected half that was due from one of the debtors and was called on a little later by his client for his share of the money. "Your half," said the astute lawyer. "I didn't collect your half. I only collected mine." The astonished old patron said, "Why, Jim, I don't understand such proceeding." But the lofty reply was, "There is a heap of law you don't understand. I tell you, old fellow, this law is a powerful thing."—Case and Comment.

The Lightest Known Solid.

The lightest known solid is said to be the pith of the sunflower, with a *specific gravity of .028, or about one-*eighth that of cork. The sunflower is extensively cultivated in central Russia, and various uses are served by its different parts, the recent discovery of the lightness of the pith essentially increasing the commercial value of the plant. For life-saving appliances at sea, cork has a buoyancy of one to five, while with the sunflower pith one to thirty-five is attained. About eight hundred cubic inches would weigh as much as one cubic inch of iridium, the heaviest metal.

At the English Church Congress the Dean of Rochester told the following story: A country clergyman was away for his holiday, and a benevolent neighbor, who had a curate, took his Sunday duties. After he had preached his first sermon he remarked to the clerk of the vestry, "I am sorry that I have given you such a short discourse, but the reason is that a dog got into my study and tore out several leaves." ORIGIN OF THE CARDIFF GIANT.

A Fake Petrified Body which Barnum Paid $10,000 for.

The recent discovery of a petrifi[ed] giant of huge *proportions in the neigh*borhood of New Haven, Conn., recalls the first petrified product which was manufactured in California during the early days by a newspaper man, bearing the name of Chester Hull who not only designed the gentleman, but afterward discovered the so-called fossil himself and sold it to P. T. Barnum who exhibited it around the country as the Cardiff giant.

Hull, who had a liking for clay modelling, conceived the idea of constructing a colossal man of cement and burying it in a damp spot on a heavily wooded hillside, where, after three years of interment, it would become mouldy and assume evidence of great age. When the time arrived for exhuming the fake Hull, accompanied by his brother, who was also something of a humorist, took out a picnic party and as though by accident spread their lunch baskets on the very spot where the cement man was moulding his himself into artificial age. Hull insisted on roasting some potatoes, brought along for the occasion, and proceeded to dig a hole wherein to build a fire. While digging he came upon what proved to be the foot of his previous plant.

He then got an old broken down geologist and an anatomist to swear that the fossil was genuine and notified Barnum at once. When the old showman saw the so-called petrification he looked at Hull laughingly and said: "My boy, I know it's a fake, but what's it worth to you?"

The bullnote modestly asked $10,000 and got it, and, turning over the sworn statement of the geologist that it was stone, and that of the anatomist that it was once alive, delivered the creation to its purchaser, who took it on the road and made ten times the money he had invested.

FIRST SILVER WEDDING.

Origin of the Custom Dates Back to the Reign of Hugh Capet.

The fashion of silver weddings dates back to the reign of Hugues Capet, King of France in 987, says Vogue.

Once as Hugues was arranging his uncle's affairs he found on one of the estates a servant who had grown gray in the service of his relative. He had been such a friend of his master's that he was almost looked upon as one of the family.

On the farm with this old man was also a serving woman who was as old as he, and also unmarried, and who had been the most devoted and hardworking of the women servants of the king's household. When King heard these praises of the two, he ordered them to be brought before him and said to the woman:

"Your service is great, greater than this man's, whose services were great enough, for the woman always finds work and obedience harder than a man, and therefore I will give you a reward. At your age I know of none better than a dowry and a husband. The dowry is here—the farm from this time on belongs to you. If this man who has worked with you five and twenty years is willing to marry you then the husband is ready."

"Your Majesty," stuttered the old peasant confusedly, "how is it possible that we should marry, having already silver hairs?"

"Then it shall be a silver wedding,' answered the King, "and here I give you a wedding ring," drawing a costly ring from his finger, and placing in the hands of the thankful old people together.

This soon became known all over France, and raised such enthusiasm that it became a fashion after a twenty-five years' marriage to celebrate a silver wedding.

He Was Sorry for Their Loss.

An eminent preacher, according to "The San Francisco Argonaut," who prided himself upon his ability to use course without the aid of notes, once got into his pulpit, but when he found himself face to face with his congregation his memory vanished and his mind was a blank. He tapped his forehead but in vain; his ideas would not come. "My friends," he said, "I pity you; you have lost a fine sermon," and he descended the pulpit steps.

Nothing Dense About Him.

"What, no telephone?" asked one of the regular callers at the drug store. "Why did you have it taken out?"

AN AUTOGRAPH QUILT.

Product of the Industry of an Aged Woman for the Future.

One of the greatest curiosities in Topeka is a quilt made by Mrs. Cornelia Blackman, of Pittsburg. Mrs. Blackman is 74 years old, and has spent ten years of her life working on the quilt. The quilt is made of bits of ribbon, each containing the autograph of some statemen or well-known man or woman. Mrs. Blackman sent the ribbon to the celebrities herself, and she collected 479 autographs in that manner.

Among the names on the quilt are Roscoe Conkling, ex-President and Mrs R. B. Hayes, Benjamin Harrison, Grover Cleveland, Kate Field, General W. T. Sherman, Senator John Sherman, Lotta, Kate Douglas Wiggin, W. Q. Gresham and P. B. Plumb. To every name attaches some interesting history. For instance, Mrs. Blackman sent a piece of ribbon to Roscoe Conkling for his signature. He blotted one side, and, turning the ribbon over, wrote on the other side. She returned the ribbon, and Mrs. Conkling blotted him that she was surprised that a man of his standing should treat an old woman as he had done. This had its effect, and the ribbon came back all right, with a letter from Mr. Conkling apologizing for his carelessness.

Some of the names she has secured signatures from but two people who have not made themselves famous by some act. Those two are John W. Mackay, the California multi-millionaire, and Ward McAllister, now dead, but who was the leader of New York's Four Hundred for many years. She says that she does not consider that these men ever did anything to entitle them to a place among the famous on the quilt, but she put them there to have variety.—Topeka, Kan., Journal.

ARMORED PLANTS.

Thorns and Spines that Protect Plants from Their Enemies.

Did you ever stop to think why thistles are so well armed with sharp prickles or why the ugly roadside nettles are furnished with stinging hairs? Before such questions as these can be solved why thistles or nettles grow; see how careful they are to let those disagreeable plants alone. That is the reason for the stings and the spines. See the honey locust tree bristling with its formidable array of sharp-pointed thorns. What animal is brave enough to try to rob it of its leaves or great pods? Hawthorns, too, and rose bushes and blackberry briars all have their abundant swords and daggers to defend themselves against browsing animals.

Out on the wide, hot deserts of Arizona and New Mexico those odd plants, the cacti, grow in great numbers. Some of them take strange shapes—tall, fluted columns, branching candelabra, or mere round balls, like the melon-cactus. They are almost the only plants that grow in some parts of that country, and there is always plenty of sap inside their tough skins. To the hungry and thirsty creatures that roam those dreary wastes in search of food and water they are very tempting. Were they not in some way protected, these cacti would soon be entirely destroyed. But nature has made them to be like strong forts or great armored battle ships among plants. They are guarded by all sorts of sharp spines and prickles and the hairs that burn when they get into the flesh.—St. Nicholas.

Looking on the Bright Side.

The habit of looking on the bright side of things is a good one, and is worth a great deal to each one who cultivates it. Certainly one should not cultivate the habit of looking on the dark side, especially when he must draw on his forebodings and apprehensions for a victim of that dark side, and thus see not only what does not exist but also what never will exist. God promises grace for each time of need, but not for each time of worry and anxiety. He promises to be with His people when they pass through the fire, but He does not promise to extinguish the fire before it has been lighted. He says that when His people pass through the waters they shall not overflow them, and we ought to be satisfied with that. If we trust in God the disasters we dread most will never come, or if they do He will change the disaster into benediction.

If any of our subscribers, says the Hazel Green Herald, have wells that are falling in water and will put a plat of salt in their well they will find an increase of water within twenty-four hours. THE SECOND BOY COMPTROLLER.

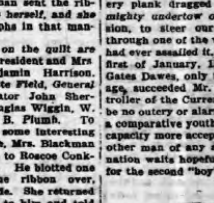
Mr. Cleveland and Mr. McKinley Both Selected Young Men for the Position.

A mere boy! one of Cleveland's blunders! A stripling to hold the country's finances in his hand; folly of almost criminal type! A pity to tempt a young man into so perilous a position!

This was the general feeling, when, in 1893, Mr. Herron Scott, then a mere five years old, undertook, with its every plank dragged downward by the *mighty undertow of business depres*sion, to steer our banking system through one of the worst storms which had ever assailed it. But when, on the first of January, 1897, Mr. Charles Gates Dawes, only thirty-two years of age, succeeded Mr. Eckles as Comptroller of the Currency, there seems to be no outcry or alarm. For four years, a comparative youth has served in this capacity more acceptably than had any other man of any age for years. The nation waits hopefully and confidently for the second "boy" Comptroller.



CHARLES GATES DAWES.

Mr. Dawes is the son of Gen. R. R. Dawes, who is a member of the famous Iron Brigade, and who served with McKinley in Congress. Gen. Dawes and Major McKinley were also in the same army during the war, and have ever since been warm friends. Last summer, at the reunion of the "Iron Brigade," at *Devil's Lake in North Dako*ta, Gen. Dawes, disabled by an accident, was not able to respond to the toast in his honor, and his son was called upon in his stead. The unaffected eloquence of Mr. Dawes, in referring to his father, moved the audience almost to the point of tears, an example of the enthusiasm which Mr. Dawes can arouse as a speaker.

Mr. Dawes, though his preference and instincts all turned to business, was educated for a lawyer. At nineteen, he was graduated, with honors, *from Marietta College. During his va*cations in college and law school, and for a little while after his graduation, he secured the experience of a civil engineer by working with construction parties in building railroads, and finally became chief engineer of a road now constituting a portion of the Toledo and Ohio Central Railroad.

In 1887, he opened a law office in Lincoln, Neb. Here, he frequently met Governor Silas Garber, between whom and himself there exists, in spite of their radically different political views, a close friendship. Finding a law practice hard to build up, and having more heart for other things, Mr. Dawes engaged, with capital advanced by his father and friends, in several of the business enterprises of Lincoln, including a national bank, of which he was made a director; and, finding these much more profitable than the law, he practically abandoned the latter profession.

TOURING IN A TROLLEY CAR.

Denver's Unique Way of Showing Visitors the Town.

A novel arrangement has been in operation in Denver for some time past which might well be adopted in other large cities which have a complicated network of street railway tracks running to every section of the city. The institution referred to is nothing more nor less than a personally-conducted tour of the town in a trolley car. A tourist company leases a number of open cars from one of the companies, and these are attached to cars with the other lines for the use of their tracks a complete circuit of Denver can be made.

The car makes one trip in the morning and another in the evening, going the rounds of the hotels, where it picks up the passengers. The trip covers forty miles, and is made in two hours and a half. A prettily printed souvenir is given to each passenger, which illustrates and describes the several points of interest, and a guide accompanies each car and explains and points out the objects that are reached. In this way, for the nominal sum of 25 cents, which is the fare charged, a visitor can see Denver without missing anything and without fatigue. The car itself is called "Seeing Denver," and has proved very popular.

Chocolate Cream.

To make chocolate cream take ½ oz. of gelatine, put it into a basin and just cover with cold milk; let it stand 2 or 3 hours. Boil ½ pint of cream, and ¼ pint of milk; add the basin, let over the gelatine, stir till it dissolves. Scrape 2 ozs. of chocolate from a cake of it, put it with 1 oz. of loaf sugar into a pan, add the cream, &c., by degrees, mixing the chocolate in quite smooth; stir over the fire until it thickens a little; take it off, leave to cool, then add the whites of 2 eggs beaten to a froth, continue to whisk until it begins to get stiff, then cut it into a mould that will be packed in cold [illegible]

CAR HORSES HARD TO GET.

Since Electricity Was Introduced the Market Channels Have Been Closed.

One of the most curious effects of the general replacing of horses by electricity and cable traction for drawing street cars is being experienced by one of the extensive car lines in New York city which still uses horses. The Sun says one would suppose that, since the only lines in the whole country which continue to use horses now form but a very small percentage of those which used them five years ago, these lines would have a large surplus of choice, and could get horses of a grade superior to the general run of those which used to be offered to them. Remarkable as it may seem, this is the exact opposite of the truth.

The New York city line referred to runs in direct competition with the cable lines of the upper west side, and its managers, who recently purchased it, determined as soon as they came into possession to place upon it a superior lot of horses. They were going improve its running until mechanical propulsion could be introduced. Orders were sent out to buy the needed horses. Much to the surprise of the managers, it was discovered that there were almost no street-car horses of any kind to be bought.

The explanation of this situation lies in the fact that since the demand for street-car horses almost ceased, the trade machinery by which they were gathered has fallen into disuse. A few years ago the street-car horses were one of the most important features of the horse market. They were animals of a standard grade and of almost stable price, and every part of the country contributed its quota. The street-car horse had to be big and able, and sound of limb and wind, but it might be of any age. Few lasted long enough in the service to make the question of a few years more or less of any consequence. The demand was constant, and the price never varied in New York more than from $125 to $150 each. Dealers could always count upon getting this price and getting it promptly, and as a consequence every horse which would answer the purpose was a safe investment at a little smaller price, and a clean profit of $10 a horse was regarded as a fair margin in handling them.

Horses of all sorts, which lacked the qualities of speed, beauty or youth, but possessed the other requirements, were quickly sorted out from the markets of the whole country, and every big dealer was always able to gather droves of car horses as fast as the companies needed them. The cable has superseded the car horse, and car horses are no longer quoted as staples in the market. The companies which still use them are obliged to go out and search the marts and buy them one by one, instead of simply sending out an order for 100 or 200 of 500 and getting them readily.

DEPEW TAKES TO THE WHEEL.

The President of the New York Central Surrenders to the Bicycle Craze.

There was a subdued air of excitement around the Grand Central Station. The atmosphere was strongly tainted with a smell of iodine and liniment. Telegraph instruments clicked noisily all the day, and it wasn't long before it was known from one end of the road to the other that Chauncey had taken to riding a wheel. That Chauncey M. Depew, after sixty-three years of total abstinence, suddenly should go on a violent and prolonged bicycle tear was too much. One glance at Mr. Depew as he sat in his office confirmed the report that he is at least an enthusiastic wheelman. Sundry scratches showed that all had not been smooth sailing on the start, but the contour of his face showed a remarkable resemblance to the bicycle face of a veteran.

A year ago Mr. Depew was the stoutest opponent of the bill compelling railroads to carry bicycles as baggage. Now he is a convert to the silent steed. He gloried in the defeat of the Bicycle Baggage bill, and says, with a chuckle, "It was a great victory for us wheelmen." Mr. Depew caught the bicycle fever at Newport. It was a sudden and violent attack. He learned to ride with remarkable ease, and announced that he would keep at it for all time. He similarly said that he was not a candidate for a ride on a silver bicycle from Nice to Naples, adding: "I hardly think two trips to Europe in a year would be advisable." His vanity's discuss makes, century runs, sprockets, saddles or other data dear to a wheelman's heart, and explained apologetically, "I am only a beginner. When everything gets in working order I will be ready to talk with any one."—New York Tribune.

AMERICAN SUCCESS IN GERMANY.

Well Conducted Business Enterprises Flourishing All Over the Kingdom.

It is a noteworthy fact that nearly every American firm that has come to Germany during the last few years has succeeded in a remarkable measure, provided only that caution and sound business principles have been coupled with energy. Thus, there is an Ohio cash register firm that established a branch in Berlin a couple of years *ago. At first they were in small, cramp*ed quarters. Now they occupy palatial offices in the leading thoroughfare, and their trade is thriving all over the empire. They employ a large force of men, and make plenty of money. It is the same way with the typewriting machines that are being imported here and that sell like hot cakes. The one that was first in the field now has a number of competitors, and all of them are doing finely. These American machines as yet cannot compare with them in efficiency, although they sell at a much lower figure.

The American laundry system was introduced here a few months ago by a German-American named Henrici. The system consists in the prompt collection of soiled linen and its prompt and reliability in delivery and because of its low prices. Now there are three competitors in the city alone, and all are making money. Several Chicago firms are among these successful innovators. One of them, a publishing firm, is just now issuing the best and cheapest work on Bismarck yet seen, with hundreds of excellent process pictures based on instantaneous photographs. Only the American insurance companies, which for a time flourished like a green bay tree, are in the dumps, because the Prussian Government will not rescind its order forbidding their doing business according to their American methods.

THE BOY KING OF SPAIN.

In Six Years He Will Mount the Throne and Preside at the Bullfights.

What a long name for one boy to have Alfonso Leon Fernando Maria Santiago Isidoro Paschal Marcian Ri! Perhaps it is all right that he should have eight *names, for he is one of the most in*teresting boys in the world. In six years more this little man of nearly twelve will mount the throne of Spain. When he was born, May 17, 1886, a royal salute of twenty-one guns boomed out from the palace, then up went the Spanish standard over the palace, the bells chimed, and the cannon roared. What a day that was! The great camerera-major, the President of the Council, the Captain-General of Madrid, and the Commander of the Halberdiers, and all the lords and ladies, excitedly announced that a little king had arrived. This boy loves the sports of which other boys are so fond. His bicycle and his pet pony are his favorites. A boys' battalion was organized three years ago, and, of course, this little king became their leader. Their uniforms are very bright and pretty, and when they have their annual parade, march, drill and charge with bayonets, the sight is very stirring.

THE BOY KING OF SPAIN

Wanted Only His Head.

After Frederick the Great ascended the throne he paid very little attention either to the adorning of his own person or to that of the individuals honored with his conversation. As to himself, he was only fond of silk stockings, which he wore once a year, on the occasion of the Queen's birthday, when an entertainment was given at her palace. M. Thiebault, one of the professors of the Royal Academy, who was left behind him several years, gives accounts of his conversations with the King, relates that, having once waited on Frederick, when summoned in a hurry, in his travelling dress, he offered an humble apology for the negligence of his attire.

"On hearing my excuse," says Thiebault, "he turned his eyes towards me with a look of disdain, and said, 'You know well enough I never attend to such miserable considerations as these. Observe me; when I send for you you may be as neglectful as you please about your dress, and I shall give myself little concern; but do not forget to bring your head, and I shall be satisfied.' I want only your head.'"

In the same manner, the party must resort to its guns and hunt for the musk ox, the white bear and the seal, which animals are in any reach, more frequently not to be found at all. Game in these regions is never to be depended upon.—New York Tribune.

THE SPANISH PEASANTS.

A Patient and Long Suffering Class—The Cause of Their Misery.

In the Spanish lower classes you will find poverty and appalling ignorance—a neglect of the intelligence which is positively animal—yet nevertheless not unallied with an obvious capacity of education and improvement, an actual and delightful vivacity of mental quickness, a temper grateful, hospitable, and affectionate, and a marvelous sobriety of living.

There is one especial word particularly applicable to this gente baja. It is the Spanish word sufrida, which we must render in a single English word by patient; but it means more than patient; it means patient and unvindictive under grievous injury and wrong.

Such are the Spanish peasantry—the cream of the Spanish people. Their only provinces in relation to their government is to pay. They are a passive vehicle for ministerial extortion. The contributions are already heavier than they can bear, and grow more merciless as each successive administration plunges the country deeper into debt. There is no term for this continuous disbursement they receive nothing. Their lands are without a road, their children without a school; their navy is furnished with ships contracted for at double the price of ours, whose only quality is to go to the bottom without the shadow of a cause; their army is unpaid, unofficered, and undrilled, and absolutely incompetent to engage with any European power. The last Spanish census shows that of a total population of 18,000,000 over 6,000,000 can neither read nor write, while over half have no determined occupation. This statement is in itself so damaging that it appears hardly necessary to inquire further.—Westminster Review.

A USEFUL ANT-EATER.

Nearly Exterminated the Caterpillar from the Trees.

When a horde of hairy, yellow caterpillars infested the linden trees in the Philadelphia Zoological Gardens the superintendent was much troubled for a way to get rid of the pests. Poisonous sprinkling mixtures, tar and coal oil were all applied to the trees, but the results fell far short of what had been hoped. The caterpillars flourished in spite of all, and seemed to increase in numbers.

Then the ingenious head keeper had a happy idea. He took the South American ant-eater from its cage, and securing it with a collar and a long cord, started it up one of the trees. The way the creature laid about with its long, sticky tongue, scooping in caterpillars by the dozen, more than realized the keeper's greatest expectations. It took to them with as much relish as though they were its natural food, and in the course of half an hour completely cleaned the tree.

Then the ant-eater was put up another tree, and it ate until it was gorged. Since then it has been turned out three times a day, and so great have been its industry and appetite that the caterpillars are nearly exterminated.

THROWN OFF THE SCENT.

Device by Which Burglars Fooled the Bloodhounds.

Sometime ago a bank in Shipshewana, Ind., was visited by burglars, who blew open the safe and secured a large sum of money. A famous pack of bloodhounds was brought from Indianapolis and turned loose upon the robbers' trail. The man hunt lasted only a few minutes. Suddenly the leading dog began howling dismally and refused to go farther, and it was impossible to continue the chase.

Later a prisoner in jail at Ligonier, Ind., turned State's evidence and gave the police all the facts concerning the bank burglary and the subsequent escape of the men. He said the bloodhounds were thrown off the scent without any trouble by rubbing an onion on the shoes worn by the burglars. He added that no bloodhound can be induced to follow an onion trail.—Chicago Times-Herald.

Compressed Flour.

The importance of lightness and compactness in the kit of soldiers has stimulated the manufacturers of army food stuffs to produce all manner of concentrated products for use on the march or in camp. Of these the latest is compressed flour, which is now being tested by the British War Department. The objection to the use of bricks of national grassries is the impossibility of storing wheat for any length of time. The grain soon germinates and is ruined. The flour is now molded into bricks by hydraulic pressure, in which shape it is unaffected by damp, and proof against insects and wholesome. The compression is said to destroy all forms of larval life, and the flour becomes immune against the attacks of insects. Since the cubic space occupied by 168 pounds of loose flour will hold more than 300 pounds of the compressed flour, it will be seen that the saving in storage is immense.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

PLAINFIELD, N. J.

A. L. Force, Editor and Proprietor

A Few Words for Plainfield.

Plainfield has long enjoyed a high reputation as one of the healthiest as well as one of the most attractive of New Jersey towns, of which no stronger evidence could be afforded than the fact that a large proportion of its residents do business in the great commercial capital of the country. Although twenty-four miles from New York, the railroad facilities bring it nearer to the business centre of the great metropolis than many of the districts within its immediate boundaries. To the signal advantages it possesses in its admirable railroad service, as well as its established character as a sanitary resort, may be attributed its rapid increase within a comparatively few years in its population, and the fact that it is second to no other place in our State in regard to the varied architectural beauty of its residences. Plainfield is a model city in this respect, and although it may not aspire to rival in palatial magnificence the mansions of the wealthy in other localities, its people may feel a just pride in the style and elegance of their houses as well as in the picturesque character of the suburbs in which they are located. Take it altogether, Plainfield is not second to any town in the State in all those essential features that render it desirable as a place of residence.

If This is True!

It is stated that the Plainfield Street Railway Company has decided to have the streets along their lines sprinkled. If this be true the people of Plainfield will feel duly thankful. It is to be hoped that the news is true, and that our local trolley conquerer will do likewise. It takes all the pleasure out of one's ride to have to swallow dust, not to speak of the injury to clothes.—New Brunswick Home News.

"If this is true!" These it is, the same in New Brunswick as in Plainfield—people are suspicious of the trolley magnates' pretentions that they are going to obviate the aggravating fault of filling the air with dust whenever a trolley car whizzes by. Yes, Home News, it has been stated—more than once, too—that the people of this city were to be made free from whirlwinds of dust by the profound liberality of the street railway company, but it is a fact that just as much dust flies in the wake of the trolley cars now as there ever did. We don't know whether New Brunswick has got any way to bring her local company to terms, but we do know that if the Common Council of this city had the interests of the aggravated residents and business men along the various lines of the street railway truly in view, they will inculcate into the ordinance, which the company is striving to have passed, a clause making it obligatory upon the company to sprinkle the streets in a sufficient manner.

Sprinkling the Streets.

It seems that it is the duty of the street committee of the Common Council to shame the restrictions to be inculcated into the ordinance which the Plainfield Street Railroad Company have petitioned to have enacted so that they may construct and operate their proposed Scotch Plains extension.

Well, if that is the case we hope that those officials will recognize the fact that people who reside along the various lines of the street railway are anxious for some permanent relief from the aggravating fault of the air being filled with dust as every trolley car whizzes by. One of the sure ways of compelling the trolley magnates to remedy this condition of affairs is to inject into the ordinance, that is to be passed, a clause making it obligatory upon the company to regularly and sufficiently sprinkle the streets along their tracks to lay the dust.

America has had already more distinguished admirals than England. Nelson, of course, stands as peerless as Wellington in naval history, but we have had more sea fighters of the second rank than Great Britain. Our heroes are Paul Jones, Macdonough, Barry, Lawrence, Bainbridge, Hull, Decatur, Perry, Stewart, Dupont, Winslow, Foote, Porter and Farragut. This list brings us down to the present war and here we have one who may prove the greatest of them all, George Dewey.

Other things being equal, the person or the nation that has the most money will win, but money alone, without other good qualities, corrupts and weakens those who possess it.

The Crop Outlook.

It is too early yet to predicate any forecast of our cereal production for 1898 on reports sufficiently comprehensive to be fairly reliable. But so far as these reports have been published they are on the whole favorable to the United States. The winter wheat sowing has been nobly, and though the spring wheat sowing was in some cases under a second sowing they are on the whole of reasonable promise. The total area planted is 35 per cent larger. The late spring rains and cold have somewhat hampered growth, but if the summer season should be reasonably propitious there is no reason why the wheat crop of 1898 should not greatly surpass that of its predecessor.

On the other hand, the outlook in Europe, though better than that of last year, does not compare well with our own. Bad weather rotted the seed quite generally in France, Austria-Hungary and European Russia, compelling second sowing. The growth has been slow and uneven, and at the best it is not expected to reach an average.

Another failure of European wheat crops would precipitate political disorder and popular distress to a degree which we can scarcely overestimate. The Roman Cæsars kept the people down by gratifying the outcry "panem et circenses" (which may be translated, "lots of bread and lots of fun"). The modern Cæsars don't give their subjects much fun, and if there is a pinch in the bread question it means serious mischief, as shown for example in the late Milan riots. However much we may deplore foreign strifes, it would mean for us, with good crops at home, a more than usually powerful fulcrum of increased wealth and prosperity this year.

North and South.

All war is a grim and terrible fact, however supreme may be its underlying motive, but there are sometimes even casual conditions which go far to offset its horror. All sections of our land rent 35 years ago with such a volcanic tumult of civil strife are now united heart and hand as they never were in the palmiest days of yore. The finishing agency to remove the last vestige of bitterness has been the flame of enthusiasm and unrivaled valor which is now warming the whole nation with its common glow. Even till lately some lingering grudge of sore hearts was sometimes evident, perhaps unconsciously so. For this our present war is the final balm of healing. Henceforth we can be one in our most secret sympathies and sentiments. This is strikingly symbolized in the spectacle of Chickamauga park.

That historic site in September, 1863, was the most dreadful slaughter pen of a most murderous war. The grim tenacity of the struggle was only equaled by that of Gettysburg. Two square leagues were literally drenched with the blood of brothers embattled for mutual destruction. Now that old field of carnage is the most important rendezvous and organization camp of the troops of north and south, burning with the rivalry of love, not of hate. To quote the lines of a recent war poem:

> Bright oriflamme of liberty,
> One hammered blazon flaunts the sky
> And hails that "embodied sea,
> A gallant people's anguished cry.
> Now brothers touch in common weal
> To right the foreign wrong with steel.

We observe that once more newspaper writers are amusing themselves discussing the question why great men live unhappily with their wives. Meantime, do great men live unhappily with their wives? Have they done so in the past? No, decidedly. Man for man, these great ones have been just as happy as the common run of mankind. Gladstone's life is a shining illustration of the truth of this statement; so was Tennyson's. The great poet's wife blotted out her own individuality and gave her life to her husband. Washington's domestic life was a model of felicity. Grant's greatest happiness was to be at home with his family. It is true that sometimes men think they are great and try to pose as such when their wives known to be hollow humbugs. Who can blame a woman for speaking out her mind under such circumstances?

The Alaskan homestead and right of way law was one badly needed. Until its passage no man could own a foot of land in the whole territory. Now homesteaders may take out land patents and secure their ground as in other territories, mineral lands being exempt. The salmon fisheries in the southwestern part of Alaska ought to be put under strict surveillance, or this valuable fish will become extinct there. The salmon canning industry is now worth $3,000,000 a year in Alaska.

The Open Door.

Unrestricted commercial opportunity in the orient, for which British diplomacy has carried the picturesque phrase of "the open door," appeals vigorously to American sympathy and advantage. Whatever may be the outcome of the present war in fixing our status in the east as a power de jure and de facto the principle of trade freedom in the vast markets now being rapidly opened to civilized enterprise is an inevitable factor in our national policy. The need of outlet for our surplus products in the case of a people matchless in commercial energy and manufacturing skill is sure to be bigger each year. The last decade has shown that we can compete favorably as an export nation in a great variety of our most important products. "The open door" then is full of significance to the United States. It is of even more value to England, and on that basis the two countries stand with locked hands in opposition to the declared or implied policy of three great powers who have a strong foothold on the shores of the eastern Pacific.

Harper's Weekly in a recent editorial is disposed while welcoming "the open door" to be fearful over the maintenance of such a policy as opposed to the theory and practice of "protection." This is the sarcasm of a doctrinaire. The question is not one of ethics, of abstract right and wrong. It is a practical problem. Great Britain even is protectionist in part or in whole in some of her confederated dominions, as, for example, Canada and Victoria. The most ardent protectionists in the United States accepted Mr. Blaine's reciprocity doctrines as belonging to the logic of the situation. The Dingley bill also takes them into account. So far as the duties of free trade and high tariff at home are considered both sides can unite heartily and consistently as to an oriental policy of unrestricted competition.

Whatever may be the occult effect of kindred and a common language in determining the cordial sympathy of Great Britain in our present war, community of interest is a still more potent element. As this commercial fact is likely to remain unimpaired in the great overshadowing international question now looming on the historic horizon it promises to be a strong welding force in the unity of Anglo-Saxon destiny, a new impulse to the "step in line" and "touch of elbow" in the march of a world conquering race.

A Flood of Gold.

The gold production of 1896 promises to be greatly in excess of any previous output in our own records or those of the world. The statement of Assistant United States Treasurer Muhleman is of interest in this connection:

> The outlook is that we are to have a great increase in the gold product. As yet the Klondike gold has not come in owing to the ice, but it is estimated at $20,000,000 or more when the season opens.
> There will also be a large increase from present ins' tations from Colorado and other mining States. Many of the leading men in the electric boom people are trying to extend their facilities for obtaining and treating the increased gold which is expected to flow from these States. If they get a lot of the precious metal out there will be a sudden reduction in the extra large supply from Australia, they will be overlooked and the surplus would come east.

The increase in Australian gold and that of the rand of South Africa, which shows an augment of $20,000,000 this year over the product of last, will also greatly swell the aggregate. Whatever policy the government may mainly adopt in raising its war expenses this great surplus of gold, which is also accompanied by an increasing value of silver, will prove a most favorable factor in the immediate financial situation.

Experts have begun to discover that the prejudice in favor of wine from grapes only is unreasonable and unfounded. Whisky that would make even a cowboy hilarious is made from potato parings, wood shavings or almost any old thing. In like manner it has been found that barley will make a first class wine, whether it be sherry, port or today. The Frenchman Pasteur found this out in the course of his experiments-tions with hydrophobic germs and other bad things. He did not utilize the discovery commercially, however. The Germans have done that. Barley malt at the fermentation point has lactic and vinous acids added to it, and these produce the wine, which contains 19 per cent alcohol. It is favorably received at the hospitals in Germany and is considered very pure and healthful.

The surest way to suppress prizefighting is to get flash light pictures of the faces of the two human brutes just when they are in the midst of one of their most exciting rounds. Such downright hideous repulsiveness as they present was never conceived outside of a delirium tremens dream. A civilized bulldog would be ashamed to look like them.

No nation can ever be a great naval power unless it has plenty of coal, that, too, where it can be quickly obtained. It is almost as much her pièce de résistance as the fine staying qualities of her sons that enable Britannia to rule the wave.

A large proportion of the Spanish debt is owed to the Roman Catholic church. Pope Leo naturally made a very earnest effort to prevent the war and save the church's property.

Spain has 26,000 schoolteachers and 26,000 priests.

An Industrial Revolution.

Under the frowning guns and in presence of the whole armed camp of Europe a revolution has been progressing for the past half century that promises to change the economic condition of the common people among all the nations.

It is an industrial revolution, and its labor name is co-operation. In America the pressure on the poor is not felt as it is in the older countries. Here man has opportunity, therefore he has not been driven to defend himself by the system that has developed such astonishing dimensions in the old world. The methods adopted take two main forms, co-operative production, co-operative distribution. Co-operative production is especially the system in agricultural communities. Members of a local society club together for the purchase of agricultural machinery, the raising of crops and live stock and the production of butter and cheese, as in the great creameries of Denmark. It has been found that if a number of even the poorest peasants put their little means together and work intelligently they can achieve much greater success than when each man works separately. In France the co-operative agricultural system is particularly successful. On the continent of Europe, in agricultural production and manufacture and in co-operative banks and societies, no less than $9,000,000,000 is invested, the money of the poor peasants and farmers.

The best example of co-operative distribution is found in Great Britain among the stores based upon the Rochdale system. This system means the putting together of their small means by a number of working people and buying dry goods, groceries, etc., at wholesale. These are invariably of the best quality and are retailed out among the members for the regular retail price in the neighborhood. The profits are given back to the members in the form of dividends. The scope of the original plan was enlarged till there are now an English co-operative wholesale society and a Scottish co-operative wholesale society. The net profits divided among members of these societies amounted in 1895 to more than $26,000,000. The societies own manufactories and a fleet of ocean and river steamers.

The Malarial Past.

One of the best bits of verse ever penned by that gifted young poetess of passion, Ella Wheeler Wilcox, begins, "Keep out of the past, the malarial past." She hit the nail square. There is a malaria of the mind for which no remedy quite so sure ever yet been discovered. It consists in dwelling on evils that are past. The patient afflicted with the mental malaria finds his chief joy in being miserable. He dwells on the misfortunes of his life, his troubles, his illnesses and his poverty, the ingratitude with which he has been treated, with a satisfaction that even his religion cannot give him. Very often it is a woman who has the habit of spreading mental malarial poison through her system. She draws upon the skeleton that another has suffered in the past as she has done. "You haven't gone through half of what I have!" she cries, with scornful indignation. Hour by hour she sits and broods over her wrongs—her beloved wrongs—and grows old, sallow, wrinkled and round shouldered. She will have it so, and she gets her wish. Her joy is in whining and complaining.

The wrongs of such persons are their most precious possessions, over which they gloat as a miser over his gold. When you are ill, when you have had losses or griefs, they will say to you always, "You have not had half the troubles and trials I have had!" At such times raise your head proudly, look the mental malarist square in the eye and answer, "I never had any trials and troubles at all."

Nobody likes to live with the person who has mental malaria.

In making bargains for the purchase of ammunition, soldiers' uniforms, food supplies and other necessaries the United States has the right of a private individual to buy where it can get goods the cheapest. Its plain duty is to do so, since it is handling the people's money. They are contemptible therefore who grumble because their case is not considered when supplies are ordered. The patriotic American is glad when Uncle Sam can save money. Genuine patriotism has goods for sale that the government wants, he will not stand and haggle for double prices. He will be content with reasonable profit, even as he would have to be if he sold to a private individual.

The war took the stiffening out of our foreign exports and caused them to drop off rapidly. Well, the United States government bought considerable of the food supplies that would otherwise have gone abroad. Taking 100,000 men at once from the ranks of producers and making them consumers only caused a big home market for flour and pork, likewise beef.

One of the recent orders to American shipbuilders was from Russia and included six cruisers, two battleships and a considerable fleet of torpedo boats. We fear the Russian government will have to wait awhile.

Some persons have such brilliant memories that they remember many things which never happened.

CLASS DAY ENJOYED ON SEMINARY LAWN.

Spreading Chestnut Trees Made a Rustic Setting.

UNIQUE EXERCISES HELD.

THE GIRL GRADUATES ACQUITTED THEMSELVES CLEVERLY.

A Cultured Audience in Attendance—A Pretty Ceremony Was the Planting of the Class Flower—Humorous Presentation Made.

One of the fine old chestnut trees on the beautiful lawn of the Plainfield Seminary gave token of an unusual event Monday afternoon. Its hugh trunk was girdled with roses and vines, above the floral decorations were the figures in silvers, 1898. A carpeted platform at the tree root suggested addresses, and many seats under the wide spreading branches of lofty trees hinted of an audience to be edified or entertained. All these suggestions and hints were fully realized when at four o'clock the class day exercises of the graduating class opened with the ancient history of the class, given by Miss Ethel Titsworth. Many of the juvenile propensities and achievements of which she told provoked a smile and the wonder, if the saying is true, that the "girl is mother of the woman," as "the boy is father of the man."

The modern history of the class, followed by Miss Helen Olendorf, was full of happy reminiscences of work and play. Class photographs by Miss Emma Sterling was a clever revelation of characters and tastes gathered by some unique system of X rays. The class poem, with the class flower, the Fleur de Lis for its subject, was given by Miss Harriet Ethen Strong and elicited hearty applause, as poems should.

Miss Margaret MacCready was the class prophet, and her predictions of the future fate of her classmates were full of happy hits. The presentation of mementoes was made by Miss Ethel VanBoskerck in a charming manner. To Miss Ruth Peckham was given implements to cultivate a taste for sewing; to Miss Ethel Titsworth, the youngest of the class, a rattle; to Miss Ruby Kelb, who is musical, a harmonicum; to Miss Harriet Strong a kitten for a companion; to Miss Helen Olendorf, whose travels have been limited between Bound Brook and Plainfield, a trunk; to Miss Margaret MacCready a bethlooned gridiron for roasting her victims; and Miss Emma Sterling "took the cake" for the best examinations in Roman history. Miss Ruth Peckham, the class president, gave the oration which led up to the planting of the class flower, the Fleur de Lis. This was a pretty ceremony accompanied by the singing of the class song and closed the exercises that had been full of interest and pleasure. Many flowers and gifts were received by the graduates as they concluded their parts.

THE WONDERS OF SCIENCE.

Lung Troubles and Consumption Can be Cured

An Eminent New York Chemist and Scientist Makes a Free Offer to Our Readers.

The distinguished chemist, T. A. Slocum, of New York City, demonstrating his discovery of a reliable cure for Consumption Pulmonary Tuberculosis), bronchial, lung and chest troubles, stubborn coughs, catarrhal affections general decline and weakness, loss of flesh, and all conditions of wasting away, will send THREE FREE BOTTLES (all different) of his New Discoveries to any afflicted reader of this paper writing for them.

His "New Scientific Treatment" has cured thousands permanently by its timely use, and he considers it a simple professional duty to suffering humanity to donate a trail of his infallible cure.

Science daily develops new wonders, and this great chemist, patiently experimenting for years, has produced results as beneficial to humanity as can be calmed by any modern genius. His assertion that lung troubles and consumption are curable in any climate is proven by "heartfelt letters of gratitude," filed in his American and European laboratories in thousands from those cured in all parts of the world.

The dread Consumption, uninterrupted, means speedy and certain death.

Simply write to T. A. Slocum, M. C., 98 Pine street, New York, giving postoffice and express address, and the free medicine will be promptly sent direct from his laboratory.

Sufferers should take instant advantage of his generous proposition.

CYCLE COP TOO FAST.

THRILLING CAPTURE MADE BY CHIEF MASHAL WILSON YESTERDAY.

Drunken Frenchman Was Driving in a Reckless Manner—Had Left His Friend Behind That He Might Be Free.

Emiel Ryer, a Frenchman, of Washingtonville, had a glorious time Sunday, which terminated in his arrest in the evening after some difficulty on the part of Chief Wilson. The latter has made a reputation for catching people on his wheel, and whenever he has given chase he has been successful in securing offenders.

Last Sunday evening Ryer went through Linden avenue in a carriage. He was driving the horse at a rapid pace and was very much under the influence of liquor. Chief Wilson gave chase. When Ryer turned into Somerset street from Linden avenue he almost ran over a number of people. Up Somerset street the man went at full speed, with the officer after him. When Greenbrook road was reached Ryer managed to turn in. He continued to ride at express speed. It was noticed, however, that the officer was gaining ground, and by the time Grove street was reached he was close enough to catch the horse by the head and bring him to a full stop. He then escorted the man and his rig to the borough lockup. The horse and wagon were put in Richard Boyce's stables, while Ryer was locked up.

It appears that Ryer and John Korer, also of Washingtonville, started out together. The former borrowed the rig from Caspar Wyxer, of the Valley, and told the latter that he wanted to take his wife out for her health.

The two men started out and when they reached the borough Korer said that he wanted to make a short call. He did so and while he was absent Ryer drove off and left his friend. After that, Ryer says, he cannot remember what took place.

Later Korer called on Chief Wilson and claimed that the rig belonged to him, and to prove his claim he produced several Italians as witnesses. This fact did not move the officer and he held the horse and wagon until this morning when Mr. Wyxer called and got his rig.

VETERAN WATCHMAN DIED MONDAY.

Benjamin Wright Passes Over the Great Divide.

FOUGHT IN THE CIVIL WAR.

FOR THIRTY YEARS HE PROTECTED THE BUSINESS SECTION.

Was Born in Milford, N. J. in 1822 —Has Been in Feeble Health for Some Time—A G. A. R. Member—He Leaves Three Sons

A figure for many years a familiar sight on the streets of Plainfield after most of her good citizens had retired to rest, has passed away. Benjamin Wright, the veteran watchman, died at his home, 213 West Fifth street, at 2 o'clock Monday a. m. While he has been confined to his bed for two weeks and was in a precarious state, the end came rather unexpectedly.

Benjamin Wright was born at Milford, N. J., in 1822. After spending most of his boyhood in that place he came to this city with his parents. At the outbreak of the Civil War he joined the volunteers and took part in several of the memorable battles of the war. At the close of the war he returned to Plainfield, where he subsequently became nightwatchman.

At that time there was no police protection in this city, save for a constabulary. The business men united in hiring Wright, who patrolled the streets in the business section, summer and winter, where he soon became a familiar figure to all the old citizens.

As the town grew, a police force was started and the city began to furnish the needed protection. Wright joined the force and served the city faithfully, but as he grew older he was gradually dropped. Then, as a special officer, he continued to watch the business section where he was employed by the property owners. The improvement in the protection by the city police force reduced the number who considered a watchman necessary. Wright was growing old and his health was very poor, so four years ago he retired and Geo. Rocks fellow took his place. He was watchman and policeman for thirty years.

Since that time Wright has resided in this city. Last April he moved to 213 West Fifth street, where he has lived ever since.

He was married twice and his second wife survives him. He had four sons by the first wife, three of whom are living. William Wright lives on West Front street and is employed in the Potter Press Works. Louis Wright makes his home in Bayonne, and Peter Wright is at the San Remo Hotel, New York.

For the last three months, Mr. Wright has been complaining of very poor health but it was not until two weeks ago that he was compelled to take to his bed. His death was caused by a complication of diseases.

He was a member of Winfield Scott Post, No. 73, G. A. R. He was also a member of the Congregational church.

Mr. Wright was a member of Co H, of the 30th New Jersey Volunteers, which was headed by Captain Hubbard.

Big Turtles Reported Seen.

The water which was allowed to run out of the South Plainfield pond ten days ago was turned in Monday, and in a short time the pond was as full as ever. The water was let out so as to kill the eel grass which was choking up the channel Any number of turtles could be seen in the pond all last week, burrowing into the mud, and some of them are said to weigh between seventy and 100 pounds.

DAY IN THE CHURCHES FOR THE LITTLE FOLKS

Special Services Arranged for the Children.

MUCH FLORAL DECORATION

SINGING AND SPEAKING BY THE YOUNG CHRISTIANS.

A Beautiful Silk Banner Presented to the Primary Department in Trinity Reformed Church—Exercises in the Other Churches.

FIRST PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

The exercises at the First Presbyterian church consisted of songs and recitations by the school and a talk on "Lanterns" by the pastor. The service closed with singing the "Star Spangled Banner." Recitations were given by Miss Mary Lucky, who gave an outline of missionary work on the twentieth century movement, Edna Burr, Marian Engelhardt, Leah Hammond and Margaret Abbott.

The twentieth century movement in Presbyterian Sabbath-schools was told about by several members of the primary department. The movement was explained by Charles Lisk Alfred Dunsham, Harold George and Erwin Leland.

Two prizes were presented for learning the largest number of Scripture verses. Leah Hammond received first prize and Winnie Hammond the second. The prizes were books. The pulpit and platform were covered with a profusion of peonies, roses, daisies and greens. A large American flag was draped over the organ. The exercises were in charge of E. M. Case, the Sunday-school superintendent.

GRACE M. E. CHURCH.

The usual Children's Day exercises at this church were held in the morning. The church was appropriately decorated with flowers and roses, under the direction of Mrs. A. A. Taft, Miss Hoagland, Miss Clark and Miss Woolston. This committee also had charge of the programme, which was very interesting. At the close of the exercises the pastor, Rev. Mr. Gardner, made a short address to the children, and he baptized one infant. The programme rendered was as follows: Recitation, "Children's Day," twelve girls; "Dr. Sunshine," Charles Doerinyer, Emily Taft; "Miss Selfish and Lend-a Hand," Grace Woolston and Marion Major, Mildred Long; "A Little Maid's Sermon," Lottie Benner, Charles Powell; "The Flag," six girls; songs, "If I Were a Sunbeam," Edna Rice, Anna Hoagland, Rachel DeCamp; "Why Should Children be So Happy," school; "God Will Remember," school; "Children's Prayer," school, and a song was also given by Edna Sebring.

The opening exercises were in charge of the pastor and preceded the above programme. One feature of the decorations was the manner in which the flowers were arranged in front of the pulpit. The words "Children's Day" were spelled and could be plainly seen from any part of the room.

ALL SOULS CHURCH.

Children's Day exercises at All Souls' church were held immediately after the morning service. The pulpit platform was pretty trimmed with daisies, roses, peonies and grasses, which were afterwards distributed to the children, a very pretty custom. One infant was christened, Marjorie, the daughter of Murray and Marie A. Burtis, of Fairview avenue. The special exercises consisted of songs and recitations, the presentation of flowers, and an address by the pastor, Rev. A. C. Nickerson upon kindness to dumb animals. The exercises were in charge of E. Burr Smith, the superintendent. All Saints' school has grown rapidly since Mr Nickerson's pastorate began, and now numbers 55.

FIRST M. E. CHURCH.

Despite the great heat, there was a very large attendance at the Children's Day exercises of the Sunday-school of the First M. E. church Sunday afternoon. The Sunday-school assembled as usual in Vincent chapel and marched into the church, where the exercises were held. The superintendent, J. W. Jackson, presided.

A programme, entitled "Pictures of Heroic Methodism," was given. Several paper on the history of Methodism were read. There were recitations by the members of the primary department, under the charge of Mrs N Y. Hull, Rev. Dr. W. C. Snodgrass made a short address.

The floral display about the desk and platform was very handsome. It was arranged by Miss Susie Davis, Miss Persis Snodgrass and Miss Elsie Horne.

TRINITY REFORMED CHURCH.

The exercises at Trinity Reformed church were among the most elaborate in the city. They were held in the morning and were participated in by the members of the primary department. The exercises were very pretty and suggestive, and Mrs. J. M. Tier, the superintendent of the little folks' department, and her assistants, deserve great credit for the successful way in which everything was done.

The teachers and school were treated to a great surprise in the presentation of a banner to the primary department by William Olmstead, one of the teachers. The little people have long wanted a banner, but were not expecting one yesterday. The presentation was made in the Sunday-school before the regular exercises began. The entire class of children, 150 of them, formed in line with the banner at their head, carried by Lulu Vail, with Lena Sutton and Elsie Tier holding the cords, and all carrying a good-sized American flag, marched up stairs and twice around the church before taking their places. The congregation, not expecting this, enjoyed it very much.

The banner is of white satin with gold fringe, having on it in golden letters this verse, "A Little Child Shall Lead Them." The banner was designed by Mr. Olmstead, who was assisted in making it by Miss Sadie Soaring, another teacher

The exercises were very interesting and were in charge of the children. After the opening exercises and singing of "America" by the congregation, Edmund Tempilin, one of the scholars, delivered an address of welcome.

The following programme was then presented.

"Children's Day."....Georgie Dobbs, Willie McGee, Perry Holder, Rowland Reighton and Harold Schauck.
"Mis Apple".....Em.ly Tempilin
Motion Song.....Percy Parker, Dalis Dufford, Mary Neal, Frances Wendell, Elsie Tier, Flossie Yaeger, Edith Caleen, Bessie Randall and Evelyn Manier.
"The Birds Concert".....Laura Rollins
"Little Good for Nothing".....Elsie Dunavan
"The Dream".....Mabel Scribner
"The Queer Boy".....Alfred Manley
Song. "Keep Me Dear Saviour," Primary Department
"Only One Brick".....Ida Tier, Ira Vail, Hazel VanSickle, Arthur Williams, Sadie Hughes and Christie Mohon.
"The Builders".....Etta Trembley
Recitation and Song.
Emelia Day and Lulu Vail
"The House We Build".....Bessie Randall, John Schofield, Emma Yeager, Freddie Smith, Rose Hook, Willie Trembley, Anna Bodine and Cornelius Schenck.
Song. "Hosanna".....Gospel Knelling
Primary Class Joined in the Chorus.
Address.....By the Pastor

The church never looked prettier than it did Sunday with its floral decorations and its fresh, clean paint. The decorations were very elaborate. A beautiful arbor of daisies, twined with roses, stood on one end of the platform, while a harp of daisies and greens occupied the other end, and cut flowers and greens were strewn in the space between. Mr. Olmstead, assisted by Miss M. Eleanor VanDyke, Miss Martha Anthony, committees from the Christian Endeavor Society and the mission band, deserve much commendation for the work they did in decorating.

The banner received applause. The attendance was quite large, many children being noticed in the congregation.

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.

The Children's Day exercises were held in the Congregational church yesterday morning in the place of the regular preaching service. The classes of the Sunday-school gathered in the front pews and the remainder of the congregation occupied the others. There were carols by the school and by the members of the primary department. The pastor, Rev. C. L. Goodrich, made a short address to the children on the text, "God is Light."

The floral decorations were of an usual beauty. Palms and potted plants were grouped about the platform while cut flowers were in profusion On a long banner of evergreen, suspended over the pulpit, the words, "God is Light" were formed with daisies. There was a large attendance at the services.

PARK AVENUE BAPTIST CHURCH.

At the Park Avenue Baptist church the special service consisted of songs and recitations. The address of welcome was given by Miss Lizzie VanWinkle, and recitations were given by Miss Florence Smith, Harry Cuming, Harold Smalley, Miss Emily Runyon, Florence Cuming, Jemima Nankin, Frank Clarkson, Delice Purdy, Norman Hill, Thomas Nankin, Lillian Richardson, Elsie Giles, Viola Hillier and Lulu Stryker. The address to the children was given by Rev. Dr. Robert Lowry. The primary department exercises were in charge of Miss Myra Runyon, the superintendent, and consisted of songs by the class and recitations. Those who took part were Rowland Stover, Rex Purdy, Gordon Moy, Marguerite Ostrom, Jemima Nankin, Florence Smalley, Jeanette Ingraham, Millie Odam, Martha Soper and Autumn Delaney.

HOPE CHAPEL.

The Children's Day exercises at Hope chapel were very simple and consisted of concert recitations of the old books of the Bible, Ten Commandments and the Twenty-third Psalm. Mrs. G. K Newell was in charge of the children. An appropriate sermon was preached by Rev. G. Kennedy Newell.

FIRST BAPTIST CHURCH.

Children's Day at this church was observed in the morning and was in every way successful and pleasing to the large congregation present. The members and teachers of the Sunday-school occupied seats in the gallery. The pulpit platform was beautifully decorated with flowers, roses and ferns. During the service the choir rendered several anthems, while pretty solo were given by Mrs. Ward, contralto; Miss Harris, soprano, and G. W. Smith, tenor. The primary department, under the direction of Mrs. Powlison, sang several selections in a commendable manner. The opening exercises were conducted by Rev. Dr. D. J. Yerkes, pastor, and he also preached a patriotic sermon to the children. He explained in a simple manner the use of various flags in different countries, and more especially did he tell of the American flag and its symbols.

Regarding the Spanish flag, Dr. Yerkes said that its symbol was that Spain rules the world, but, said the doctor, she did at one time, but now she comes very far from it. The remarks by Dr. Yerkes were, indeed, interesting and the older people, as well as the children, enjoyed them. Miss Harris sang a very pretty solo while the offertory was being taken.

During Dr. Yerkes' talk he displayed an American flag and waving it so that all could see it, he said, "that flag should be first above every other flag that floats on land or sea."

WARREN CHAPEL.

At this chapel the Children's Day exercises were held Sunday afternoon. The feature of the programme were the recitations of Edna Bach, Emma Roantree, Elsie Dallas, Jennie Rowe and Ruth Wilson. The decorations around the platform were very pretty and were in charge of the Christian Endeavor Society flower committee of the chapel

MONROE AVENUE M. E. CHURCH.

"Pictures of Heroic Methodism" was the title of the special Children's Day service that was given by the Sunday school of the Monroe Avenue M. E. church Sunday afternoon. There was a large attendance of scholars and visitors. There were several papers read by members of the Sunday-school and recitations by the primary department. The pastor, Rev. W. C. O'Donnell, made a few remarks.

The church was handsomely decorated with flowers for the occasion. Potted plants were banked about the pulpit. There were numerous large bunches of daisies, and other cut flowers.

MOUNT OLIVE BAPTIST.

Under the direction of Superintendent M. C Dobbins the scholars of the Sunday-school of this church presented an interesting programme appropriate to Children's Day. It consisted of the following recitations: "What is June," Mabel Fisher; "The Seed," Etta Kingslow; Florence Miller: "Our Flag," Irving Kassey; "Bible Stories," Mary Coles. There was also singing by the primary department and singing by five girls, "All Hail the Children's Day;" reading, "Children's Day," primary department; recitations by six scholars; recitations and singing by three children; singing, "The Lord is my Shepherd," school. There were also songs by Norman Henry, Anna Connett and Ella Phillips. The exercises by the primary department were in charge of Miss May E. Howlett During the afternoon the new pastor, Rev. Mr. Jackson, made a short appropriate address.

SEVENTH DAY BAPTIST CHURCH.

At the Seventh-Day Baptist church Saturday morning, special Children's Day services were held. There was special music by the members of the Sunday-school and choir. The primary department gave some simple exercises. The floral decorations were very handsome. The pulpit was nearly hidden behind a bank of flowers. An address was given by the pastor, Rev. A. E. Main.

CRESCENT AVENUE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

Children's Day was not elaborately observed at the Crescent Avenue church on last Sunday. The school held its exercises in the afternoon. There were several selections by the regular quartette choir of the church A short address was made by Rev. Dr. W. R. Richards. The church was prettily decorated.

The decorations were arranged under the charge of Miss Mary Ketcham, of East Fifth street.

Received a Degree of M. E.

The commencement exercises at Stevens Institute, Hoboken, will be held Thursday evening. Among the class to receive their diplomas and the degree of M. E., mechanical engineer, will be Walter B. Bittenbouse, of East Sixth street. Rittenhouse completed his course last April, but will return to receive his degree and the valued sheepskin. He was treasurer of his class and was among the highest in standing.

—The work on West Front street between Grant and Clinton avenues will be finished this week

HIS STRUGGLES WERE NOT S EN UNTIL HE SANK FOR THE LAST TIME.

Had Been Assisting His Brother, John Herrmann, in Building the Latter's Factory on Somerset Street —First Seen By Painter George Collins.

It was cool and shady in the gap through which Stony brook passes to the first range of the Watchung Mountains. Never did it look prettier with the verdant dress of spring than in the soft light of the declining day the Friday afternoon. But the Angel of Death was near. There is a deep and quiet pool by the ruins of the old Coddington dam, where Theodore Herrmann struggled and fought all alone until the water closed over his head and he sank for the last time. Just the circumstances that led to his death by drowning no one will ever know.

George Collins has been employed for several days painting a house near Washingtonville. He was assisted by Edward Keller. When they came home from work Thursday evening they noticed a crowd of half grown lads disporting themselves in the water in the pool, just below the old Coddington mill dam. The pool is about fifteen feet in width and is thirty feet long. It was formed by the overflow of the water over the dam before it was washed away in the great freshet of seven years ago. The sides of the pool were steep and it was ten feet in depth.

Friday afternoon Collins and Keller finished their work shortly before 5 o'clock. Then they started home afoot by Somerset street. As they reached a point on the roadway just above the site of the old dam, the shady pool was visible. Collins looked over and saw something moving about the surface of the water. As he came nearer, he saw that it was the top of a man's head, and it kept whirling round and round. He remembered the boys he had seen swimming there the afternoon before and supposed that one of them was trying some trick in the water. There was something about it, however, that gave him the idea that all was not right.

Two Italians were busy close by with a horse and cart, carting earth for the erection of a small dam. John Herrmann, the stair builder, was building a stair and sash and blind factory near the site of the old ice house and a small dam and raceway was being erected to furnish water power for the factory.

"There's a boy drowning over there," shouted Collins at the laborers. They looked up but continued their work without paying any more attention. The head continued to whirl about the pond but the face remained under water. There were signs of a struggle. Collins had made up his mind that something was the matter and ran down the embankment to the pool.

"There's a boy drowning there, I tell you," he again called to the Italians.

"Taint a boy, it's the boss," replied one of the laborers who now saw that something was the matter.

Slowly the head disappeared beneath the surface, there was a ripple, a few bubbles rose through the dark waters and then all was still.

Horror-stricken at what they had seen, the men gathered on the bank and conversed in whispers as to what was to be done. None of them could swim and there was no rope or long pole handy. Then one of the laborers started down Somerset street on the run.

Samuel Moore, of Jackson avenue, was at work during the afternoon in getting out a quantity of stone and loading it into his wagon, on Somerset street, just above the bridge that leads to the Brookside Sanitarium. He was assisted by Arthur J. Swick, a young man formerly employed in a Somerset street blacksmith shop. They were at work when an Italian dashed up breathless.

"In pool, in pool," he gasped, and gesticulated wildly pointing in the direction whence he had come. Divining that there was trouble somewhere, Moore ordered his assistant to jump on the wagon, and together they drove hurriedly to where the Italian had pointed. There were the men gathered on the bank, gazing down where Herrmann had last been seen.

A few words explained the situation. Young Herrmann had gone in swimming alone. His clothes lay in a heap on the bank. He had worn only a pair of trunks.

Swick, who is a powerful young man and an expert swimmer, rapidly threw off his outer garments and prepared to go to the rescue. Fearing that Herrmann, if still alive, might catch hold of his would-be rescuer and drag him down, Moore fastened a halter that one of the Italians had found, about Swick's shoulders, and held fast to the long rope attached.

Then Swick dived and came up after a few seconds to say that he had found the body, but there were no signs of life apparent. He dived again, caught hold of the corpse and both were dragged ashore by Moore and the others. The body of Herrmann was carefully laid on the slope. There was not the slightest sign of life.

Frank Miles, of Somerset street, came along and hurried home, telephoning to Dr. D. G. Adams, who arrived at the scene of the drowning half an hour after the accident took place. He worked over the body for some time, but there was not the slightest sign of returning consciousness.

It was thought by those who first arrived on the scene that Herrmann was taken with a cramp. It has since been learned that he did not know how to swim very well and that he probably found himself in deep water before he realized it. The banks are so steep that he may have been unable to get out.

He was working on the factory, which his brother, John Herrmann, was building near by. Young Herrmann, was a powerfully built man, standing nearly six feet in height. He was twenty-six years of age and unmarried. He lived on Whitewood avenue. He was regularly in the feed and kindling wood business on Richmond street, Plainfield.

He was a member of the American Volunteers and took an active part in the work of that organization.

Collins says that when he first saw Herrmann in the water, there was a carriage standing there in which was a man and woman. They were apparently looking at Herrmann.

Saturday morning County Physician Wagoner, of Somerville, came to the borough and viewed the remains. He then gave a burial permit.

FOR THE BIG RACE MEET.

COMMITTEES WHO WILL LOOK AFTER ALL THE DETAILS.

Everything is Going Forward Without Delay Under the Direction of Energetic Members and Pres. Coddington.

All horsemen are interested in the preparations for the big race meeting of the Central New Jersey Driving Association which is to be held in this city June 22-23. Everything is going forward without delay and in a manner that would would be expected from the energetic men who are pushing it. The work has been divided among a number of committees who have their duties thoroughly systematized.

The committees, as appointed by the president, former Judge W. A. Coddington, are as follows:

Printing, advertising and programmes—H. E. Rider, F. W. Williams and W. T. Kirk.

Police—W. T. Kirk, Thomas Brantingham and N. B. Smalley.

Privileges—W. A. Coddington and W. T. Kirk.

Procuring track from U. and M. A. S.—J. W. Johnson, A. C. Vail, W. A. Coddington and F. W. Williams.

Special Race—W. A. Coddington, John Osborn and N. B. Smalley.

Auditing—J. W. Johnson, A. C. Vail, W. A. Coddington.

COLORED PARSON COULDN'T PAY.

Rev. M. E. Hall Failed to Return a Loan to a Lawyer.

Rev. M. E. Hall, of West Front street, a colored Methodist preacher, is minus a silver hunting case watch, which he has been carrying. The watch is in the possession of Lawyer J. P. D. Kirch, of Park avenue, who holds it as security for the payment of a $3 loan, which Mr. Kirch advanced to the preacher so as to enable him to secure a lot of books, "Stories of Cuba," which he has been selling recently.

Mr. Kirch wanted his money back, and claims that Hall wouldn't pay it, so Friday afternoon he had a warrant made out by Justice Mosher, and sent Constable Rockafellow after the delinquent preacher.

The dominie told a pitiful tale of how his wife and children were in need of food and clothing, and also said that he couldn't get cash for his books, but had to let the money stand. A settlement was finally effected between the two, and Hall left his watch as security for the payment of the money which he promised to do in a few days.

Dr. Hussey a Lawyer Now.

Dr. Mary D. Hussey, of East Orange, for some time a resident of Plainfield, was one of the graduates at the Commencement of the New York University Law School at the Metropolitan Opera House Thursday night. Three other New Jersey women received the degree of LL. B.

BRIGHT SEMINARY GIRLS

CLOSING EXERCISES OF PRIMARY DEPARTMENT TODAY.

Students Took Part in Programme That Displayed Their Careful Training—French Recitations Given—Maps Shown.

Simplicity and unconscious grace marked the entertainment given by the primary department of the Plainfield Seminary at their closing exercises Friday morning. The following programme was rendered with such spirit and enthusiasm as to make the audience forget the heat of the warm June morning.

The Lord's Prayer.....Chanted by the school
Song—Sing On.....School
Flower Song—Just Waking Up.....Children
Recitation—Good Morning: Around the World
Florence Stuart, Helen King.

Songs—Swing Song, Owl and the Pussy Cat.
Battle Hymn of the Republic.....School
Butterfly Song.....Children
Industrial Exhibition.....School

The music was conducted by Professor Lewis, whose training was evinced by the conscientious care of the pupils and whose fine voice added to some of the measures. The Battle Hymn of the Republic, sung by Professor Lewis to the tune of "John Brown's Body" was most soul stirring, the audience joining in the chorus. The Star Spangled Banner was also sung with spirit, the audience standing. The encore of "Our Flag" was most gratifying, as it resulted in the waving of all the flags and was a proof of the saying that "perseverance commands success." The audience was charmed with the Butterfly drill, in which girls and boys with silken wings imitated the flitting and poising of butterflies. The "Recessional" sung by the school and Prof. Lewis was full of pathos and warning, "Lest we forget! Lest we forget!"

The French recitations were very pleasing, showing the careful drilling of their teacher, Miss Caroline Minturn Hall. The whole entertainment reflected great credit on the teacher of this department, Misses Rambo and Ayme MacCready.

An exhibition of maps drawn by the children and sewing in all the stages from "over and over" to button holes was proof of much patient drilling on the part of the instructors and much persevering labor on the part of the little untrained fingers that have learned to command the pencil and the needle with such success.

A BOLD THEFT.

Basketful of Groceries Stolen While a Boy Was Drinking Soda.

Grover Marsh, the fifteen-year-old son of Randolph Marsh, of Plainfield avenue, had a basket of groceries stolen from him Saturday night, while drinking a glass of soda in a West Front street candy store. Young Marsh had set the basket down between his feet, and was intent on what was in his glass, so that he did not see some one lift the basket very carefully from its position, and walk off with it. The police were notified at once, but could get no trace of the thief. The basket contained a 12½ pound piece of meat, half pound of tea, two pairs of stockings, condensed milk, and other things.

Interesting Morristown Wedding.

A number of Plainfielders were interested in a wedding at Morristown last Thursday at mid-day, when the elder daughter of Gen. and Mrs. Fitz John Porter, Evaline Sanford, was married to Rev. Walter Hall Dorgest of the Union Seminary, New York. Miss Harriet Cornelia Gardiner, of this city, was one of the bridesmaids, and Rev. Clarence M. Dunham, rector at Metuchen, was the best man. A number of Plainfield friends were invited.

The Senior Dance.

The graduating class of '98 of the Plainfield Seminary gave the Senior dance Saturday evening, to which many of their friends were invited. The hall was artistically decorated with flags and there was good music by Rogers and his accompanists. The patronesses were Mrs. George A. Strong, Mrs. George W. VanBoskirck and Miss Isabel Arnold.

Realty Changes.

The following are the transfers of real estate in Plainfield during the past week:

Joseph B. Coward et ux to Louisa M.A. Meilow, beginning at a stake in Park avenue, corner lands of Z. Webster, northeasterly 120 feet, $7,900.

LAVELL UNDER BONDS TO BEHAVE HIMSELF.

Husband and Wife Cannot Live Together Happily.

WIFE IS A CHURCH WORKER

CAUSE OF LATEST TROUBLE WAS OVER THEIR SON.

Lavell is a Well-to-do New York Business Man, But When His Wife Wouldn't Permit Him to See His Boy he Became Exasperated, Chased Her For Several Blocks and Then Made a Scene—Police Wouldn't Interfere—Lavell Left Town For Sometime, But When he Came Back He Was Arrested.

Henry E. Lavell and his wife, of 1121 Putnam avenue, have not lived happily together for some time, and there have been frequent quarrels between them. Their differences finally culminated in a complaint by Mrs. Lavell before Justice Newcorn the other day in which the husband was charged with breaking the peace. He had a hearing Friday night and was held in $100 bonds to behave himself hereafter.

Mrs. Lavell, who is a prominent member of St. Stephen's church, Netherwood, claims to be affected with extreme nervousness and heart trouble, which have been intensified lately by her husband's actions. Lavell is a well-to-do New York business man.

Lavell says the trouble started through a neighbor, who, he vigorously says, constantly had his wife under her influence. He and his wife agreed to separate some time ago, he to live out of town and to pay her weekly stipends. In this agreement, Lavell was to be allowed to see his young son, Harry, occasionally.

All went well until the latter part of May on Harry's birthday. On the evening of the 28th Lavell came home bringing with him a birthday present for his son in the shape of a baseball outfit, mask, bat, ball, gloves and all. Finding the lad asleep, Lavell laid the birthday gifts beside the bed and went to the Revere House where he spent the night. He says he tried in various ways during the following two days to get a chance to see his boy, but that Mrs. Lavell hurried the child from one place to another and finally turned him over to Bert Littell to keep. Lavell hung around the house trying to get in, and was several times addressed by policemen who wanted the cause of the matter. When Lavell explained that he wanted to get into his own house, he was not disturbed.

An afternoon or two after the birthday visit to the house, Lavell saw his wife and another lady driving down Park avenue. As they did not stop at his call he broke into a run and pursued them as far as Front street, got on a trolley car and rode as far as Liberty street, when a policeman, who thought something was wrong, stopped the carriage at Lavell's repeated demands. Even this did not gain for him the long-sought interview, for as soon as the policeman found out what Lavell wanted, he let go the horse's head in disgust, and the women drove triumphantly away.

Mrs. Lavell was represented in court by Counselor Swackhamer, and Lavell by Lawyer Charles J. McNabb.

Pastor to go Abroad.

While Rev. George Hauser, pastor of the German Reformed church, is absent on his trip abroad, his pulpit will be filled by various divines from Newark and New York. Mr. Hauser expects to be accompanied abroad with several Plainfield friends. He will probably sail during July on the steamer Westerland, and he will endeavor to arrange it so that he can return on one of the sister ships of the Red Star Line.

Monument for a Pythian.

Perseverance Lodge, No. 74, K. of P., met last Friday and initiated one candidate. The members of the lodge decided to place over the grave of their late brother, George Rutherford, who died ten years ago, a handsome monument. The grave is located in the Plainfield avenue cemetery. The stone will be erected before Sunday, June 19th, which day is known as Decoration Day among the Knights of Pythias.

Closing of Primary Department.

The closing exercises of the Kindergarten connected with Miss Scribner and Miss Green's school were held Friday morning. They consisted of songs and games and French songs and were conducted by the teachers, Miss Fuller and Miss Hellwig. Miss Hellwig has severed her connection with the Kindergarten, by mutual consent, but will continue to teach French and German in the school.

In the Navy.

The friends of Charles S. Langdon, formerly of Ninth street, and later of New York, will be pleased to hear of his whereabouts. He is serving on the auxiliary cruiser Yankee as chief quartermaster.

WERE WEDDED QUIETLY

THE CEREMONY TOOK PLACE IN ADVANCE OF PARENTS' PLANS.

Mrs. Gibbons Learned of Her Daughter's Intended Marriage and Was Present—Tried to Dissuade Them Unsuccessfully.

Miss Minnie Ethel Gibbons, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Sydney F. Gibbons, of East Sixth street, and Frederick Earl, son of Principal Earl, of the Bayonne public schools, have been engaged for some time. Their marriage took place quietly and rather unexpectedly Saturday, June 4th, at the rectory of the Church of the Transfiguration, 28th street, New York, familiarly known as "The Little Church Around the Corner."

Miss Gibbons is nineteen years old and the eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Gibbons. Her lover was a young bank clerk in New York and has attained his majority a short time ago. Earl has been a a frequent visitor at the Gibbons home in this city after the latter moved here from Bayonne, where the young people met.

While the parents of the young people feared the match, it was not expected that the marriage would take place for some time. The young couple decided otherwise, however, and planned to go to New York and be quietly married. The mother of the prospective bride learned of the little plan in some manner, and when Miss Gibbons announced that she was going to New York Saturday, Mrs. Gibbons said that she was also going.

They met the young man in New York and the couple told Mrs. Gibbons of their intention. Mrs. Gibbons, while not averse to Earl as a son-in-law, tried to persuade the young people to wait and be married at home as had been planned. They were fully determined, however, that the hymeneal knot should be tied that very afternoon. So the party of three went to the rectory where Rev. Dr. Houghton, pastor of the church, performed the ceremony. Mrs. Gibbons was the only relative present. After the ceremony the young couple returned to Bayonne where the wedding was announced at the home of the groom and the new wife was welcomed by his parents.

FIRST BICYCLE TEST CASE.

The Outcome of the Plainfield Case be Watched With Great Interest.

Plainfield has the honor of bringing the first bicycle test case to the higher courts. The New Jersey Law Journal says:

"The first bicycle case to reach the higher courts of this State has just been decided by the Supreme Court, Phelps against Howell. The plaintiff was a young lady of Plainfield. While riding her wheel on Watchung avenue, in that city, October 28th, 1896, she alleged that she was run down by a wagon driven by one Robinson, a driver in plaintiff's employ. Miss Phelps recovered a verdict for $3,000. The Supreme Court has ordered a new trial, on several grounds, among others that of newly discovered evidence, tending to prove that the plaintiff lost control of her bicycle while riding down the avenue, that the wheel began to go "wobbly" and finally ran into defendant's horse; that the plaintiff fell off the seat, and the horse came to a standstill; in short, that the bicycle ran into the horse, and not the horse into the bicycle."

The defendant, R. O Howell, secured a new trial as readers will remember, sometime ago. The plaintiff will try the case over again at the October term of Court at Elizabeth.

Counselor Craig A. Marsh, represents the plaintiff, and Counselor William K. McClure, represents the defendant.

WEDDED AT ST. MARY'S.

Miss Mary Foubre Becomes the Wife of a Navy Yard Employe.

A quiet wedding took place Sunday afternoon in the rectory of St. Mary's church when Miss Mary Foubre, of 532 West Sixth street, was united in marriage to Arthur Jackson, of Newport News, Va. The ceremony was performed by Rev. P. E. Smyth. William Foubre, brother of the bride, acted as best man. Miss Nellie Foubre, a sister of the bride, was the bridesmaid. The bride wore a traveling gown. After the marriage a reception was held at the home of the bride's parents on West Sixth street.

The ceremony took place at 4 o'clock and the reception continued until 10 o'clock. The newly-married couple left on the 7:01 train for Washington, D. C., where the honeymoon will be spent.

They will then reside at Newport News, where the groom is employed in one of the departments of the navy yard. He was formerly a resident of Plainfield.

Contracts.

The following contracts have been recorded in the Union County Clerk's office during the past week:

James Medlen with Wyman & Haberle, carpenter work on new building corner West Fourth street and Monroe avenue, $3,100; Same with William Tallamy, mason work on new building corner West Fourth street and Monroe avenue, $925; William Tallamy and Plainfield Public Library, mason work on new stack room, $1,449; John Abbott and Plainfield Public Library, carpenter work on new stack room, $821.

GOOD MATINEE RACES.

SEASON OPENED AT GENTLEMEN'S DRIVING PARK SATURDAY.

Fastest Mile of the Afternoon Was Made by "Myrtle Twig" in 2:27—She Was Not Pushed—The Summaries.

Saturday afternoon marked the opening of the Gentlemen's Driving Park for the season, and the first of a series of matinee races were held. The judges for the afternoon were J. W. Johnson, A. C. Vail and F. W. Williams, who also acted as timers.

The first event was a brisk opener for road horses of the 2:40 class. There were two starters and Johnny Osborne, with "Roxy French," had the event all his own way. N. B. Smalley, however, kept him close down to the ciess time.

Darby's famous horse, "Sunday," appeared in the 2:30 class and finished close second in two heats to Wright's "Arpanes."

"Lincoln," from the Woodbrook Farm, came out for a match with "Myrtle Twig" and "Bolette." The dark mare was looking good, but Osborne, who piloted her, was instructed not to push her too hard. Her mark is 2:24, made last season. She passed under the wire ahead of "Bolette" in both heats, but the pacer from South Plainfield had the match in two straight heats. The time in the first was the fastest for the day.

The day's sport ended with a lively dash between the brown mare "Belle Hayes," driven by her owner, I. F. Randolph, of Elizabeth, and W. A. Coddington's "Rapid," also driven by her owner. The horses were driven to pneumatic-tired road wagons. "Belle Hayes" took the first two heats, the second of which was won in a rattling finish.

Afterwards Former Judge Coddington worked his bay pacer, "Belle," a mile in 2:53. This was the first time that the mare has been out this year. She can go better than 2:30.

The attendance was quite large and much interest was shown in the events.

The summaries in the events were as follows:

2:40 Class, Trotting, Road Horses.
John Osborne's "Roxy French"..... 1 1
Newton B. Smalley's "Red Norton," (Smalley).... 2 2
2:31, 2:30.
2:30 Class, Trotting and Pacing.
C. L. Wright's "Arpanes" (Darby).... 1 1
Douglass Darby's "Sunday," (Darby).... 2 2
Mason Beach.
T. Brantingham's "Myrtle Twig," (Brantingham).... 1 1
Woodbrooks Farm's "Lincoln," (Osborne).... 2 3
N. B. Smalley's "Bolette," (Brower).... 3 2
Mason Beach, Road Wagons, Owners to Drive
I. F. Randolph's "Belle Hayes," (Randolph).... 1 1
W. A. Coddington's "Rapid," (Coddington).... 2 2
2:32, 2:27.

Dog Attacked Cyclist.

F. M. Stillman, of 816 Fourth street, was riding on a bicycle from Washingtonville toward home on Somerset street, last Sunday about 7:45. When near the end of the trolley line a large brown spaniel jumped out from behind a clump of bushes and attacked Mr. Stillman. The canine inserted his teeth in the calf of Mr. Stillman's leg, inflicting a severe wound. After some difficulty Mr. Stillman succeeded in chasing the dog away. Mr. Stillman called on Dr. Mattison, of Somerset street, and had the wound cauterized.

A Bad Tumble.

Sunday afternoon while Robert Cloos, of New York, and John Cloos and Herbert Lederer, of this city, were out riding on their bicycles, the former fell off of his wheel and received a very bad cut in the head. The trio were riding into South avenue after leaving the Hunterston Hotel, when Mr. Cloos struck a stone and was thrown to the ground. He was assisted by his brother and friend to Dr. E. W. Hedges' office, where treatment was given. Later in the day Mr. Cloos was able to return home.

Held to Await Action of Grand Jury.

Henry Southard, who was arrested Saturday noon on a serious charge, was given a chance for an examination before Justice Nash on Monday. Southard was represented by Francis J. Blatz, of the firm of Murphy and Blatz, and City Judge DeMeza looked after the interests of the State. Southard waived examination and was held without bail to await the action of the Grand Jury. He was taken to Elizabeth this afternoon.

Sunday Fun Interrupted.

Two young men were having a great time in front of H. M. Stockton's house on Central avenue Sunday afternoon, swearing and cursing and amusing themselves seeing which one could shout the loudest. Mr. Stockton telephoned to Chief Grant, and the Chief, putting Officers Saffron and Cash into a carriage, ordered them to bring the two men to the station house. This morning, one was fined $5 and the other $10. Both paid.

A New Store Building.

Charles Hand, the real estate dealer, has begun the erection of a building on the corner of Watchung avenue and East Second street, which will be used as a store building. The old house has not been moved away yet, but the cellar for the new erection has been begun.

NEW HOME FOR THE YOUNG WOMEN'S CLUB.

Formally Opened Friday Afternoon by the Patrons.

RECEPTION AND MUSICALE.

PLEASANT AND CONVENIENT SURROUNDINGS NOW PREVAIL.

New Home is Situated on Madison Avenue in the Old Methodist Church Parsonage—The Programme and Those Who Had Charge.

The Young Women's Home, on Madison avenue, was opened Friday afternoon by an informal tea and musicale, which was attended by a fair representation of Plainfield ladies who are interested in works of charity.

The new home is situated on Madison avenue in what formerly was the old Methodist church parsonage. The quarters of the home were originally on the corner of Watchung avenue and Fifth street, where accommodations amply large were at first secured. But with the growth of the club and the interest taken in the work by the King's Daughters, of this city, more room was needed.

The attention of the ladies was called to this vacant house, and it was rented. The house contains eight good sized room, is comfortable and centrally situated in that part of the city which is convenient to all its patrons. The rooms are not yet completely furnished and donations of articles of furniture, especially bedroom suites, will be thankfully received.

The rooms are used by the young women every day. Classes in dressmaking, millinery and general education have been established, and much interest is shown in the work by the young women who attend. With careful instructors, such as they have, the results cannot help but be good.

The exercises Friday afternoon were of an informal nature. Fourteen hundred invitations had been issued to the ladies of the city, and the attendance was large. The hours of the opening were from 3 till 6, and during that time people were coming and going constantly. As they entered the door they were confronted by a salver on which reposed pieces of silver as a polite hint that such offerings were acceptable.

A committee of ladies, Mrs. J. K. Myers, Mrs. L. H. Biglow, Mrs. Stover, Miss Oaklev, Miss May Clawson and Miss Eastman, received the guests and directed them to the room on the right where Mrs. M. I. Cooley and Mrs. Charles W. McCutchen poured tea.

A programme consisting of recitations by Miss Mary Lucky, violin selections by Miss Margaret Burnette, accompanied by her sister, Miss Clyde Burnette; vocal solos by Mrs. Ward, the contralto soloist of the First Baptist choir, accompanied by Howard Case, and songs by a lady quartette, composed of Mrs. J. K. Myers, Mrs. Frank Clawson, Mrs. W. L. Saunders and Mrs. Robert Lowry, made up the affair.

The guests were given an opportunity to look over the house, and many availed themselves of this privilege. A reading room has been established, containing on its tables copies of the daily papers of this city, besides magazines, books and pamphlets of all descriptions. Games, too, are provided, and any innocent forms of amusement are encouraged. The patrons of the home, situated as it now is, feel assured that its work will be more successful as the weeks go by, and the interest that is shown in the work by the young ladies of the city, points to enlarged opportunities of work in the future.

PROMINENT WITNESSES

Plumbers Awarded $10.60 For Extra Work on a House.

An interesting case was tried in Justice Nash's court Friday afternoon, because of the witnesses called to testify on one side or the other. The plaintiffs were Galbraith & Walsh, the plumbers, of North avenue, and the defendant was John M. Mortimer, of West Seventh street.

The defendant was sued for $42.45 for extra work done on his house. The plaintiffs were awarded $10.60. Some of the witnesses were Street Commissioner A. J. Gavett, Health Inspector Addis, William Ball, a plumber; H. Hansen, the contractor; William G. Morse, the architect; Geo. J. Tobin, the plumber; and William Harding. The trial lasted all the afternoon. The lawyers were Irving Brady for the plaintiff and Senator Reed for the defendant.

Pythians' Decoration Day.

Sunday, June 19th, Crescent Division, Uniformed Rank, K. of P., will observe their annual Decoration Day. Bathbone Division, of Brooklyn, will come to Plainfield and be the guests of Crescent Division. The graves of the departed members will be decorated both in this city and Scotch Plains, after which the visitors will be entertained at dinner.

WILL REMIND RIKER OF PAST PROMISES.

Washingtonville Trolley Extension May be Laid.

CONSENTS ARE SECURED.

WHEN LABOR WAS AT HAND, PRESIDENT RIKER AGREED TO BUILD.

Now That the Scotch Plains Extension Will Probably be Laid Shortly, The Washingtonville People Think That Their Chances Will Come Too—They Have Secured a New Ally in Phillip Rorich—Rorich is Starting a Suburban Settlement to be Called Somerset Park—He Will Guarantee Fares For Five Years.

Soon Plainfield will be invaded by a gang of Italian laborers and the incessant sound of the pick and shovel will prolude the laying of the new trolley line. When the good people of Washingtonville tried to have the present trolley line extended out Somerset street to reach them, President Riker, of the Plainfield Street Railway, explained that it could not be done then but when he had plenty of labor here building another line, the tracks for the trolley could then be extended through the gap in the mountains.

Remembering that promise, the residents of Washingtonville and vicinity are now agitating the proposed trolley line once more. The necessary permits have been secured, it is claimed, so that the road might follow Somerset street through the gap to Washingtonville and thence up the back of the mountain to the Mountain Park Inn.

Since the advent of the trolley in that neighborhood was first advocated, the promoters of the line to Washingtonville have secured a powerful ally who is willing to do his share toward inducing the company to extend its lines in that direction.

Phillip Rorich, of New York, recently purchased a tract of land, north of Washingtonville, 400 acres in extent, which he has named Somerset Park. It is his intention to cut it up into building lots and form a pretty little suburban settlement for weary New York business men. Mr. Rorich was the man who so successfully boomed Sherman Park, New York, and built it up.

One of the necessities for the success of his scheme is that he should have an easy means of access to his proposed settlement. The trolley offers it and he is fully satisfied that the trolley ought to come there. He has been interviewed by some of the citizens of Washingtonville regarding what action should be taken to bring the company there.

Of course, one of the principal objections that the company will have to extending its lines in that direction will be that the branch will not support itself. Mr. Rorich is aware of that argument, and has declared his willingness to guarantee the company a certain number of fares for a term of five years and make up the amount if the travel does not come up to the mark agreed upon.

Mr. Rorich has completed the plans of Somerset Park, and they include lots which will be donated for the building of a church and of a schoolhouse.

To Repair the Shop.

The Climax Stopper Company has decided to repair the damage caused by fire a few days ago, and the work has been started.

Hair & Hints

It is much easier to keep the hair when you have it than it is to restore it when it's lost. If your hair is "coming out" it needs instant attention. The use of AYER'S HAIR VIGOR will promptly stop the hair from falling, and stimulate it to new growth.

"Some years ago my hair began to fall out and I became quite bald. I was advised to try and had used it but a short time when my hair ceased to fall out and a new and vigorous growth made its appearance. My hair is now in abundant glossy."

Ayer's Hair Vigor

A JUNE DAY WEDDING

LOUIS E. EATON TAKES A BROOKLYN BELLE FOR A WIFE.

Miss Bessie V. Cushing the Bride —Ceremony Performed by Rev. William Ivie in a Church in Brooklyn.

A pretty wedding was celebrated last Thursday night in Grace P. E. church, on Conselyea St., near Lorimer, when Miss Bessie Vera Cushing, only daughter of Mrs. Henrietta M. Cushing, of 50 Maujer street, and Louis Eldridge Eaton, of East Fifth street, Plainfield, were united in marriage by Rev. Wm. Ivie, pastor of the church.

The ceremony was performed at 8 o'clock in the presence of a large assemblage of friends and relatives of the contracting parties. The bride was unattended, while H. J. Brewer, of Plainfield acted as best man. The Episcopal service was used. The bride was gowned in gray satin, trimmed with lace and ribbons. She wore a hat to match. The bride was given away in marriage by her uncle, Mr. Hand, of Brooklyn.

Following the marriage Mr. and Mrs. Eaton returned to the home of the bride's mother, where an informal reception was held. Only the very near relatives were present. Supper was served and during the evening the bride and groom left for a honeymoon trip. They will return to Plainfield Sunday evening, and for the summer will board at Netherwood.

The bride is a niece of Mr. and Mrs William Hand, of Park avenue, and is a most estimable young woman. The groom is employed at the office of the Sabbath Recorder, where he is foreman of the composing room. Both he and his wife have a host of friends in this city who wish them happiness and success through life. Those from this city who attended the wedding were W. B. Mosher, James Niles, R. M. Hall, C. T. Coon and Mrs. William Hand.

INSTALLATION EXERCISES.

New Pastor for Mt. Olive Baptist Church to be Welcomed.

Installation exercises will be held in the Mt. Olive Colored Baptist church Thursday evening, June 23d, when the new pastor, Rev. D. E. Jackson, of Petersburg, Va., will take charge of the organization. Mr. Jackson comes highly recommended, and there is no doubt but what his relations with his people will be the most pleasant. In the meantime Mr. Jackson will preach to the congregation and minister to their needs, although not taking complete charge of them as their pastor until after the installation exercises.

Repairs are to be made about the church and the Christian Endeavor Society are planning to give an entertainment soon to raise money enough to pay for kalsomining or papering the basement of the church. The upper floors are being thoroughly overhauled and cleaned. Estimates are also being received for work in the parsonage for papering, painting, etc.

A DIFFICULT JOB.

Quicksand Hinders the Work of Laying Clinton Avenue Drain.

The engineer in charge of the storm sewer at Clinton avenue is having a hard time of it. Although the work is no worse than he expected, it is very trying, as most of it has to be done in quicksand and water. The work on the drain was begun yesterday, and already the men have the pipe laid part of the way. As soon as they reached a depth of three feet the quicksand began to show its treacherous nature, and made further haste difficult.

The old drain is probably in position still, but is so choked with dirt as to be useless. The new one leads to a point further west before emptying in the brook. Street Commissioner Gavett said that if the railroad company had begun this work a year ago it could have been done at one-third of the expense necessary now.

Prevented a Runaway.

Quick action on the part of Alvin E. Hoagland, the North avenue expressman, prevented a serious runaway Friday morning which might have caused a great deal of damage. Mr. Hoagland's team was tied in front of his place of business, when a piece of paper was blown by the wind directly in front of the horses. The animals made a plunge and then pulled back with fright. The result was that one bridle was broken in four pieces and the horses were just about to make a wild dash when Mr. Hoagland caught them. When the horses backed up the truck crashed into Alva Carey's front wheel and thoroughly demolished it.

Funeral of John Brown.

The funeral of the late John Brown, formerly of Newport, R. I., was held last Friday at 3 p. m. from the residence of his sister, Mrs. John Lindsey, West Front street, where he died a few days ago after a long illness. The services were in charge of Rev. T. Logan Murphy, pastor of the Church of the Holy Cross, who knew Mr. Brown when he lived at Newport. The body was taken to Newport this morning for interment.

TASTED DELICACIES UNDER OLD GLORY.

Pleasant and Profitable Affair in Trinity Church.

KING'S DAUGHTERS GAVE IT.

GENERAL EFFECT OF THE DECORATIONS WAS PATRIOTIC.

Good Things to Eat Were Not the Only Attraction of the Evening—A Recruiting Tent Where Lemonade was Served—A Flower Booth Set in the Centre of the Room—A Novelty was a Book of Recipes for Summer Desserts, Especially Prepared for the Occasion—Miss Laura Emmons in Charge—Those Who Assisted.

Under the Stars and Stripes, the good people of Trinity Reformed church gathered last Thursday and partook of various delicacies in which strawberries formed a prominent part. The new lecture room of the church was bright with patriotic and floral decorations. The occasion of all this was the strawberry festival of the Whatsoever Circle of the King's Daughters.

Like other affairs that the progressive people of Trinity have conducted, the usual methods were departed from and novelty lent an added attraction to it. The general effect was decidedly patriotic, for a multitude of small and middle-sized flags were arranged over the heads of the guests and were grouped about the walls.

Nor the strawberry was not the only attraction of the evening. At the left of the entrance was the "recruiting tent," where the army of visitors recruited on the cooling lemonade that was for sale. The tent was composed of several American flags, that was flanked on either side by a stack of rifles. Inside the tent a little fire blazed away under the kettles that hung on the crane in a very realistic fashion.

In the centre of the room was a veritable flower bower. Its pillars and counters were of white, but the evergreen decorations and the profusion of flowers and potted plants on exhibition there, nearly hid it from view.

There was a candy table on the right, on which was displayed in tasteful array a fine assortment of home made goodies, together with the best confections in the market. The table was in white and green.

In the background, surrounded on all sides by the refreshment tables, was the strawberry booth, groaning under the goodly show of fancy and plain cakes of all styles and descriptions.

At the refreshment tables, strawberry short cake, strawberries and cream and ice cream were served by a host of fair young waitresses, gowned in white and red. The menus were little cards, decorated with the American flag on the front and a very real-looking picture of a tempting bunch of strawberries inside, the artistic work of Mrs. A. L. Mosher.

Over at the candy table, there was something new that found particular favor with the housekeepers among the visitors. It was a book of recipes for summer desserts, prepared and printed for the affair. The recipes were excellent and the purple binding very pretty.

There was a fair attendance during the evening and the promise of a better one tonight. The booths were well patronized, while the new idea of serving strawberry short-cake was found to meet with general satisfaction.

At the head of the affair, as general chairman of all the committees, was Miss Laura Emmons. The flower booth was under the charge of Miss Mabel Woodruff, assisted by Miss Evelyn Taylor. Miss Minnie Williams and Miss Etta Krymer were in charge of the "recruiting station" and the accompanying lemonade. At the candy table was Miss Lillian A. Force, assisted by Miss Novius and Miss Quick. The refreshment committee was composed of Mrs. Will F. Williams, Mrs. J. F. MacDonald, Mrs. Frank Woodruff and Mrs. Emily Cory. The cake table was under the joint charge of Miss Emma Gillem and Miss Minnie Arnold.

The waitresses were the Misses Bessie Martin, Lizzie Denckiau, Emma Line, Laura Wyman, Lizzie Cutter, Grace Emmons, Sadie Holmes, Martie Anthony and Nellie Young.

The young women of the Circle were greatly assisted in the work of decorating the room by Mr. and Mrs. E. E. Ashbey and Henry Beeder. Most of the flags used in decorating were kindly loaned for the occasion by George F. Brown.

Miss Buckley's ladies' orchestra was present during the evening and rendered a number of delightful selections. Their playing was excellent.

Knocked Out the Democrats.

The Supreme Court at Trenton has knocked out the Democratic Board of Freeholders of Salem county, by confirming the decision of Judge Ludlow, which declared Joseph N. Mayhew, Republican, to be legally elected Freeholder from Upper Pittsgrove Township, over Thomas Y. Hackett, Democrat. The Republicans of the Board Thursday elected new officers.

A SUCCESSFUL SOCIETY.

THE ENDEAVORERS OF THE SEVENTH DAY CHURCH REVIEW THE YEAR.

The Annual Meeting of the Society Was Held Last Week—Increase in the Membership—$300 Raised During Year.

Never since the organization of the Christian Endeavor Society of the Seventh-day Baptist church, has it been in such a flourishing condition. At the annual meeting of the society held June 8th in the chapel of the church the reports of the officers and committees showed where they stood.

The report of the secretary, Miss Ida L. Spicer, showed a substantial gain in membership over the past enrollment. The report also showed an increased activity in all lines of work. The treasurer's report, given by Dr. Frank T. Clawson, told of the raising of over $300 during the year, the greater part of which had been expended.

Then came the reports of the different committees showing an increase in the interest and attention given to all the different branches of the Endeavor work.

Then the election of officers was held and resulted as follows:

President, Miss Luella Clawson; vice-president, William R Mosher; recording secretary, Clarence M. Rogers; corresponding secretary, Asa F. Randolph; treasurer, Frank M. Maxson; auditors, Dr. F. T. Clawson and Frank J. Hubbard. The chairmen of committees were chosen as follows: Lookout, William R Mosher; prayer meeting, Miss Elizabeth Allis; music, Miss Jessie M. Utter; social, Miss Ida L. Spicer; missionary, Miss Nancy Randolph; temperance and good citizenship, Miss Ida L. Spicer; good literature, Miss Mabel Mitchell; flower, Mrs. W. C. Hubbard.

AIDING THEIR PATRONS.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVORERS HELP THE PARK AVENUE BAPTIST CHURCH.

Strawberry and Ice Cream Festival Given to Swell the Amount Which the Young People Pledged for Expenses.

The Park Avenue Baptist church Endeavorers gave a strawberry and ice cream festival Thursday in the chapel which was participated in by all the members of the society and their friends. The proceeds went to swell the $50 which the society have pledged towards the running expenses of the church.

The festival was given under the auspices of the missionary and social committees. The young men and women worked hard Wednesday night to trim the church for the occasion, and the efforts were well rewarded. Bunting and flags were hung in graceful folds, and the C. E. colors, black and yellow, for the State, and green and white, for the Local Union, were seen everywhere. The large "C E" which had a place on the arch at the head of Park avenue a year and a half ago, when the State convention of the organization met in this city, was placed in the front of the room. Flowers and greens made up the rest of the decorations. The tables where candy was sold, and where the cakes were also displayed, were set off with colors.

A short programme was first given which consisted of gramaphone selections under the direction of Charles Hayes; vocal solos by Miss Lottie Messersmith and Thomas A. Cuming, and violin solos by Mr. Franco.

The admission fee entitled the payer to cream and cake. The young people in charge of the affair were J. M. Hawkins, chairman, and Miss Adelaide Runyon, Miss Anna Wyckoff, Miss Bessie Giles, Miss Laura Runyon and Rev J. W. Richardson, of the missionary committee; F. H. Clarkson, chairman, and Miss Helen Cuming, Miss Lizzie VanWinkle, Miss Henrietta Cuming, Miss Lizzie Livesey and Arthur Heath, members of the social committee.

STREET ALTERATIONS.

Borough Improvements Made Under Direction of Engineer Hubbard.

The street department of North Plainfield, under the direction of Borough Engineer Frank J. Hubbard, is making some needed alterations on Westervelt avenue. Beyond Fairview avenue that thoroughfare has heretofore been very poorly drained. The water has laid in the gutters, making many bad mud holes. That portion of the street is now being graded.

Westervelt avenue, between Fairview and Grandview avenues, was in excess of the width as provided by the ordinance. This is to be narrowed and the space taken from the roadway will be converted into lawns connect the sidewalk and the curb, after fashion of LeGrande avenue in the city. If the residents keep these in good order the result will be a great improvement in the appearance of that section.

Miss Conklin's Bad Fall.

Miss Mary A. Conklin, daughter of S. C. Conklin, of 131 West Front street, fell from her wheel Friday and broke her arm in two places. Dr. Probasco was summoned, and took her home in a carriage. The doctor considers the injuries serious.

MAYOR FISK WANTS TO GO HIGHER IN OFFICE

But There Are Many Who Are Not Quite So Ambitious.

THE REPUBLICAN OUTLOOK.

CITY JUDGESHIP WILL BE STRUGGLED FOR.

Fred C. Lounsbury, it is Said, is Wanted to Head the Citizens' Ticket —Judge Dellers May Try Again for His Present Position, But at All Events There Are Several Others Who Would Like to be Cadi and Will Strive to Secure the Republican Nomination—Justice Newcorn Will Fight Hard.

A mayor, a city judge, a tax collecter and four ward councilmen are the municipal officials who are to be chosen at the city election in December. Already the excitement of the campaign is beginning to be felt. Everybody knows that Mayor Fisk is not hankering after a second term. His ambitions, it is said, run higher. What he is credited with wanting is the county nomination for State Senator. Councilman William N. Runyon has been mentioned as Republican candidate for mayor, but the genial young Republican laughs at all mention of his taking the chief executive office of the city. The name of Fred C. Lounsbury, president of the Board of Trade, has been heard mentioned by many as a likely candidate for the office. It is even said that he has begun his campaign to secure the Republican nomination. Mr. Lounsbury denies this, however. It has been said that the leaders of the Citizen's movement are anxious to head their ticket with his name. The work that Mr. Lounsbury has done in connection with the Board of Education and the Board of Trade has shown him to be an excellent business man and successful manager. Whether he would make a successful Mayor remains to be seen.

The fight in the Republican party will be particularly warm over the nomination for City Judge. It is for that office that Councilman Runyon is said to be on the still hunt. So far the young office holder has not announced himself as being in the race. There is little doubt, however, that he will make the rest of the candidates hustle for the nomination. The present incumbent, Judge DeMeza, will, it is claimed, try for a renomination. The Judge himself, has said nothing in public as yet.

One of the most active candidates, and one who is going to give his rivals a hot chase, is Justice Wm. Newcorn. An active worker in the Fourth ward, he has so far received little recognition from his party when it came to the division of the spoils. His claims on the party are strong and will be apt to have substantial backing from leaders in the G. O. P.

Harry C. Runyon must not be counted out in the race for the nomination. He is credited with having greatly increased his strength during the last few months and will be able to prove a formidable rival. Winfield B. Angleman is also a candidate. Nobody knows at present whether he will make a strong bid for the office or not.

The campaign is not of sufficient length as yet to tell how the different candidates stand or their relative strength. Then, too, there may be other candidates in the field who have not yet spoken.

ANNIVERSARY SURPRISE.

Mr. and Mrs. Rudolph Spiegel Celebrate Their Sixth Wedding Day.

Thursday Mr. and Mrs. Rudolph Spiegel, of Somerset street, celebrated the sixth anniversary of their marriage, and last evening a pleasant surprise was given to them by twenty-five of their friends. The surprise was arranged by Charles Steinerwald, Charles Scherrer, William Claassen, George Voegler and Paul Postler. The merry party met at the corner of Front and Somerset streets and proceeded to the home of the popular celebrants, where they took them by storm. The evening was passed in dancing, singing and having a good time in general. At a late hour the guests sat down to a bountiful repast prepared by the hostess and did full justice to the excellent meal provided. The guests, before departure, wished Mr. and Mrs. Spiegel many happy returns of the day, long life and success.

The Horse was Startled.

As Charles Bilyeu, one of the drivers for Hoagland, the expressman, was putting the hames on a delivery horse in front of the North avenue office Friday evening, the animal suddenly bolted and ran up on the sidewalk, knocking Bilyeu over, and throwing himself on the sidewalk. The horse had to be unharnessed.

Want Building Ordinance Repealed.

A petition is being circulated asking the Common Council to repeal the building ordinance entire. It has already been signed by most of the builders of the city and many prominent citizens.

FAST HORSES MEET HERE

FIRST RACE MEET OF THE CENTRAL N. J. TROTTING ASSOCIATION.

Rules of the National Association Are to Govern—Dates are June 22d and 23d—Plainfield Roadsters Will Have a Special.

Extensive preparations are now in progress for the opening meet of the Central New Jersey Driving Association that is to be held at the Gentleman's Driving Park on June 22 23. For the first time in twenty years there will be a gathering of fast horses from all over the State.

According to the rules of the National Trotting Association, under which the meet will be conducted, any races left unfinished on one day must be finished the next. This precludes the possibility of holding the meet Friday or Saturday as they could not not be completed Sunday. So Wednesday and Thursday afternoons have been selected. On account of the lengthy programme, it will be necessary to start the races at 1 o'clock sharp.

Wednesday, the 22nd, the first day of the meet, the first race on the programme will be the 2:35 class, trotting, for a purse of four monies. The purse will be divided with 50 per cent. to the winner, 25 per cent. to second, 15 per cent. to third, and 10 per cent. to fourth. The entrance fee will be 5 per cent. of the value of the purse and those finishing in the first four will pay 5 per cent. extra. These rules will prevail for all the events.

The second event will be the 2:35 class, pacing, for a purse of $150. The third event will be the Plainfield Special, for road wagons, owners driving. This event will be open to the horsemen of Plainfield and North Plainfield. The first prize will be a silver cup, valued at $75, donated by Robert A. Fairburn, of Westfield. The second prize will be $50 in cash, donated by J. E. Beerbower, of Plainfield. Third gets $25 in cash, donated by A. C. Vail, of Plainfield. To the fourth goes $15 in cash, donated by N. B. Smalley, of North Plainfield.

Even if the heats are won in one, two, three order, it is not probable that will mean nine heats for the afternoon which will continue the racing up to 6 o'clock or after.

On the second day of the meet, Thursday, the first event will be the 2:17 class, open to trotters with a record of 2:17 and pacers with a record of 2:20. A purse of $150 is offered. The 2:20 class, trotting and pacing, will be the second event. A similar purse will be offered for that event. The last event of the meet will be the 2:40 class, trotting, for a purse of $150.

Refreshment stands and other small attractions will be erected at different parts of the grounds. A good brass band will be at the track both days to furnish music.

The grand stand, which seats about 400, is being thoroughly overhauled. The judge's stand is also being put in excellent shape. The track is receiving plenty of attention, and will be in the best of condition at the time of the meet.

Arrangements have been made to have plenty of stages to convey the audience to the grounds for 10 cents each way. The admittance to the grounds will be 25 cents. There will no extra charge for carriages and horses.

REFORM CLUB.

Interesting Addresses, But no New Signers of the Pledge.

The regular weekly meeting of the Reform Club was held Thursday, and was attended by a good-sized audience in spite of the heat. Mrs. Newton Honeyman sang, and Henry T. Smith spoke. There were no signers to the pledge.

A movement is on foot to open the club rooms again through the day and evenings, so as to provide some place when the young men and boys can go to spend a part of their time. A few years ago these rooms were open all the time as reading rooms and places where the young men could play games, but because of lack of means the rooms were closed.

Another scheme is to hold Sunday evening meetings again. These, too, were given up some time ago because it was thought that the services interfered with the regular church service.

Profits of a Festival.

The strawberry festival of the Whatsoever Circle of the Kings Daughters of Trinity Reformed church was continued Friday afternoon and evening in the lecture of the church. The attendance was not what it should have been. During the evening, W. C. Townsend rendered several excellent mandolin solos, accompanied by Harry Stewart on the piano. The gross receipts were large but the expenses will be considerable so that the Circle will not make as large profits as they are justly entitled to.

A Latin Scholar.

Ralph Campbell, of Madison avenue, who graduated from the University of New York on Thursday evening received honorable mention in the Latin contest. He also received a cash prize from his fraternity, Zeta Psi, for general excellence during the four years.

SOLDIER DIDN'T KNOW HIS FATHER WAS DEAD

A Pathetic Incident Enacted in the Dark Hours.

WANTED TO SEND FAREWELL

FREDERIC CASPAR, JR., HEARD BAD NEWS ON HIS WAY TO THE FRONT.

The Young Man Has Been a Bit Wild, and Had to Leave Bayonne to Escape the Police a Short Time Ago —Enlisted to Serve the Country While His Father Lay Dead, But He Didn't Know It—Found Out the Terrible Truth in the Central Railroad Baggage Room Early in the Morning.

The present war has developed many romantic and pathetic incidents, and one of the sadder sort was enacted in the dark and gloomy hours of the early morn in the baggage room of the North avenue station Sth.

Frederic Caspar, Jr., formerly of this city, but late of Bayonne, played the chief role. Caspar has been a bit wild in the past and a short time ago he committed an act in Bayonne that caused him to flee from that place for fear of being arrested.

A few days ago the matter was reported to Chief Grant by the police authorities of Bayonne. The Bayonne officials had heard of the death of the young man's father, and thought that he would more than likely be in this city. Officers instituted but Caspar could not be found.

Wednesday morning on the arrival of the 1:17 Philadelphia train in this city, Roundsman Flynn, who was at the station, noticed a young man got off the train attired in one of Uncle Sam's uniforms. He saw that the fellow avoided him as much as possible. He watched the soldier and saw him approach Henry Hansen, the night baggagemaster. In a few minutes the train pulled out and the apparent stranger got on board.

Roundsman Flynn then inquired of Hansen who the person was. Hansen said that it was Frederic Caspar, Jr., and that he gave him a message to tell his father that he had enlisted in the Third U. S. Calvary, and was going south to join the other members of the company.

Mr. Hansen, with some hesitancy, told young Caspar that he could not deliver the message as his father was dead. The news shocked Mr. Hansen, and he hurriedly inquired about the circumstances of his father's death. He expressed great sorrow and told Hansen to deliver the message to his mother.

Of course, the Roundsman knew that Caspar was wanted, but the fact that he wore one of Uncle Sam's uniforms prevented him from touching him before the train pulled out, and he was obliged to let him go. The message, left by young Caspar, was delivered to the mother by Mr. Hansen.

It has been several years since the young man was in this city, and he still has many friends here who will be glad to hear of his whereabouts.

THREE MORE LAWYERS.

AMONG THOSE WHO PASSED WAS COUNCILMAN RUNYON.

William G. DeMeza and G. W. V. Moy the Other Successful Candidates —C. L. Murphy is Now a Counsellor.

Three new Plainfielders have been admitted to the bar of the State of New Jersey while another Plainfielder has successfully passed the examinations making him a counsellor at-law. There were forty-two candidates for admittance to the bar at the June examinations held in the State House at Trenton. The written examinations were held last Friday and the oral ones Monday. Of the forty-two, thirty-six passed successfully, among whom were all the Plainfielders.

The Plainfielders consisted of Councilman William N. Runyon, William G. DeMeza and G. W. V. Moy. Clarence L. Murphy, of the firm of Murphy & Blatz, passed his examinations and was made counselor-at-law. Councilman Runyon has been a member of the New York bar for several years and is now employed by a leading legal firm in New York city. He is considering the advisability of taking up a practice in Plainfield and joining with his father, Nelson Runyon. DeMeza has been studying in the law offices of his brother, City Judge DeMeza, where he has been chief clerk. G. W. V. Moy keeps a pharmacy at the corner of Park avenue and East Fourth street and has been reading law by himself.

WEDDED IN CHURCH.

given to the relatives, intimate friends and out-of-town guests at the charming home of Mr. and Mrs. Bowers on Franklin place.

The couple were the recipients of many beautiful gifts, including silverware, cut glass and others of value. The wedding gifts were very numerous and told of the many friends of the wedded ones.

The groom presented the best man and each of the ushers with a stick pin of pearls and enamel. The gift of the bride to the bridesmaids was a "harvest moon" of pearls. The maid of honor received a wreath of amethysts and enamel.

The reception was a very enjoyable affair, beginning as soon as the ceremony was over and continuing until midnight. The house was very elaborately decorated for the occasion. The parlor where the bridal party received the guests was decorated profusely with palms, potted plants and cut flowers. The prevailing colors were green and white. Southern smilax was used in the decoration of the chandeliers and the doorways. The library was similarly decorated.

The floral decorations in the music room consisted of "Jack" roses, ferns and smilax. The prevailing colors in the dining room were green and pink. The table decorations corresponded and were very elaborate.

The decorations at the church and house were arranged under the direction of Mrs. Denton and were eminently satisfactory.

In one of the bouquets for the bridesmaids, a pearl ring was hidden. Miss Katharyn Mitchell, of Philadelphia, discovered it in one of her roses.

There were fully three hundred guests at the reception. The storm that had threatened during the ceremony passed away and many of the guests strolled out on the spacious piazzas. The wedding supper was served by Maresi in very elaborate fashion. Mr. and Mrs. O'Donnell received the congratulations of their host of friends and the evening passed very delightfully.

The luggage had been smuggled away the day before, so the friends had to be content with labelling the coach and the groom with sundry placards proclaiming them married. The newly-married couple departed soon after 11 o'clock. They had to run the gauntlet of the merry party who lined the long hall and showered them with rice as they passed. Plenty of rice was used there and at the carriage. The couple drove to Netherwood and took the 11.21 train for New York, evading the party who gathered at the station in Plainfield to give them another farewell reception.

Among the out-of town guests present were: Mr. and Mrs. W. C. O'Donnell, Sr., of Brooklyn, parents of the groom; Mr. and Mrs. Van-Bracle, of Brooklyn, brother-in-law and sister of the groom; Rev. and Mrs. H. J. Johnston, of Staten Island; Mrs. William H. Winter, George McCoy, Mr. and Mrs. Mortimer Day, Miss Caroline Thorne and W. M. Patterson, of New York; Mrs. Tunis Visscher Winne, Mr. and Mrs. George T. Winne and Dr. and Mrs. Pendegrast, Brooklyn; Mr. and Mrs. Horace G. Terry, of Albany, Rev. Dr. and Mrs. Fitzgerald, of Newark; Rev. Mr. and Mrs. George Bogel and George Oakley, of Rutherford, and Miss Darrow, of Buffalo. A number of the clerical friends of Rev. Mr. O Donnell were present whose names could not be learned.

Mr. and Mrs. O'Donnell will be absent several weeks on their wedding tour, and then will board on East Front street until the new parsonage of the Monroe Avenue M. E church is completed when they will take possession at once.

WAR REVENUE HITS BEER DRINKERS

Bottled Beer Costs Ten Cents More Per Dozen to the Consumer.

The effect of the war revenue legislation enacted by Congress has already been felt by those in Plainfield who drink beer. Monday the price of bottled beer was increased ten cents a dozen bottles. There is no likelihood of the price of draught beer increasing to the consumer who imbibes it by the glass, though the saloon keeper may reduce the size of glass slightly in order that he may meet the increase of a $1 a barrel at the breweries on a profitable basis. Those who rush "growlers" may also expect to get less for their money.

—L. S. Plaut & Co., of the Bee Hive, Newark, (the largest dry and fancy goods house in New Jersey), announce that they will make free deliveries by their own wagons to Plainfield every Monday, Wednesday and Friday. They also deliver to Cranford, Fanwood, Garwood, Netherwood, Roselle, Scotch Plains and Westfield. They also state that they make free deliveries throughout New Jersey by railroad and express to all points not reached by their own wagons. c

LITTLE SCHOOL FOLKS IN GORGEOUS DRESS.

Birds and Flowers Portrayed in Brilliant Array.

PLEASANT TO EYE AND EAR.

GIVEN FOR THE PURPOSE OF SECURING A STEREOPTICON OUTFIT.

The Identity of the Juvenile Participants Was Almost Hidden in Their Dresses of Multi-colors Made to Represent Picturesque Characters.

The pupils of the Franklin school have long felt the need of a good stereopticon, that they may make the study geography and science, so they gave an entertainment last Monday in the assembly room of the school to raise means to procure such a lantern.

The entertainment was novel and amusing to a high degree. Each little person taking part was attired in dresses and draperies so as to almost conceal his or her identity and resemble a brilliant flower or a big bird. It was an evening with the birds and flowers, and the children in their costumes made a gorgeous sight.

The programme was divided into three parts. The first was of songs about the flowers, the second voices from nature, and the third a miscellaneous collection of specialties and songs.

The stage was destitute of decorations, save a plain strip or two of green and a few roses, the bright hues of the little ones' dresses making up for all lack of floral display. The first number on the programme was a two-part song, "Flowers of May." This was sung by the school in one of the rear class rooms.

The second number was entitled "Just Waking Up," and eight girls and two boys took part in it. They came in from the rear of the hall, marched slowly up the centre aisle, clasping hands, divided at the foot of the platform, and took their places alone. The flowers were represented as just waking up, and there they were, of all colors and varieties, each little person representing a different blossom.

The song of the pansies was sung by eight little girls dressed in purple, with purple pansy caps on their heads. Nine little girls, wearing yellow dresses and yellow head pieces, brought Daffy-down-dilly's message, "Only a Neat Little Daisy" was Marguerite Carman, wearing a white costume resembling daisy petals, a broad hat like the field flower, and swinging a chain of the flowers. "We Violets" was sung by eight girls, and Edith Leslie as "Laughing Buttercup" won much applause. Eight girls posed as golden dandelions.

Part first closed with the triumphant entrance of the Rose Queen and her attendants. The queen was Miss Giles, and her horde of followers, chosen from all the pupils who took part in the exercises, was a brilliant one. Girls dress d to represent every flower known, in all the colors of the rainbow, followed the queen, who was dressed in white. The queen waltzed under an arch of roses borne by two girls, and taking her place on the platform, was crowned and handed her sceptre, amid songs and music, in which the queen's clear sweet voice was plainly heard.

The second part of the programme was bright and lively. Monroe Staats, as "Mr. Sly Winking Crow," all in sombre black, John Yoe as a "Rollicking Woodpecker, I" in brown garb, with a red crest, and George Rogers, as "Hollywog," brought down the house.

"Three Little Maids From School" opened the third part of the programme. The little maids were Miss Elsie Giles, Miss Florence Shotwell and Miss Cornelia Miller. The policemen's song was sung by Percy Phillips, Richard Bird and Edwin Daniel, in full uniform.

The cadets' song was sung by the cadets, who marched in under the leadership of Harold Davis. Miss Elsie Giles was Columbia, and robed in a large American banner, she took her stand upon the stage, surrounded by the pageant. Columbia made a pretty appearance, both as the queen and the nation's idol. A few songs, among them one called "Yankee Dewey," particularly well sung, closed the evening's programme.

The costumes were designed by Miss Gilbert, one of the teachers, and showed great artistic taste and a close attention to the coloring and form of the flowers and birds intended to be represented.

Miss Angie Sutphen Kuhl was the pianist and Mr. Charles E. Lewis the musical director. The programme was repeated Tuesday afternoon at 4 o'clock for the benefit of the children.

ASK FOR REPEAL OF BUILDING ORDINANCE

An Important Petition Presented To The Council.

MUCH DISCUSSION OVER IT.

MAYOR FISK APPOINTS NEW COMMISSIONERS OF ASSESSMENTS.

June 30th Set as Date for Hearing on Street Railway Application—Legislation Against Dogs—Annual Report of Library Directors.

An adjourned meeting of the City Council was held Monday evening, with all the members present excepting Mr. Andrews. It required a good deal of time to transact the business under consideration. The building ordinance came in for a share of the discussion, while other matters of more or less importance were subjected to a great deal of consideration. The extreme warm weather did not affect the members very much and they evidently did not mind remaining in the Council chamber. Clerk MacMurray was absent and by a vote of the Council Mr. Wean was appointed clerk pro tem. The business of the evening then came up as follows:

The Plainfield Gas and Electric Light Company petitioned the Council to adopt an ordinance designating the streets in the city where underground electric light wires are to be laid. The petition was received and filed. The annual report of the board of directors of the Plainfield Public Library was presented and showed the receipts to be $12,233.34, and the disbursements, $4,157.81. There is a balance in the general fund of $2,192.82, and in the building fund, $5 382 80, making a total of $8,075 62. In the Babcock fund the receipts were $13,421.91, disbursements, $12,433.83.

DeWitt C. Ivins, J. Parker Mason and George R. Cornwell, commissioners of assessments, appointed by former Mayor Alex. Gilbert, tendered their resignations, and the Council accepted the same.

Mr. Hetfield presented a communication signed by over two hundred prominent property owners, contractors, builders and masons, asking the Council to repeal the building ordinance outside of the fire limits. Mr. Hetfield stated that the best and largest property owners, as well as contractors, said that the ordinance be repealed and that fire limits be replaced. One citizen said Bridgeport, Conn., with 27,000 population, that has a moderate ordinance. He thought that Plainfield is not yet a Greater New York, and that the ordinance was intended for places like Chicago and New York. The great trouble, Mr. Hetfield said, is that there is too much legislation in Plainfield, and it works against the poor people.

Mr. Buckle thought the ordinance should be amended, but that something else should be presented as a substitute.

Mr. Barrows thought the matter should be referred to the joint committee who have under consideration the building ordinance. The matter was finally so referred, Mr. Hetfield accepting the amendment to his motion that the ordinance be repealed.

Mayor Fisk appointed Harry W. Marshall, Frank Bushnell and R. A. Meeker commissioners of assessment, to fill the places of J. P. Mason, DeWitt C. Ivins and Geo. R. Cornwell, resigned. The appointments were confirmed, and all matters of assessment, papers, etc., under the act which they were appointed, were referred to the new commissioners, also the amount of $2,000.01 which sum it has been estimated it will take to complete the system of sewage and drainage in the city. The commissioners will be called upon to pass upon the above amount.

Mr. Hetfield referred back the ordinance giving the Plainfield Gas and Electric Light Company the power to lay its wires underground. The ordinance was adopted on first and second reading, ordered engrossed and advertised.

Mr. Barrows made a motion that when Council adjourn it be to meet on the evening of June 30th at 8 o'clock, at which time a hearing will be given to the public for or against the extension of the trolley as petitioned for by the Plainfield Street Railway Company. Another resolution was offered by Mr. Barrows which awards to Percy Christmas the contract to establish a storm sewer through Plainfield avenue. The resolution was adopted. Mr. Barrows stated that the work of locating a storm sewer through Second street would be done by the city, as it can be accomplished under the cost of $500, the amount asked by the lowest bidder.

An ordinance was introduced by Mr. Barrows, which provides for the permanent improvement and repair of East Ninth street. The ordinance was adopted and it then took the usual course.

Mr. Hetfield reported back the liquor ordinance with much of it stricken out as ordered by the Council at the last meeting. The ordinance as presented adds two sections to the regular liquor ordinance. The sections provide that the Council may renew a liquor license previously granted, without the customary number of signatures of freeholders, and that a license may be transferred in consideration of a transfer fee of $25 in such case. The ordinance was adopted and ordered advertised.

Mr. Runyon, for Mr. Barrows, presented an ordinance which provides for the muzzling of dogs, and the appointment of two dog catchers, who shall receive 25 cents for each dog turned over to the poundmaster. It also provides that an owner must pay $1 to redeem the dog, and that if the dog is not redeemed within four days after capture it is to be killed in the most merciful and humane manner possible. The ordinance was adopted.

Mr. Hetfield objected to the ordinance and again claimed too much legislation, as he thought there was an ordinance covering the case in question.

Mayor Fisk stated that most of the ordinance was repealed three years ago, and it is now necessary to adopt such an ordinance.

Mr. Hetfield reported back an ordinance relating to entertainments, shows, etc., which was referred to the laws and ordinance committee for consideration. The ordinance was adopted.

M. VanHeerden offered a resolution which provides for the transfer of $1,200 from the general fund to the sewer bond and interest account This concluded the business and Council adjourned.

A PICNIC ON THE FOURTH.

Epworth League to Enjoy a Day at Washington Rock.

At the home of Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Wilson, of Mountain avenue, Monday evening the members of the Epworth League of Grace M. E. church held a social and business meeting. There was a large attendance of members and friends and everyone thoroughly enjoyed themselves. During the business part of the evening the members decided to hold a picnic at Washington Rock on July 4th, and every effort will be made to make the outing great success. The plans of work for the coming year were talked over and several new ideas will be introduced to increase the efficiency of the league.

Following the business meeting a short programme was presented which included violin selections by Dykman Winkler, accompanied on the piano by Miss Alice Carroll, and there were piano solos by Lois Hunsecker. The selections were greatly enjoyed by all. In conclusion refreshments were served and a social time spent.

A Young Hostess

Last Saturday afternoon Helen Woolley, the four-year old daughter of Mr. and Mrs Lindsey Woolley, of New street, celebrated the anniversary of her birthday by entertaining a number of her young friends. The afternoon was passed in playing all kinds of games on the lawn, and a bountiful repast was also served on the lawn after the conclusion of the games. The young hostess received a number of pretty gifts from her friends as pleasant reminders of the happy event in her life.

Funeral of Theodore Herrmann.

The funeral of the late Theodore Herrmann, of Whitewood avenue, who was drowned last Friday evening while swimming in the borough, was held Tuesday from the house, Rev. J. O. McKelvey, pastor of Warren chapel, officiated and spoke very highly of the deceased. He remarked concerning his Christian character and his upright ways in life. Interment was in the cemetery at Bound Brook in the family plot.

Paid a $5 Fine.

John Kennedy, of Prideville, who was arrested last Saturday evening at a picnic by Constable Pangborn, was arraigned before Justice Mattison Monday and was fined $5 and cost of the court. He paid the fine.

Junior Endeavor Officers.

At the meeting of the Junior Superintendents Monday afternoon in the Y. M. C. A. Mrs. W. S. Lowry was chosen president, Rev. C. L. Goodrich vice-president and Miss Beeching secretary and treasurer.

Two Ounces of Blood Daily

Are added to your veins by taking with each meal one of the natural iron Capsuloids made from the fresh blood of young, healthy bullocks.

Hundreds have testified that this is the only iron medicine which agrees perfectly with stomach and bowels. The following testimony is selected at random from thousands more hundreds. Mr. Howard Emerson, of Fremont, N. Y., while acting as manager of one of Mr. Edwards' grocery stores, began to lose flesh and after almost losing his life through a steady decline, was saved and restored to health by taking Capsuloids. He writes as follows:

THE CAPSULOID COMPANY, New York City.

GENTLEMEN:—I cannot thank you too heartily for what your Capsuloids have done for me. I was a powerful young man two years ago but developed dry consumption, and continued to grow worse for nine months when I was induced to go West. Climate, travel and medicine failed to do me the slightest good. My blood was exhausted; I was completely out of breath; no strength was obtained for customers made me pant; I grew thinner and thinner, lost my appetite and coughed terribly and was rapidly nearing the last stage of consumption, when I heard of your Capsuloids. They were like fire. My blood grew rich, my heart ceased palpitating, I could eat my breath easily, my appetite returned, I grew strong, and gained over forty pounds in a little out of sight. I am still gaining right along and will report to you later. I am HOWARD PATTERSON.

This is not a patent or secret medicine. It is prescribed largely by doctors.

A Prominent Physician.

A prominent New York physician in discussing the merits of Ripans Tabules with a brother M. D. said: "Several years ago I asserted that if one wished to become a philanthopist, and do a beneficient deed—one that would help the whole human race—nothing could be better than to procure the Roosevelt Hospital prescription, which is the basis of the Ripans Tabules, and cause it to be put up in the form of a ketchup and distributed among the poor."

Sales Increasing.

The largest retail drug store in America is that of Hegeman & Co. on Broadway cor. New York City. A reporter who went there to learn how Ripans Tabules were selling bought a five-cent carton and asked:

"Do you have much call for them?"

He was referred to a gentleman who proved to be the head of the department. He said:

"The sale of Ripans Tabules is constantly increasing, due especially to the influential character of the testimonials in the daily press, and growing out of these, through the recommendation of friend to friend. Satisfaction with them is very general. When once they are bought I seldom hear that a special customer for them is made. This, I believe, is through their intrinsic merit, which proves the bona fide character of the advertising. I think them specially useful in the general run of stomach troubles."

An Elderly Lady.

An elderly lady living at Fordham Heights, a part of New York City, and who was well known to be a warm advocate of Ripans Tabules for any case of liver trouble or indigestion, said to a reporter who visited her for the purpose of learning the peculiarlars of her case: "I had always employed a physician and did so on the last occasion I had for one, but at that time obtained no beneficial results. I had never had any faith in patent medicines, but having seen Ripans Tabules recommended very highly in the New York Herald concluded to give them a trial, and found they were just what my case demanded. I have never employed a physician since, and that means a saving of $3 a call. A dollar's worth of Ripans Tabules lasts me a month, and I would not be without them now if it were a dollar." At the time of this interview there were present two daughters who specially objected to their mother giving a testimonial which should appear in the newspapers, but to do this the elder lady argued: "There may be other cases just like mine, and I am sure I take great pleasure in recommending the Tabules to any one afflicted as I was. If the telling about my case may be the means of some other person similarly afflicted to be as greatly benefited as I have been, I see no objection." The daughters, knowing how earnestly she felt about the benefit she had received, decided she was quite right.

CERVERA PLANNING TO DESERT SANTIAGO.

Spanish Admiral Is Getting Desperate, Say Cubans.

SPANIARDS SEND RELIEF.

INSURGENTS WILL BLOCK THEIR WAY TO SANTIAGO.

The Plot Discovered to Embroil The United States With European Powers—Blanco's Secretary On a Secret Mission—Manila Expedition Sails Monday—Reinforcements for General Shafter

(From the Union Associated Press.)

Off Santiago, June 21, via Mole St. Nicholas, June 23, 10:40 a. m.—The Cubans report to Sampson that it is well understood in the city that Cevera means to attempt to run through the channel and escape the American fleet at the first favorable opportunity. The ships are kept coaled to their utmost capacity. Lookouts are stationed watching for an open ing. Cevera is getting desperate and will take any chance.

Off Santiago, June 21, via Mole St. Nicholas, June 22, 12:33 p. m.—Sampson has been notified that Gen. Rando is marching with a large force to reinforce the Spaniards at Santiago. It is said that insurgents will be placed to cut off his approach, but it is probable that Rando will fight his way through.

St. Thomas, June 22, 10:46 a. m.—American Consul Hanna has discovered a plot of the Spanish governor of Maclas, Porto Rico, to embroil the United States in a quarrel with the Powers. He has mounted four guns on a height near San Juan which is exclusively peopled with prominent foreigners including fourteen consuls. It was his plan to cause a wholesale slaughter during the bombardment.

Kingston, June 22, 12:26 p. m.—The steamer Adula has arrived from Cuba with nearly a hundred passengers aboard. They are all Spanish. Among them is Senor Charez, secretary to Blanco on his way to Spain. It is thought he is on a secret mission as he is book under an assumed name.

San Francisco, June 22, 11:37 a. m.—The third Philippine expedition starts Monday. Merritt will leave on the steamship Newport Wednesday following. He will probably be accompanied by the Seventh California regiment. Several hundred recruits arrived here this morning.

Washington, June 22, 12 m—General Duffield and the first brigade left this morning for Hampton Roads, there to embark on the Harvard and Yale to join Shafter's army.

Newport News, June 22, 12:15 p. m—The preparations for arming the cruiser Buffalo have been ordered stopped. It is believed that the Government has rejected the vessel.

New York, June 22, 11 a. m—The Cuban yacht, Alfredo, the first vessel in the Cuban Navy, started from this port this morning bound for Cuba.

Teachers' Salaries to Be Paid.

A special meeting of the borough Board of Education was held last Tuesday when the teachers' salaries were ordered paid. This was done because the teachers will be anxious to leave town soon after the Commencement A discussion of the proposed new school building occupied the attention of the Board during the evening, but nothing definite was done. The plans and specifications will soon be ready and bids will be advertised for.

—Mr. and Mrs. William G. Gray, of Plainfield avenue, are rejoicing over the arrival of a young heir.

—Stone has been brought to build a culvert at the corner of East Front street and Westervelt avenue.

—George Coss and Charles Hartfelder, of the West End, went to Fort Wadsworth to see the soldiers Sunday.

—Front street is at last nearing completion. There is a fine road now from Grant avenue to Clinton avenue, hard and smooth.

—In backing City Judge DeMeza's horse out of the stall Monday afternoon, in Cole's livery stable where it is kept, the animal caught his shoe, and tearing it off stepped on a sharp nail which penetrated the tender part of the hoof. The wound may result in lockjaw.

CLASS DAY IN BOROUGH.

GRADUATES DISTINGUISHED THEMSELVES IN THE EXERCISES.

Class Prophecy of Miss Elizabeth Hoagland Was Very Amusing—Presentation of Gifts Made Many a Laugh.

At the North Plainfield High School last Tuesday the first class day exercises were held under the auspices of the graduating class. The members of the class made the hall look very attractive by using American flags, flowers, etc. The programme was announced by Arthur Smith.

The musical features of the programme consisted of a piano duet by Miss May Conroy and Mr. Simpson, banjo selections by Fred Van Epe, accompanied on the piano by W. E. MacClymont, piano solos by Miss Conroy and Miss Van Fleet, while the singing of the class song was one of the most enjoyable features. The words were composed by Miss Hoagland and the music by Miss VanFleet, both of the graduating class.

The address of welcome was given by Frederick B. Williams, president of the class. The class history was by Miss Clara T VanFleet. It was full of wit and wisdom. The class poem was recited by Miss Florence Smalley.

Perhaps the most amusing part of the programme was the class prophecy by Miss Elizabeth Hoagland. She had something to say regarding the Plainfields' only stream, Green brook; of the obstructions removed by the Board of Health; of Plainfield's sewage beds and how the Councilmen were obliged to hold handkerchiefs to their noses when near them; of the "Curfew Bell," and "Where's My Wandering Boy Tonight?" In conclusion, Miss Hoagland introduced a wheel of fortune and the fate of each member of the class was read.

The last number on the programme was the presentation of gifts to the class by Miss Bertha Stevens. Frederick Williams, the only young man to be graduated, received a picture of a donkey on muslin, Miss Alice Barker a small woolly dog, a "small barker," Miss Minnie Marsh a large paper box, in which to keep letters that come from over the sea, and Miss VanFleet was presented with a wooden rolling pin. The others presented were follows: Miss Laura Coddington, bunch of roses; Miss Elizabeth Hoagland, writing paper, American flag; Miss Emmons, jumping doll; Miss Conroy, bottle of sarsaparilla; Miss Ella Coddington, a banner of blue silk; Miss Brokaw, lemon squeezer; Miss Milne, a love letter, and Miss Smalley a pair of stilts, because she is so small.

After the programme a social time was enjoyed by all and the graduates received the congratulations of their friends.

ENDEAVOR SOCIABLE.

Union Affair to be Held in Trinity Reformed Church July 12th.

At a meeting of the social committee of the local union, Christian Endeaver, of which Will O. Chapman is chairman, held Tuesday in the Y. M. C. A., it was decided to hold the much talked of sociable in Trinity Reformed church instead of on a lawn. The date fixed upon was July 12th.

Chairmen of committees were appointed, who will choose their own assistants. L. H. Bigelow is chairman of the welcoming committee; Miss Grace Petrie of the refreshment committee, and E. E. Anthony of the decorating committee. Another meeting will be held Wednesday night after prayer meeting in the First Baptist church, to make further arrangements.

Sold Under a Mortgage.

Tuesday afternoon Lawyer Frank Blatz, of the firm of Murphy & Blatz, sold the tailoring business recently owned by Charles Sherer, of Somerset street, to George Bremmer. The latter held a chattel mortgage on the business and purchased the same for the face value of the mortgage. It will be remembered that Sherer suddenly disappeared a few days ago, and as yet nothing has been heard from him. The sale took place to satisfy debts.

Her Ninth Birthday a Pleasant One.

Last Monday Edward Mosher, Jr, of Elmwood place, celebrated the anniversary of his ninth birthday and the event was pleasantly passed with a few friends in playing various kinds of games. The young folks had a jolly time in the afternoon when they were the guests of the young celebrant. Supper was served at 5 o'clock. Those present were Bert Gray, Arthur Williams, Ernest Concover, Raymond Mosher, and several others. The host received several nice presents as reminders of the occasion.

IMMORTAL NINETY-EIGHT

GRADUATING CLASS AT PLAINFIELD HIGH SCHOOL HELD EXERCISES.

Bright Class History by Miss Kirby—Miss Hoag, Class Poet, Does Creditable Work—Memoriates for Each Member.

Before its final departure from the halls of learning the class of '98 of the Plainfield High School last Tuesday gathered its friends in the Assembly Hall of the Franklin building and entertained them with song and story. It was the Class Day exercises, the first of the kind ever held by any class of the High School.

The room was decorated in bunting of the class colors, light blue and gold, while a large flag of the two colors occupied a prominent place at the rear of the platform.

Henry W. Brower, president of the class, presided. The programme opened with an introductory address by the president, in which he told what a grand and glorious aggregation they were and then individually poked fun at his classmates.

He introduced Henry A. Pearce who gave one of Robert J. Burdette's readings, "Bob Burdette on the Wheel." Then came a vocal solo by Miss Constance S. Patton, accompanied on the piano by Miss W. L. Patton and on the flute by Walter T. Serrell.

A bright little history of the class was read by Miss Adele Hope Kirby, the class historian. She told of the four years labor of the class and incidentally said something pleasant about the teachers. She referred in glowing terms to the girls' basket ball team of the class, but sketched in sorrowful phrase the athletic propensities of the young men, describing how one, instead of running at the State games, ran away from them.

Miss Lydie E Loizeaux gave a recitation "The Judgment Day." She was followed by the class ode, written and read by Miss Lillian Bessie Hunt, the class poet. It was funny at times and decidedly clever throughout.

Rhey T. Snodgrass shone forth as class prophet, drawing a graphic picture of the centuries to come when the class of '98 should become "immortal." It was upon by the fast perishing ones of '92 and other following classes. Then came the class song, sung by the class and written by Miss Hunt.

In conclusion, each member of the class was presented with some little memento. Wm. A. DeLong, Jr., received a toy gun, which he was informed was appropriate to him as the "heavy scraper" of the class. For Miss Lydie Koapman there was a teapot and stuffed cat. Knowing, the president said, "her dislike for the sterner sex." Miss Patton received a number of hearts and was wished better luck next time. Miss Hunt was giv n a mammoth pencil to assist her in her literary labors. A woolly lamb that barked was for Rhey T. Snodgrass. The others received appropriate gifts. At the close Snodgrass presented the president with a small looking glass from the class, which he explained would find plenty of use.

The exercises were arranged by a committee composed of Miss Ellen L. Osgood, Miss Carolyn Kampman, Miss Lillian B. Hunt, Henry A. Pearce, Henry W. Brower and Rhey T. Snodgrass.

The officers of the class are president, Henry W. Brower; vice president, Miss Carolyn Kampman; secretary, Miss Constance S. Patton; treasurer, Henry A. Pearce.

ANOTHER BRILLIANT JUNE DAY WEDDING

Miss Maud Middledith Married to Esteemed Buffalo Man.

CELEBRATED IN CHURCH.

THE CEREMONY OF PLIGHTING TROTH WAS A PRETTY ONE.

Morris Sawyer Tremaine, of Buffalo, Was the Groom—Bride was Attired in White Satin, Trimmed With Old Point Lace—250 Friends Present at the Reception—Costly Gifts Presented

Another brilliant June wedding was celebrated Tuesday, the bride being Miss Maud Middleth, daughter of James F Middleth, of 50 Mercer avenue, Washington Park, and the groom Morris Sawyer Tremaine, of Buffalo.

The ceremony was performed in the Holy Cross church at 6 o'clock in the presence of a large assemblage of guests, who filled the pews and had to find standing room in the aisles.

Holy Cross church looked very pretty with its floral decorations for the occasion. The front of the church and the altar were hidden in thick palms and greens, while a large group of showy hydrangeas on one side, and fragrant sweet peas surrounding the reading desk, lent a bright effect to the scene.

When the bridal party arrived, the ushers and bridesmaids followed the now popular fashion of forming at the front of the church, meeting the bride and her party in the rear of the edifice and escorting them to the front. While the ushers were moving up the aisle to meet the bridesmaids, who had entered from the vestry room Miss Jessie Utter, who presided at the organ, played Tannhauser, which was changed to Loengrin as the party moved up the aisle, and later to the Mendlessohn, as they went out.

The ushers were Henry Poole, of Buffalo, Clifford Moore, New York, Clarence Morrill, Arthur Fisher and Warren Allen, of Elizabeth, and James F. Middledith, Jr., of this city, a brother to the bride.

The bridesmaids were Miss Florence Abbott, Miss Helen Clark both of this city, Miss Nora Michner, of Washington, and Miss Gertrude Snyder, of Philadelphia. The maid of honor was Miss Mabel Van Deventer, of this city. The best man was Archibald Sawyer, of Elizabeth, the groom's cousin.

When the ushers had met the bridemaids at the vestry room door, they preceded them down the aisle to the rear of the church, where they met the bride, her father, and the maid of honor. Re-forming, the party moved up the aisle again, and stood in a pretty group at the foot of the altar, where Rev. T. Logan Murphy, the rector, performed the ceremony, using the Episcopal form of service. Then the party, in reversed order, left the church.

The bride's dress was of white satin, trimmed with old point lace. She wore a veil, both the veil and lace being heir looms in the family. The maid of honor wore white organdie over pale silk, and the bridesmaids were *gowned in pink satin. All car*ried fragrant bunches of sweet pea blossoms.

At the house a reception was held, to which about 250 guests were invited. Owing to the recent death of Mr. Tremaine's father, Major Tremaine, M. D., of Buffalo, the reception was somewhat quiet. The lower part of the house was prettily trimmed with greens, ferns and palms, while vases of cut flowers and roses were placed here and there where they would give a pleasing effect. A large American banner was twined around the staircase. Marcel furnished the supper.

In the parlor stood Mr. and Mrs. Tremaine to receive the congratulations of their friends. The reception was a very pleasant one, and the happy young couple were hurried off with the usual accompaniment of rice and old shoes. They have rented apartments in the Lennox, at Buffalo, where they will reside.

The presents were unusually pretty and valuable. The groom remembered the bride with a handsome pin, and the ushers also in a pleasant way. The bride presented each of the bridesmaids and the maid-of-honor with a remembrance in the shape of a piece of valuable jewelry. The wedding presents were spread out in an upper room. The ordinary line of beautiful china, dainty furniture, silverware, pictures, embroidery, etc., was to be seen. Altogether the wed*ding was one of the prettiest of the* season, and the bride was complimented again and again on her handsome appearance.

WILSON FOR GOVERNOR.

BOROUGH MAYOR'S FRIENDS WANT HIM TO GO HIGHER.

A Movement on Foot Among the Somerset County Democrats to Present Col Wilson's Name to State Convention.

A reporter learned yesterday that there is a movement on foot among Somerset county Democrats to present the name of Mayor John F. Wilson, of the borough, as candidate for the nomination of Governor at the approaching State convention of the Democrats.

Col. Wilson is not at all concerned personally in the movement, but his friends having taken up the matter of naming him for the high office in the belief that he would make an able executive for New Jersey. The movement has not taken definite form as yet.

Col. Wilson needs no introduction in this community. His stern, resolute character as a prominent citizen for the last quarter of a century is a guarantee enough for the most critical. Col. Wilson was born in Baltimore sixty-six years ago, his forefathers being heroes of the Revolutionary war. His father was an officer in the United States Navy and fought with the gallant Decatur in our war with Tripoli.

Mayor Wilson lived in Baltimore when the civil war broke out and he joined the southern cause, and had an important command at Gettysburg.

Over thirty years ago he engaged in the coal business, in which he has had a successful career. Col Wilson has lived in North Plainfield for twenty-five years and is one of the largest taxpayers in the county. Col. Wilson retired from active business in 1892 after having been engaged in the activities of the commercial world for forty five years.

A RASH YOUTH QUELLED

He Made a Mistake in Tackling a Bicycle Made for Two.

Westfield, June 23.—A young man of about eighteen, who said his name was Samuel Whalen, amused himself about dusk Monday evening rushing out of the woods near Garwood and chasing women bicyclists as they rode past. He succeeded in giving several a bad scare and started for another that he saw coming, but failed to notice that she was on a tandem with an escort on the back seat. He made a grab at the wheel, but instead of a scream he was greeted with a kick from the man on the back seat that doubled him up. Then the couple dismounted, and while the man sat on Whalen, the woman rode the tandem on to Westfield for an officer, who came with her on the wheel. Whalen pleaded so hard for release that the pair relented and asked that he be let go. The tandem team were Miss Etta Hayes and Charles Cooper, of Plainfield.

SOLDIER DOESN'T GET HIS LETTRS.

D. F. Stewart Worried About His Son at Tampa.

D. F. Stewart, of John street, whose son, William S. Stewart, is at Tampa, Fla., with Troop K, Sixth N. J. Cavalry, is much worried because of the failure of his son to receive his letters and money which are sent from home.

Mr. Stewart has sent altogether about fifteen letters, some of them containing money orders or postal notes, none of which the lad has received. Every time he writes, there is a request for his parents to write to him, and he cannot understand how it is that he doesn't receive any letters.

It is said that there is some trouble with the distribution of the mail at the camp.

ASLEEP ON SENTRY POST.

Two More New Jersey Volunteers to Be Punished.

Pompton Lake Camp, N. J., June 20—The fate of two Third New Jersey infantry men lying in the guard-house under conviction by confession of sleeping on sentry post is anxiously awaited.

The men were arraigned for trial Monday before a court-martial, but both pleaded guilty. Sentence, it is believed, will be very severe, as both men were on important post. One of them said he had been ill and had taken medicine which made him drowsy.

Macadamizing Madison Avenue.

C. M. Meeker started yesterday to macadamize Madison avenue from West Ninth street to Stelle avenue. David Bowden, who secured the contract for macadamizing Stelle avenue from Madison to Plainfield avenues, has not begun work on his contract yet, but is getting things in readiness to go to work in a day or two.

—A crosswalk is being laid across Watchung avenue at East Sixth street.

LIFE ON THE BADGER.

PLAINFIELD BOYS MEET WITH MANY EXPERIENCES.

Several Were in a Rescuing Party That Went to the Aid of a Sinking Schooner—Boys Want to Go South.

On Board U. S. S. Badger, Bar Harbor, Me., June 21—We left Provincetown last Sunday afternoon and arrived at Boston in a heavy fog. Monday morning we learned that the San Francisco had run ashore near Provincetown, so, as soon as the despatches were received, we put about and went to assist the SanFrancisco.

From our anchorage in Boston harbor we could see the Old South church and Bunker Hill monument, and it caused the boys to think a little more of what they were out for. As a result everybody is very anxious to go south right away.

But, to go back, we arrived at the spot of the SanFrancisco's grounding Monday night just in time to see the tugs pull her off the reef. We floated along in a heavy fog until Wednesday when we put into Bar Harbor.

The weather was more like a fall day and the night watches seemed like winter. During the last two days, however, the weather has begun to moderate. Wednesday night we went out to patrol the coast during the night, putting in again Thursday morning.

Friday we went out of Bar Harbor and had target practice with the three pounders and rifles. The shooting was remarkably good for new hands.

We have to buy a great many of our provisions ourselves as the allowance from the Government on this ship would just about fill a well-filled canary.

A little excitement was caused at taps last night by two men in a skiff coming along side and yelling that a schooner was sinking astern. The whale boat was immediately ordered away with several of the Plainfield boys in the crew, while search light was turned to fined the sinking vessel. The wind was blowing a small gale and it was pretty rough but we arrived there alright. We could not find anyone in the rigging and soon after, the craft, which was a two-masted schooner, went down with all all sails set, nearly swamping the whaleboat. Nothing but her top-sails remained above water.

CLAIM OF THE NEWS IS FALSE.

It Was a Daily Press Advertisem at That Rewarded Miss Perine.

It was the cent-a-word advertisement in The Daily Press that was the means of Miss Martha Perine, of Martinville, recovering a pocketbook containing $135. The News in its issue Tuesday claimed the credit for the return, but the facts are just the opposite. Miss Perine is visiting her uncle, Mr. Conroy, of Linden avenue, and she lost her book last Saturday. She then inserted an advertisement in The Daily Press and one in the News. The advertisement in the News was printed incorrectly, while that of The Press was right. Henry Hansen, Jr., of the borough, found the book. He took it home and told his father. The advertisement was seen in The Press and the money returned. Miss Perine rewarded young Hansen for his honesty.

Boisterious Young Men.

The boys who congregated around the Grace M. E. church Monday night, while the entertainment was being given, were a great annoyance to the people who were obliged to sit in front of the room. A half dozen lads hung around the door, clapping their hands and making as much noise as possible. They wouldn't pay any attention to the ladies who told them to keep quiet, and kept up their noise throughout the rendition of the entire programme. If a policeman had been near, and put some of them in the lock-up over night, it might have taught them a lesson.

Delivery Horse Runs Away.

One of C. B. Clifton's delivery horses, which was standing alongside of Smith Brothers' grocery store in Fruden's alley yesterday, while some potatoes were being unloaded, suddenly took it into his head to run away. He ran down the alley to Second street, across towards Charles Fiske's house, and would have plunged directly into the yard if the wheel had not caught in a tree and stopped the progress. The wagon was not injured.

Testimony in Corey Divorce Case.

The Corey divorce case was continued before Advisory Master Williams in the Chancery Chambers yesterday in Newark. The testimony for the petitioner was taken. He was represented by William Newcorn.

ALONE IN THE WOODS THEY AWAIT DEATH.

The Wife Saw Husband Suffer But Could Not Aid Him.

THEIR PITIABLE STORY TOLD.

MANY MISFORTUNES HAVE COME TO THE AGED PEDDLER OF LATE.

Ten Years Ago He Lost All By Fire—Now He Is Sad Hidden—In Delirium He Fell Off the Stairs and Was Nearly Killed—Wife Could Not Aid Him—Neighbors Built Them a Shanty.

In a rickety old shanty, half hidden by the dense foliage of the wooded land back of Union Village, an old and feeble couple are dragging out a miserable existence. To them misfortunes seem never to come singly. There, in the squalor and degradation that surrounds their absolute poverty, a scene was enacted last Saturday that nearly had a fatal ending. It ended in more misery for the aged couple.

James Clark was once a peddler of oysters and fish. While he never accumulated any property, he reaped sufficient rewards from his industry to satisfy the simple wants of his wife and himself. They owned a little cottage in the woods near Union Village. The place was small but neat, and the Clarks were a happy couple despite their modest surroundings. James Clark, Jim all his neighbors called him, is now over eighty years old. His helpmate is ten years younger.

Jim never laid by a great amount for a rainy day and so, when his business began to drop off, the affairs of the home had to suffer. The younger men were more enterprising and the regular fish stores also took much of his trade. But Jim did not complain.

One night, ten years ago, Union Village heard the scream of "fire" echoing on the night air There was a rush to the rescue but before it arrived, Jim Clark's house and all it contained was burned to the ground, while the two tenants barely escaped with their lives. Already Jim had met with business reverses while ill health came with his increasing age.

And so they started to work again but they had lost the enthusiasm of youth. The neighbors gathered together and erected a shanty of one story and an attic out in the woods. It is a half mile from the main road and only a little bridle path leads to the place, close by a spring.

It was not a very substantial structure and the cold winter winds found their way through the sundry cracks and crannies with chilling effect to the inmates. There the Clarks have lived ever since. There they are living now, if such kind of existence may be termed living.

Two months ago a wandering canine, supposed to be mad, set his teeth in Clark's leg. The wound would not heal and a horrible running sore has been the result. The little income that Clark received from his efforts in his business, stopped. He turned his horse and three goats out to pasture and resigned himself to his fate. The poormaster of New Providence township came to the rescue and furnishes a pittance amounting to $1.50 a week to support the aged couple and pay for their medicine.

For the last two weeks, Clark has been unable to leave his domicile. For the last week has been unable to leave his rough couch in the little low attic of the building. His wife is stone deaf and very feeble, barely able to totter out to the spring and get sufficient water for the two. Illness and hunger have made sad inroads.

Saturday morning, Clark became half delirious and tried to crawl out of bed. Close to the cot was the opening in the floor leading to the first story. Clark did not see it In his delirium he left the bed and staggared off the side. His wife was standing by the stove close to the foot of the stairs. Suddenly without warning, for she could not hear his screams, her husband fell from the attic and landed in a heap at her feet. Her extreme weakness prevented her from moving him and there he lay with his head doubled under him, giving vent to agonizing groans.

The accident occurred at 10 o'clock. At 3 o'clock in the afternoon Victor Mercier, who was returning from work in an adjacent field, heard Mrs. Clark's screams and came to the house to see what was the matter. Clark is a heavy man, weighing 200 pounds. Mercier was just recovering from a serious accident and so could do nothing for him. He hurried after assistance, however, and soon Clark was relieved from his awkward

THE WOMAN'S WORLD

A Fad for Engaged Girls.

It used to be the correct thing when a young woman was engaged to be married to have a double picture frame in her boudoir, or bed room, containing a photograph of her fiance and herself. Twenty-five years ago it was the fashion to have your photograph taken with the young man you were engaged to, and that was placed on your dressing table. Now there is a new fad. You must not, of course, that is not considered good form. Nor be photographed with your fiance—must you even have your picture in the same frame with his. The new fad is to have a frame holding four cabinet size photographs, and in this you must put four pictures of your fiance in four different positions—one full face, one side face, one three-quarters face and one profile. It is rather a novel idea, as it is astonishing how changed a person's expression is with the face in different positions. One of these sets of photographs was seen the other day on a young girl's writing desk, and it was hard to believe that the profile and the full face were of the same man. This is one of the latest fads for engaged men as well as girls.—Detroit Free Press.

A Woman as Dog Enumerator.

Mrs. Sarah A. Richart is dog enumerator for Kansas City, Kan. She took the office for the sake of keeping the library. Five years ago there were seven literary clubs in the city; they formed a federation and started a library, which in two years grew beyond their capacity to support by free contributions. An appeal was made to the city, but the proposition to levy a tax was voted down. The women then asked for the dog tax as a help to the library. The tax was rarely collected, and the town was full of uncollared dogs. An ordinance to give the tax to the library was decided to be illegal. After much deliberation the women asked that they be given the cost of collecting the dog tax. That was done, and the office of dog enumerator was created. The men smiled, but the women meant business. The Mayor appointed Mrs. Richart enumerator. She receives one-half of the dog tax for her services, and this she turns over to the library. The result is that the city is receiving much more money for dog tax than ever before, while the income of the library surpasses the women's utmost hopes. The plan has worked so well that it is proposed at Lyons, Ia., to make Mrs. H. H. Smithcock dog enumerator for the benefit of the Lyons library.—Woman's Journal

Rule for Making Bed Slippers.

The materals for bed slippers are: Two and a half skeins of Germantown wool and a pair of No. 5 knitting needles, each of four needles cast thirty-six stitches. Knit 1, seam 1, and repeat for four rounds. Knit plain until you have half the width of the sole, as the slipper is joined across the bottom of the foot. The decreasing is done in the centre of one needle, and before the instep; thus, narrow, knit two plain stitches, narrow. Make the ribbing as follows: Knit three rounds plain, seam three rounds, and repeat until you have five ribs plain, and five the seamed, always narrowing in the same way, and place every second rib til it is small enough for the ankle. Then knit one round plain, and one round by throwing the thread over the needle and narrowing, followed by one plain round. For the leg, knit two and seam two, until as long as desired. Join the bottom of the foot; finish the upper edge with a simple crocheted shell and run a narrow ribbon through the open spaces. The size can be varied by increasing or decreasing the number of stitches. These bed slippers or socks are very comfortable for invalids or elderly people.

Rich Girls Study Nursing.

A nurse who was graduated recently from one of the training schools of a New York city hospital says that a number of the members of her class were girls from wealthy or very well-to-do families who were studying nursing as a part of a liberal education. They had no idea of applying the knowledge they gained in any particular way, only to meet such emergencies as might come to them in life. One girl who was to marry a country doctor was taking the course to be able to assist her husband and take an intelligent interest in his work And the rich girls the nurse said were, if anything, more enthusiastic and more devoted to their work than the girls who were taking up the profession as a means of livelihood.

A Swedish Waste Paper Basket.

The very prettiest and most attractive waste paper baskets to be found are Swedish. They are made of splints, and are in the shape of a big, square, thick envelope. The basket is painted in bright colors in crude designs of clover leaves and hearts, and ornamented further with rosettes of flannel tacked on to the basket in oldifferent places. The description is not attractive but the picturesqueness and effectiveness of the baskets make them well worth having. They hang, by a tasted cord, on the side of the desk, on the wall, or on a convenient table. One of the prettiest costs $8.50. —New York Times.

White Pique Outing Suit.

A stunning outing gown for the mountain or seashore is made of white pique. Although [illegible] a warm material for hot [illegible] it makes up so charmingly [illegible] included in nearly every summer wardrobe.

A white pique suit which is somewhat out of the ordinary has the skirt made perfectly plain, with a stitched band of the material at the foot. The jacket has a rounded effect, coming down over the hips and back in the form of a basque. It is trimmed with stitched bands. Worn over a dainty waist of pale pink or blue lawn, this makes a decidedly jaunty suit.

A Simple Shirt Waist.

As the wardrobe of every woman should contain at least eight or ten shirt waists and as some new idea in the manner of making is always desirable, original designs continue to crop up.

A simple waist, suitable for gingham, lawn, or any fine material, has the back made perfectly plain, without a yoke. The material in front is laid in fine pleats from the shoulders and pouches slightly at the belt. The regulation shirt sleeves are finished at the wrist with any narrow cuff. Bucks are more fashionable than the standing collar and are usually of white pique.

A Tucked Dress.

Tucking is so very popular this season, for gowns of every variety from cloth to the finest lawn, that quite often some singular effects are obtained in the effort to be original.

A gown which is striking for its originality, made of tan colored drap d'ete, has the skirt decorated with three distinct groups of four tucks, coming to a point in the front and running out to the side. The jacket is made quite plain, with the tucks arranged in precisely the same manner as on the skirt, this mode of ornamentation, also forms the trimming on the small leg-o-mutton sleeves.

Fifteen Thousand Violin Makers.

The only place in the world where violin making may be said to constitute the industry is Markneukirchen, in Saxony, with its numerous surrounding villages. There are altogether about 15,000 people in this district engaged exclusively in the manufacture of violins. The inhabitants, from the merry boy and girl to the wrinkled, grey-headed veteran and aged grandmother, are all constantly employed making some part or other of this musical instrument.

A Cure for Insomnia.

The lecturer on health had finished his discourse and invited his auditors to ask any questions they chose concerning points that might seem to need clearing up, when a lean, skinny man rose up and asked:

"Professor, what do you do when you can't sleep at night?"

"I usually stay awake," replied the lecturer, "although, of course, everybody should feel at liberty to do otherwise if he chooses. Are there any other questions?"

Perfect Understanding.

"Do you want my daughter for her money or for herself?" demanded the old gentleman.

"It's this way," stammered the young man, as he tripped backwards over the edge of the rug. "I want her for myself and I want her money for herself, and I want both of them for ourselves, and you certainly must understand."

A Fussy Centre Piece.

An effective centre-piece arrangement at a recent dinner was a low oval mound of pansies. The centre was made up of the palest yellow, almost white, the flowers shading gradually through deep yellow into ruby purple, and finally the darkest and richest shade of that royal color for the extreme fringe.

Cup Custard.

An agreeable variation of the cup-custard is to flavor it with coffee in lieu of chocolate or vanila. The proportion is three tablespoonfuls of clear strong coffee to every pint of milk and three eggs.

The Belgian Government offers a prize of $10,000 to anyone who will discover a chemical that will take the place of white phosphorus in matches.

LATEST IN BELTS.

Laces of All Kinds More Fashionable Than Ever.

(By special arrangement with the N.Y. Sun.)

Even if we do not always literally follow the rules laid down for us by the oracles of fashion, we keep up a perpetual watch for the possible novelties. Simplicity of outline is the one thing for which we must strive now if we would be quite up to date with the latest advices from Paris. Small sleeves, scant skirts and the almost close fitting bodice are in high favor. Three yards is the prescribed limit of fullness for the very latest skirt. One of the most popular models has a narrow front breadth, and the remaining portion of the skirt is set on to a yoke as if it were a flounce. The yoke is narrow, falling just below the hips.

Many of the smartest gowns for both morning and afternoon are made of foulard. One special design, pretty for morning wear, has a plain five-gored skirt, measuring three yards and a half at the bottom, made with the lining attached, and no trimming. The foulard is red and black, and the guimpe waist, which is supplied with sleeves, is of soft white batiste, finely tucked. The silk bodice over this opens narrowly down the front to show the white; epaulettes of silk adorn the tops of the sleeves, square revers turn down on either side from the round cut neck, cuffs of silk finish the batiste sleeves, and all the edges are simply finished with a narrow fold.

Laces of all kinds are more fashionable than ever, and especially insertions which encircle the skirts of our new thin gowns. Venetian, Honiton, Guipure, and thread laces are very popular, as well as Chantilly and blond laces. A white lace called "Luxcule," made of braid and fine stitches, is very effective for boleros, yokes and any adjunct of the dress where flat trimming is desired. Tambour patterns on the new craqueie mesh make a very desirable novelty. There are many inexpensive laces in narrow widths to form the little ruches used so much, and black Valenciennes is one.

The latest thing in belts to wear with shirt waists is a soft taffeta ribbon, five inches wide, made tight enough to wrinkle into half that width, and fastened with a pretty silver gilt buckle

A NEW TORPEDO BOAT

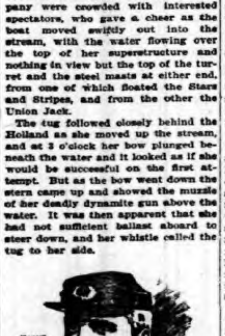
HOLLAND SUBMARINE DESTROYER AND HER MARVELOUS POWER.

Five Ways to Bring the Little Craft Out of Deep Water—A Discharge Can be Made One Hundred Feet Away but Six-ty is Far Enough for Safety.

The Holland submarine torpedo boat has been under construction for more than a year, and it was not until last March that public trials proved the inventor's predictions regarding her marvelous powers. On the first trip Colonel W. H. Gilder writes:

It was just ten minutes before 2 when the crew of the little submarine boat went down into the mysterious interior and closed the door behind them. That shut them off completely from the outside world. The adacent docks of the Raritan Dry Dock Company were crowded with interested spectators, who gave a cheer as the boat moved swiftly out into the stream, the water flowing over the top of her superstructure and nothing in view but the top of the turret and the steel masts at either end, from one of which floated the stars and stripes, and from the other the Union Jack.

The tug followed closely behind the Holland as she moved up the stream, and at 3 o'clock her bow plunged beneath the water and it looked as if she would be successful on the first attempt. But when the bow went down the stern came up and showed the muzzle of her deadly dynamite gun above the water. It was then apparent that she had not sufficient ballast aboard to steer down, and her whistle called the tug to her side.



Another 200 pounds was transferred, and again the turret door was locked. The water tanks were refilled and, to the delight of every one board the tug, the Holland was seen to be much lower in the water than she had ever been before. Presently her screw propeller began to churn the water and she forged ahead slowly. Every movement she made was watched with breathless anxiety by the men on board the tug and with equal tenacity by two women, who had braved the grime and dirt of a little tug to see the first dip of the craft that may carry terror to the stoutest hearts on board the mightiest battle ships ever constructed.

At that moment the forward mast was seen to dip down in the water, the turret disappeared from view and only a few feet of the top of each mast was all that could be seen of the Holland. A great cheer went up from every throat on board the tug, and the steam whistle shrieked a long and cheerful blast.

Then the little boat began to rise to the surface and danced along on a perfectly even keel. Twice more she disappeared below the surface and rose again at the magic touch of her navigator. Then he raised the cover of the coning tower, and as his bald head appeared above the edge he was greeted with three hearty cheers and three more blasts from the steam whistles. Every one was perfectly satisfied that the Holland submarine torpedo boat was a complete success and that her future was assured. Mr. Holland was asked:

"How many ways have you of coming to the surface from deep water?"

"Five. The simplest is to stop the engines, and then you sink slowly. That is because the vessel's buoyancy is for. You can blow the water out of the tanks with compressed air—that is another way—or you can steer her up when in motion; that is the usual way. The water can be pumped out of the ballast, tanks with one of the engines, or it can be pumped out with hand pumps. So you see it is easy enough to come to the surface whenever you want to."

"Can you see through the water when submerged?"

"Not a bit; that is, not in a salt-bearing river or muddy sound like this. Out at sea the water is much clearer, and you can see a little, but not much."

"How can you clear obstructions in that case?"

"That is always difficult in shallow water where there is much traffic. It is necessary to know your direction before you dive and make frequent trips to the surface to keep a good lookout. In deep water you can go down thirty-six feet, and that will clear any case of all obstructions and under all shipping."

"Can you see the ship you intend to attack while under the water?"

"You can tell when you are directly under it, because your light is all about you, and when you pass beyond it grows lighter again. That is the time to let go your torpedo."

"How far from the vessel should you be when you discharge your torpedo?"

"It can be fired a hundred feet, but sixty is far enough for safety, and the probability of hitting is greater."

"How is the torpedo fired?"

"I use compressed air to overcome the inertia of the projectile and then fire it out with a charge of gunpow-der [illegible] making.

For Bicycle Suits.

Another objection to bicycling is overcome. An underskirt has been perfected which combines knickerbocker and petticoat, giving the advantages of both without their disadvantages. The garment is known as the "Cythere," which name was chosen for its attractiveness.

With the Cythere, it is unnecessary to wear tights, though some lisle or light wool undergarment should complement the article. Neither does the Cythere take the place of stockings. They begin at the knee, where the knickerbockers leave off. The chief advantage of this novelty is the added and desirable petticoat element. Men, it seems, deprecate such athletic costumes for women, as it disposes with the traditional feminine garment.

Whether the inventor wrought in response to this masculine wail for the retention of the non-bifurcated underskirt; whether the wish of the women to be obliging or if the Cythere represents the natural reaction from the great skirt to no skirt, then to little skirt, is not explained. It is. And such women as hitherto have found their athletic costumes incomplete, there is made with a deep yoke, the skirt and knickerbockers are attached below the hips, thus there is no fullness at the belt line.

The garment is unlined; the knickerbockers and skirt are of one fabric and hue. The former finish at the knee, while the latter is longer, the depth of the outer skirt. As from a wheel, a sudden gust of wind, would not discover so generously a woman wearing this sort of garment as one sans petticoat. The silk ones are frilled, but those of brilliantine are not. The skirt opens the entire length on either side, which is a gain for ease in locomotion. A woman of taste, of course, has all visible or possibly visible underwear match outerwear on the wheel, in color. These red Cytheres are to be countenanced only for golf, traveling or walking under circumstances in which the skirt would show only the least occasional bit.

There has been an immense sale this season of genuine Scotch tweeds, as these materials are in high favor for cycling and travelling dresses. The patterns are handsome, and, besides the soft grey mixtures, show any number of pretty color-blendings. The durability of these goods we are entirely familiar with. For general uses they rank well with English serge and the stylish waterproof cravenettes.

Dainty Flower Toques.

Toques composed entirely of flowers still be very much in fashion this summer. They are uncommonly pretty, genteel, and becoming this year, as the blossoms are daintily veiled with tulle or fine-meshed silk net. A charming French model is composed of perfectly natural-looking roses, shading from damask red to the faintest pink, intermixed with any amount of tender green and rose foliage that deepens in places into brownish red. Four or five lovely buds and leaves form a graceful algrette at one side. Covering the entire toque, with the exception of the aigrette, is a misty veiling of soft green tulle, this also forming the face veil. The entire drapery is fixed in place with tiny jewelled pins, the veiling covering the flowers with a lace-like and softening effect.

Flowers in Abundance.

For those who are tired of violets even of the best Parisian manufacture, are provided pretty wreaths and bunches of purple-blue iris, hyacinths, ragged sailor blooms, periwinkles, white and lilac stocks, primulas, and Scottish blue-bells. Primulas of French make look very pretty in artificial form, and the foliage is decorative. Sprays of shaded nasturtium blossoms in velvet very often seen on French hats and bonnets, the flowers in rubv velvet with brown, green, or black tulle. A harmony in green and white for a summer hat is charming—only very delicate foliage being employed, such as maiden-hair fern, shamrock, clover leaves, creeping Jenny in shaded velvet and tulle for the green portions, and lilac sprays, silk choux, rosebuds, mountain daisies, ostrich plumes, dog-blossoms, and hawthern for the white garnitures.

Beautiful Dress Goods.

Plain and fancy mohairs glace, an uncommonly large and attractive exhibit of checked and fancy mixed suitings, self-colored fabrics in camel's hair, English serge, Henrietta cloth, drap d'Alma, French diagonals, and mohair armures, veilings, white and ecru linens, and batistes in striped, flowered, and dotted patterns, and grenadines in wool, as well as silk and wool weaves are among the most popular dress goods set forth this week by all the leading importers of the city.

M. Paderewski, when travelling, has his piano in his bedroom, and immediately on rising commences practising, and it is a matter of difficulty to get him away from it. As an instance, when he was at Manchester in the winter of 1890 he remained there exactly forty-eight hours, and out of that time he was at the piano twenty-seven.

CHILDREN'S TRAINING.

Each Little One Needs Careful and Earnest Study.

The unformed characters of children are so different, that in a family of brothers and sisters no two are alike, and each little one needs careful and earnest study. This is the more important if we remember what a wise man once said:—"Give me a child till it is six years old, and then it does not matter who comes after me." It is indeed a fact that the salient points of the character take root during that early period of life and a little one of six who is hard-hearted, or untruthful, or spiteful, is exceedingly difficult to reform.

A wise mother must discriminate judiciously between natural juvenile failings and real naughtiness. There are so many acts and words which must not pass by unchecked, and yet do not deserve a censure or too much stress put upon them, and other offences which must never be overlooked.

All healthy, strong, vivacious children are restless, wilful, and mischievous in a greater or less degree. The boy of three years old, full of spirits, and the fois de vivre, often pitches his toys about in a reckless fashion very unsafe for the other denizens of the nursery. This, of course, must be stopped. At the same time, there is no naughtiness in the motive, and it need not call forth a punishment, unless the youngster has repeated the misdemeanor immediately after being cautioned.

Very imaginative children, on the other hand, will circumstantially narrate incidents which they declare they have seen, or as having happened to themselves, and it is not easy to make them grasp the fact that this is a falsehood. The best way is to take for granted that it is a fiction, and say, "Yes, dear, that is a nice little story you have made up. Now, shall mother read one, or can you make her up another?" In this way the child realizes that one may relate things not true, if they are honestly labelled as such.

Always avoid arousing the violence of a really passionate child. Remember that nine times out of ten it is the disposition of you, your husband, or some relative that has descended upon the little one, who is really more to be pitied than blamed for a certain age one can reason with a child in its quiet moments, and explain the danger and pain of these headstrong outbursts, and assist it to learn the hard lesson of self-control; but a tiny mite is too young for this, and, if possible, without giving way weakly, by a little tact and diverting the child's mind, the exhausting torrent of passion should be averted.

When very juvenile youngsters hold their breath in that alarming fashion in the middle of a cry, the quickest way to bring them round is to rub a wet sponge or flannel on the face; the unexpected shock speedily produces the desired effect. At the same time, this holding of the breath is hardly ever attended with danger, though it appears most appaling to anyone unaccustomed to children.

The great secret of management lies, however, after all, in discipline. Have a few rules and regulations as you possibly can, but have those kept to the letter. Don't excuse any deviation therefrom, but insist with quiet firmness on their fulfilment. The child disciplined to implicit obedience has learned the hardest and most important lesson of all.

About Precious Stones.

Agate promotes thirst, and if held in the mouth allays fever.

All precious stones are said to be purified by a bath in honey.

Amber is a cure for sore throats and all glandular swellings.

Amethyst banishes the desire for drink and promotes chastity.

Cat's-eye is considered by the Cingalese as a charm against witch-craft, and to be the abode of some genii.

Coral is a talisman against enchantments, thunder, witchcraft, and perils by flood and field.

Diamond produces somnambulism and promotes spiritual ecstasy.

Emerald promotes friendship and constancy of mind.

Garnet preserves health and joy.

Loadstone produces somnambulism, is dedicated to Mercury, and in metallurgy stands for quicksilver.

Moonstone has the virtue of making trees fruitful and of curing epilepsy.

Onyx contains in it an imprisoned devil, which rises at sunset and causes terror to the wearer, disturbing with ugly dreams.

Opal is fatal to love, and sows discord between the giver and receiver.

Sapphire produces somnambulism, and impels the wearer to all good works.

Topaz is favorable to hemorrhages, imparts strength, and promotes digestion.

She Stopped to Play with a Kitten.

An authority on the subject of nursing, in discussing the question of the age at which training should begin, declares that twenty-three is quite early enough. "I have known," she adds, "some small hospitals and nursing homes, take girls to train as young as seventeen; and, in one instance I remember, a girl who had been sent for a splint in a great hurry stopped on the way to play with a kitten and forgot all about what she was sent for."

Mrs. Green (who thinks of airing)—But is the girl honest? Can she be trusted?

Mrs. Brown (the girl's former mistress)—You need not be in the least alarmed. She is perfectly honest. All the time she was with me I never knew her to take a thing—not even my advice as to how things should be done.—Boston Transcript.

OUR YOUTHS DEPARTMENT

KEY TO THE BOX.

"What would you do"
said the little key,
To the task so wood box,
except for me?"

The task - wood box gave a gentle creak
To the little key; but it did not speak.

"I believe," said the key, "that I will hide
In the crack, down there by the chimney-side,

"Just so this proud old box may see How little it's worth except for me."

It was long, long afterward, in the crack
They found the key, and they brought it back,

And it said, as it chuckled and laughed to itself,
"Now I'll be goot to the box on the shelf."

But the little key stopped with a shiver and shock;
For there was a night new key in the lock.

And the old box said: "I am sorry, yes
But the place is filled, my poor little ke-"

AN ELEPHANT'S CUNNING.

He Knew How to Get Even With His Tormentor.

This is a good story of an elephant's intelligence. The animal in question was a mere baby when he was sent by the Indian prince to England as a present for Queen Victoria.

He was shipped as a deck passenger by one of the Indian mail steamers from Bombay, and as he had but attained the height of a well-grown calf, he was always most docile and tractable, he was permitted to have the run of the decks for an hour or two every morning when the state of the weather permitted. By the sailors he was dubbed the "Boa'un's mate," owing to the penchant he had for carefully picking up every loose coil of rope that he could find and then throwing it over the side, being, as Jack said, "as bad as a naval lieutenant for keeping the decks tidy."

Among other acquaintances that he formed was that of the ship's baker, whose address he soon discovered to be the place of origin of all the sweet dainties with which he was petted. Whenever he took his morning or afternoon morning call for something sweet for tiffin, and was generally regaled with a stale tart or piece of cake; but, upon calling one morning and extending his trunk, as usual, he found that a change had occurred to irritate the baker, and, instead of the cake, he received a blow on his trunk with the rolling pin.

The blow was not severe, but the Bo'sun mate, who had been busily tramping up the deck, where he took a post that would enable him to watch for his assailant. Before long he saw the baker leave his "shop," and mischief being his object rather than malice, he promptly marched down, and, with several vigorous sweeps of his trunk he swept all the shelves in the bakery clear, until loaves, tarts, cakes, patty pans and cake tins lay in confusion on the deck. This accomplished he toiled like any school boy, and was locked up in disgrace; but, upon the circumstances being known, the popular verdict was in his favor, and he was allowed his liberty as before.

Bo'sun marched down instanter to the baker, and never failed from that day to exact tribute, which was regularly paid, and from that time he and his opponent became fast friends.—Golden Penny.

"Growing Up" in Japan.

When a Japanese boy is three years old, he begins to wear the obi, a girdle; three inches wide, which confines the kimono, a loose sort of a dressing gown and the main part of the Japanese national dress, for both children and grown people. The putting on of the obi is the occasion of a family feast; and a very important personage it is, for it corresponds to pocket in an American boy's trousers. The front part of the kimono, above the obi, is also used as a pocket; and the long, wide sleeves, tied up at the lower end, make two very big ones.

When fifteen years old, the boy becomes of age, and a third family festival occurs. Another name is given him, and his hair is allowed to grow all over the head, like a mask. Previous to this time the head is shaved so as to allow the hair to grow only in spots or tufts, the place of the tufts varying up to the age of ten, when the crown only is shaved. At this festival the boy is made a majority in the manner of friends and relatives changes toward him, and while the day before he was still addressed as a child, now he is addressed in the ceremonious forme inquired by Japanese etiquette. The title of respect, san, is henceforth affixed to his name, even by those nearest and dearest. These titles, san, sama, always follow the name, and are never prefixed as with our "Mr." For example, a boy whose name is Kiyoshi will be called Kiyoshi-san. In his responses to the kind speeches made to him, the boy shows that he understands the new honors that have come upon him, and that he is now ready to apply himself to the serious business of life.—Ida T. Hedsett, in St. Nicholas.

THE WAY OF A MAID.

She was a maid of various strange
Contrarieties, mute,
Her hairless face a goodly range,
As woman's rule.

She said she love'd an eye of gray—
My own are blue.
I could I could in any way
Have changed their hue.

The sort of hair that pleased her best
Was brown, she said.
Which caused me oft supreme unrest—
My own is red!

Her taste in "nose" was aquiline;
Oh, cruel rub!
In vulgar parlance one like mine
Is termed a snub!

She liked a stately man and tall—
Alas! my fate
Has blessed me with a stature small,
Not five feet eight.

She doted on a figure slim;
Without a doubt,
I could not satisfy that whim—
For I am stout.

And, knowing this, how could I dare
(A lowlier lot
To ask that maid her life to share—
My wife to be?

And yet I did! egregious ass,
I must confess;
I popped the question—and, alas!
She answered, "Yes."

"BILLY" MACINTYRE.

William MacIntyre was a nice little boy; at least he looked a nice little boy when you first saw him, and he wasn't such a bad boy when you got to know him thoroughly: the drawback to him was that he took a lot of knowing just at the intermediary stage.

So, when I first made his acquaintance at the age of ten in his happy home in the Australian bush, I must say I regarded him as the kind of "Tommy" that dies young to slow music. The intermediary knowledge of him only began to dawn on me when, on an occasion on which he was helping the milk boy to persuade a refractory cow to put her head in the pail, I was an unobserved and unsuspected witness to what was then unpermost in his mind and in his language.

Up to that hour indeed, though I had seen many men and cities, I had never understood what swearing meant. Then I heard it as a classic in which perfect fluency was united to a careful choice of expression, which, under the greatest provocation, never repeated itself.

Week I dined at the home after the stockyard incident he had grown a good deal, and had reached the mature age of twelve. I then happened to be traveling in the same steamer with him His mother kept her cabin a good deal but Billy made me free to by being all over the ship. Some of us, and I was one, barred him altogether, but there was a contingent who were amused at the precocity of the child, and in spite of the protests of the senior passengers would have him in the smoking room to enjoy the edifying spectacle of seeing him smoke a cigarette and drink a sherry cobbler through a straw. It was just as he was engaged in such a delaisement so suitable for his years that our Bishop (we had a Bishop on board) unbent so far as for the first time to look into the smoking room.

What the Bishop said does not matter much; the words were probably well chosen, and the reproof was certainly severe and deserved. What Billy replied to the head of the flock amused us by its audacity, in spite of our feeling how entirely the Bishop was in the right. I can't set it down in full, and if I dared I could not give the languid drawl of the child. Hardly looking up from his straw, he invited his lordship to "go to h—."

And yet, a third time I had to do with Billy—Billy the unrepentant Billy the unfathomable; and this time he was a man of thirteen.

Tall for his age, as becomes a colonial, he regarded himself as ready and fitted at any time to undertake a man's work. A man of few words, he would answer an inquiry with laconic simplicity—without reverence certainly, but with sufficient civility, as of one equal to another. If I am asked how his education had been so neglected—being, as he was, the son (though not the only one) of educated parents—I should have to go into details quite foreign to my short story. Billy was the outcome of such education—or want of it—as his parents had bestowed on him. Born and bred fifty miles from the nearest possible school, and utterly neglected if judged by an English standard, (let us admit that once,) the habits of a 'possum, or the make and shape of a stock-whip handle, had caused him more anxiety than had ever the rule of three or the multiplication table. Thus for some time he had been doing a man's work, nor was he ever happier than when at a "muster" his "swag" was rolled up and stowed with those of the other men on the heavy wagon.

I knew about these things, for I was a neighbor. I can't say I was attracted by the child—rather the reverse; but I regarded it always as much more of his parents' fault than of his own that he was "born blind," nor had we ever had any passage of arms such as passed between him and the Bishop; for, however much my tongue longed and my fingers itched to administer a reproof, I always felt Billy was too old for it, and, besides, at that time I was not often brought into contact with him. This much has been necessary as explanatory of the incident that follows.

I was on my way to the coast, and the morning's run of twenty-five miles had considerably exhausted my too-fat horses. It was a hot, dusty day, and the big twenty-mile plain lay under the tropical sun in all the sweltering heat of midday in midsummer.

Both I and my horses knew we should find in the timbered country we were about to enter a well belonging to old MacIntyre, where unlimited water and well-earned rest awaited us.

And now the first trees of the forest country began to give us their scanty, intermitten, but welcome, shade. Slowly up the opposite sand ridge the weary horses dragged the light buckboard, the tires shining like silver as they emerged from the tawny sand. We were just within hearing of the well, though the hut prevented one from seeing it, when Billy's not cavity to be forgotten voice was borne along the still air in accents which would have made the Bishop's hair stand upright, and me, I must confess, perhaps only to smile, had they not contained, quite apart from the words employed, a tone which caused my heart to stand still.

That Billy was once more swearing it required no Webster to predicate, but I was in a pitch of such anguish as I hope I may never again know. Sure that there was something gravely wrong, I lashed the surprised horses. In a moment I was in sight of the well and there was poor Billy lying jammed under a coupling of the iron bar of the horse power, of which the connecting pin had half-severed his thigh. To leap from the buggy, to rush to his side, to remove him with all the reassuring and composed voice of the child. He began to explain—more than that, the uppermost thought in his mind was to excuse himself from any stigma that he had been clumsy or inefficient. He had come a cropper, but the Chinaman whose duty it was to keep the tank full was gone and the tank empty; he had taken his own horse—"

"Billy, old man," I interposed, "don't tell me about this; let us see what I can do for you."

I proceeded with such simple surgical treatment as I knew and as the resources of the place permitted. These were indeed simple. A needle and cotton belonging to the absent Chinaman was brought to hand, and with them I sewed up the awful wound. Billy suggested kerosene as an antiseptic, which, being the only medicament that there seemed to be in the hut, I applied it and bound the poor little leg in such cotton bandages as my own torn shirt would afford.

All the time the little hero was boiling over with the explanation that it was not his fault. He seemed to regard his leg as the leg of some one else, to be prescribed for and treated accordingly, but there was that which had to do it good. I would spare you any needlessly terrible description, but the blunt pin of the coupling rod had missed, as I learned afterward, the main artery by no more than a hair's breadth. Returning now to the cause of the accident, Billy explained that he had put the horse he was riding into the horse power; that, being unused to the work, it had given him a great deal of trouble; that at the moment when he had got it well started, as he was running behind, the pin of the coupling caught his trousers, and, dragging him below the rod, had on each revolution cut into his leg, while the horse had only just stopped of his own accord as I came up.

With the cool of the evening and with poor Billy stretched on the tray of my buggy, I began my slow journey to his home. What the motion must have meant to him I could only gather from my imagination and those tightly compressed lips, which uttered no groan during all those weary fourteen miles; each jolt seemed to vibrate through my nerves in the anxiety for the boy.

The rest is soon told, and what the end was is worth telling. Whatever I could do for the child by whatever rule he lived—he might grow up to be afterward, he became from the moment of our meeting at the well—my child. I gave up the business I had in hand, and staid to take my share of nursing him in his home.

Then followed pain fever and delirium, followed quickly on one another, and then symptoms worse than either, and I felt sure Billy's days were numbered.

It was Christmas Eve, and I had just lain down on my mattress on the floor, when, being still somewhat disturbed only by the noise of the bull-frog in the swamp, failed to relieve the sick charm of the latent heat which its walls were even then giving out. Presently a great silence fell on everything; the frog ceased to croak, and the night insects to "cheep"; the restless tossings of the little sufferer had ceased, and even his breathing could not be heard from where I was reclining. But as I rose and noiselessly approached his bed, wonder of wonders, he had not gone, his voice rang out loud and clear. To my fancy, in the stillness that was reigning around, it seemed something else than human, and awoke in me such feelings as the impassioned minor chords of a great funeral march would have done. The young, loved, and honored soldier is being taken to his resting place.

Without preface it commenced: "Our Father, which art in Heaven, hallowed be Thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done—" Here he hesitated; then he repeated: "Thy will be done, Thy—Thy—Thy—There, God, that must do!" And the great silence seemed even more intense than before he spoke.

My hand sought his heart, which was beating calmly and evenly; a soft moisture had taken the place on his skin of the fire that had been burning before. He was sleeping peacefully. In the Place where these things are ordered, it was decreed that Billy should not die this time.—Black and White.

BATTLE OF THE KEGS.

FIRST TIME THE TORPEDO WAS USED IN THE WORLD'S HISTORY.

Brushnell's Invention Did but Little Damage at That Time but It Can Well be Claimed as the Father of All Modern Submarine Warfare.

It is a long step in the development of invention from a tiny tea-kettle bursting on the grate with the force of its escaping steam, to the modern locomotive with its powerful driving wheels and train of freight cars. The improvements in submarine warfare have had quite as wide a range and as interesting a history from the primitive herring kegs charged with gunpowder to the modern submarine torpedo boat which dives under water, and carrying its deadly charge in any direction required, sends the mightiest man-of-war with all its turrets and barbettes spinning into the air.

And as the idea of the locomotive was first taken from the domestic kettle, so that of the torpedo was developed from the common beer or herring keg. The "Battle of the Kegs" is little known but one of the most decidedly interesting in American history. It was one in which the British were worsted after that famous ferrying party in which Washington crossed the Delaware, and was one of the most amusing and facetious incidents of the entire Revolutionary war. It was also the first real battle in which the torpedo ever figured, if a keg charged with gunpowder to be exploded by contact, and to destroy the vessel against which the British lay, could be called a torpedo. And yet such was the first torpedo and the father of all modern submarine warfare.

"The Battle of the Kegs" was fought Jan. 1, 1778, by the Delaware River, when four Britishers were killed and several others wounded. The Kegs would have been given a better account of themselves only that for some reason the British merchantmen that were anchored in the river moved closer to shore, otherwise the kegs would have played havoc to the British shipping. Whenever the kegs came in contact with any obstruction it promptly went skywards and the repetition of this then strange phenomenon, so terrified the British Admiral that he ordered some boats to be manned and a picked detachment of marines to go forward and suppress this strange uprising of water and stones and flames. As one witty Quaker, who viewed the scene from shore remarked that "The infernal regions must have opened their windows in order to enable the King's troops to escape from the merciless fire of Washington's sharpshooters." As soon as the detachment pulled their boats over the floating buoys to which the kegs were attached, they exploded, killing four men and wounding several others.

The Hon. Francis Hopkinson, the father of the author of "Hail Columbia" and of "Columbians all the Present Hour," and who was himself a national bard of no small fame, thus commemorated the incident in these stirring stanzas:

The soldiers flew, the sailors, too,
And scared almost to death, Sir,
Wore out their shoes and spread the news
Running till out of breath, Sir.

"Arise, Arise!" Sir Erskine cries:
The rebels, more's the pity,
Without a boat are all afloat
And ranged before the city."

The royal band now ready stand
All ranged in dread array, Sir,
With stomach stout to see it out
And make a bloody day, Sir.

Such feats did they perform that day,
Among those wicked kegs, Sir,
That fame to come, when they get home
They'll buy and boast and brag, Sir.

The unusually sober, and dignified Philadelphians were like Indians around a scalp after the day. When the alarm of the first explosion spread the whole city was in confusion. The British soldiers ran from their shelters to their assigned places of muster and both city and river was filled with such an appalling and unearthly noise that it really seemed as if the bottomless pit had burst its crusted roof and spat flame and sulphur into the skies. The surface of the water was picked as for some blocks or floating ice which, however, concealed the buoys, and such a thing as a possibility of explosive beneath the water was at the time never heard of as the ticker or the telegraph.

The kegs were charged with gunpowder and had a wad of wood separating the explosive and a charge of stones and scrap iron overhead which was four inches from the surface to insure concealment and at the same time to do real injury as well as make a grand spectacular demonstration when exploded. A spring lock set off this crude torpedo of 120 years ago. The inventor was one David Bushnell and the season why more havoc was not then accomplished, was, he says himself, because the pilot in the Delaware was imperfectly acquainted with that part of the river in which the shipping lay. These kegs being placed under cover of darkness were floated too far from the ships, the distance at night having greatly deceived Bushnell and his friends. They set them adrift with the ebb of the tide but much too distant, and they did not arrive until after being caught in the ice, thus exploding after the ships had raised anchor and in most cases in widely dispersed directions causing less damage than the revolutionary leaders intended.

However, Bushnell's invention was tried with greater effect against King George's Man-of-War Cerberus. While this vessel was lying at anchor some of the seamen observing a line towing astern, and thinking it a mere fishing line commenced vigorously hauling in, feeling confident that they had nothing of less dimensions than a big whale at the end of the hook and. When the sailors had about fifteen fathums of the line hauled in they were astonished to find that it was bugred up at regular intervals by little bits of sticks. The necessity of these devices in fishing were not apparent to the Englishmen but nothing daunted and with a hee-haw the British tars kept towing the anticipated whale. Suddenly the retrain of the seamen ceased and they found a machine which was much too heavy for two men to haul up. "It can not have been a whale," thought they, "though it may be the very devil himself," as they pulled the peculiar contrivance on board. It weighed upwards of five tons, and all hands were called to ret it upon deck. Commander Symonds who commanded the Cerberus was a little apprehensive that it was "another trick of those damned rebel Yankees" but nevertheless feeling it a rich find that was destined to be gazed on for ages in the British Museum, he, like a brave disciple of Drake and Cook, ordered the strange nugget to be examined with a mixture of feeling begotten half of fear and half of fatal curiosity. The whale instantly took breath, shooting a volume of flame and smoke into the Captain's face, killing three men and throwing a fourth into the water. One of the ship's boats was also blown from the davits. There was consternation upon the deck of the Cerberus and for two days at least the British sailors fluttered in quite as awful terror as had the the Philadelphians. Commodore Symonds at once sat down to solemnly write a heavy report to the British Admirality not to haul in any more whales "filled with that kind of combustible that burns though in the water."

Captain Symond's report concludes thus—"The mode these villains must have taken to get down the river was to shore, otherwise the kegs would have played havoc to the British shipping. Whenever the kegs came in contact with any obstruction it promptly went skywards and the repetition of this then strange phenomenon, so terrified the British Admiral that he ordered some boats to be manned and a picked detachment of marines to go forward and suppress this strange uprising of water and stones and flames. As one witty Quaker, who viewed the scene from shore remarked that "The infernal regions must have opened their windows in order to enable the King's troops to escape from the merciless fire of Washington's sharpshooters." As soon as the detachment pulled their boats over the floating buoys to which the kegs were attached, they exploded, killing four men and wounding several others.

Man Is Condensed Air.

Liebig, the greatest chemist of the century, writes: "Science has demonstrated the fact that man, the being who performs the greatest wonders, is formed of condensed air and solidified and liquid gases; that he lives upon condensed as well as uncondensed air; and that, by means of the same mysterious agent, he moves, or causes to be moved, the heaviest and most complex masses, and the heaviest quaint little egg-men to accomplish weights with the velocity of the wind.

"But the strangest part of the matter is that thousands of millions of these tabernacles of condensed air are destroying each other in pitched battles, using implements which are but other forms of condensed air, the material of which they themselves are formed or composed.

"Chemistry supplies the clearest proof that man is—in all appearances, at least—composed of materials identical with those which compose the structural being of the ox or the dog, or even the lowest animal in the scale of creation."

The Oldest City in the World.

Damascus is probably the oldest city in the world, and is estimated to be about 4,200 years old. It is supposed to have been founded by a great grandson of Noah, and for many centuries has been famous for its manufacture of jewelry, silks and swords. In the Middle Ages a Damascus sword was more highly prized than any other; but the Damascene method of tempering steel and the famous swords are no longer heard of. Next in age to Damascus comes next to Damascus amongst the oldest cities in the world, it having been a Jebusite city in the days of Abraham 3,900 years ago. Athens is the oldest city in Europe, being about 3,453 years old. Rome is about 2,700 years old, while that comes Marseilles, founded by a colony of Greeks when Rome was still a small village. London and Paris have neither of them been in existence two thousand years.

THE BEST FOR THE COUNTRY.

Let's hope for the best for the country, whatever the powers may be;
The birds still will sing in the blossoms the river dash on to the sea;
The storm feel the flush of the rainbow however the thunder may fall;
The same sun is shining in splendor—the same God over us all!

Let us hope for the best for the country; there is hope for the night and the day;
The ringing of bells in the cities and dells—sweet-sing for our sorrows away;
There are stars for the gloom of the midnight however the shadows may fall;
The world is in the light of the glory of the God that is over us all!

Let's hope for the best for the country; here's spring with her banners unfurled—
The breath of the showering blossoms that are the beauty of summer she left
The seed that climbs high to the harvest, and mantled voices that sing;
The world is in the light of the glory of the God that is over us all!

A PECULIAR CASE.

"Adams is a good man," said the chief of the detective bureau. "He is persistent, and has ideas of his own. We've about given up the Foster murder, but Adams still stays on it."

"Where did you get Adams?" asked the police marshal.

"Volunteered; said he'd just come out of the hospital after a spell of sickness—was a stranger, and had nothing to do; had been reading accounts of the murder, and wanted to try for the reward, so I let him go ahead. He claims to have two clues—a broken iron seal and a torn piece of coat lining. Here he is now."

A man of about thirty-five entered the room where the two officials were sitting.

"Anything new, Adams?" said the chief.

"Yes, sir," replied the newcomer, emphatically, "How could we have missed it. Look at that!"

Carefully he took from his pocket a large, white envelope, stamped and postmarked. It was partly torn, but this much of the superscription remained: Mr. William Dryden, Fairfi—

The chief examined it curiously, and then with a countenance suddenly—

"Why, Adams, we found a bushel of old envelopes in the dead lawyer's office. You haven't abandoned the seal clew?"

The chief winked merrily at the police marshal, but a moment later he bit his lip with vexation at his own stupidity.

"I have abandoned nothing, sir," replied Adams, with some heat. We have accounted for every person we know of who entered the lawyer's office the morning of the murder. We have missed this man Dryden. Examine the postmarks on the other, that of Fairfield of August fifteenth. Dryden received that envelope on the morning of the murder, came straight to the city and went to the office of the dead lawyer. How else would it have gotten there? Dryden killed him, and I am going to get Dryden.

He was on the train the following morning for the suburban town of Fairfield. During the long, sleepless hours of the night the image of Dryden had haunted him. He had tried his best to recollect who it was of that name he had once known, but at last he gave it up with a gesture of wearied resignation. Notwithstanding his loss of sleep he was feverishly awake. He was on the eve of solving the great murder mystery. There was no one to divide with him either the honor or the reward, not even Jackson, his envious brother detective. What better avocation could he have chosen, and at a time, when the future had seemed so hopeless?

It was but a short ride to Fairfield. Adams went at once to the little country hotel. As he registered he looked up at the portly landlord and casually asked,—

"Any city people here?"

"A few, sir. The Bradbury's, the Gillespies, old Mr. Dundon and young Mrs. Dryden, poor thing!"

"Why 'poor thing?'"

He tried to conceal his anxiety on the question, and felt he had failed. But the landlord was stupid and loquacious.

"Didn't ye hear of it, sir? Her husband left here the middle of August and has never been heard of since. Some thinks he's dead, but his wife don't. She only here once—went away at the time. She never leaves her room now, except to go to the post-office every day."

Adams was at the postoffice the next day at the time the morning mail was being distributed. He kept in the background, but he wished to see without being seen. Already he felt ashamed of himself. The idea of spying upon a broken-hearted woman and laying a trap for the one she loved was something more than merely distasteful to him.

She came at last, a fair, golden-haired woman. Even at a distance he knew it was she before he made an inquiry. As she drew near he retired behind an alcove in the postoffice and watched her with starting eyes. Slowly and with seeming weariness she left the delivery window after her fujile errand. In her face there was an expression of infinite sadness, yet in her eyes still flickered the light of hope. Adams stood there long after she had disappeared—stood there knowing well that his mission was at an end. Never through his efforts would her husband be captured. Short as was the time he had seen her, he knew that he loved her. In his heart he felt there had always been just such an image of a gentle face.

Out of the postoffice he drifted aimlessly. A crowd of people were coming from the railroad station, where a train had just arrived. Suddenly his face flushed in anger as he recognized among the number his fellow detective Jackson. In a sort of frenzy he rushed at him and grasped him tightly by both arms.

"What are you doing here?" he demanded.

"I came at the request—"

"Go back at once, I am going. There is nothing in it. Foster requested that the letter be returned to him immediately. That is the explanation of the envelope. I have seen Dryden and investigated everything. The man had nothing to do with the murder. Are you going?"

"Yes, but—"

himself with impatient rage. "I will join you at the station. A train will be due shortly. Stay there, or I'll—strangle you."

Jackson looked at him in amazement, hesitated a moment, and then turned and walked back to the station.

"Then go!" screamed Adams, beside enter the building, when he wheeled around and strode rapidly to the hotel. He would see her again—perhaps speak to her.

He entered the room which served the double purpose of an office and a sitting-room. There was no one there. He walked to the desk and the little dog-eared hotel register caught his eye. With an exclamation of impatience at not having thought of it before, he was at once engrossed in the register. Page after page he went back over the names with his fingers until suddenly he stopped as if checked by an electric shock. The little clock on the wall above him ticked off five minutes, but still he stood there with his eyes fixed upon and his finger at a name. The door of another room opened and he heard the voices of the landlord and Jackson. In an instant he had torn the leaf from the register and crushed it into his pocket.

Jackson entered the office and startled a little at seeing Adams. But in the latter's eye there was no longer any anger. Instead, he regarded the other detective calmly, but steadfastly. Jackson felt reassured.

"Adams, old man," he began, "what is the matter with you? I'm not here on your assignment; I'm here on another matter altogether. Show me up, landlord."

The two left the room and ascended the stairs. Adams waited awhile and then followed them. At the first landing he found himself in front of the hotel parlor, the door of which stood ajar. It was impossible not to have seen within, and he saw there the woman to whom his heart had gone out conversing with Jackson.

While one hour he was in his apartments in the city. He got out the broken seal and the torn piece of coat-lining and placed them upon a table. Then he sent for his physician.

The doctor found him in a state of excitement, bordering on fever. But there was nothing to be done that he had not been sent for to prescribe for his patient.

"Doctor," said Adams, endeavoring to control himself, "when you treated me for my wound at the hospital, was there any scar left after it had healed?"

"Why, how did you learn it?" the doctor broke out in astonishment. "It is impossible for you to see it yourself without artificial means."

"I understand that. Was there anything peculiar about the scar?"

"There was, Mr. Adams, although I have never mentioned it before. The scar is in the shape of a Maltese cross. But you must not think of it."

The doctor never knew how it happened, exactly, but he had hardly disclosed his secret when he found himself ushered out of the house and dismissed.

Adams went back to his room trembling, his forehead damp with perspiration.

"God!" he exclaimed, "what made me think of it! What made me examine it!"

Then he snatched up the detached broken arm of the seal and brought it down heavily upon a pad of paper. The impression formed was a Maltese cross.

"Here! Here is where it is," cried the districted man as his hand clutched the back of his head. He staggered back as if to fall in a faint when his distended eyes rested for a second on the piece of lining. A newly born unnatural energy seized him. With the piece of lining in his hand he bounded to his wardrobe and tore down his clothes like a madman. He was not long in finding it—an overcoat, with a part of the lining gone, which the piece matched and fitted. With clenched hands he raised himself to his full height and then fell upon the bed in a heap.

They found him there the next day at noon—Jackson and the lady from Fairfield. When they entered the room his eyes were like those of a man suddenly killed. At the sight of her, he arose slowly to confront them—the eagerness—then struggling recognition—and then the light of a joyful awakening. As the wife threw herself into the arms of her husband the veil lifted through which his memory had been shrouded, and he saw. In the fraction of a second it all came back to him: His visit to the lawyer who had tried to ruin him; the seizure of the papers which had been stolen from him; the murderous pistol in the hands of the other and his successful struggle to secure it; the cruel blow from behind with the broken seal; the renewed attack by the infuriated scoundrel; himself dazed and lapsing into unconsciousness, yet battling for his life, and finally the indistinct vision of a man beneath him, whose throat he grasped with tightly closed hands.

Often again the hideous vision came before him, but he told no man or no woman what he saw. For his conscience had acquitted him.—Short Stories.

NEW YORK FASHIONS.

Gowns of taffeta, foulard and light silks have now made their appearance and among them are some beautiful models. The foulards are so soft and light that they are bound to remain popular. This season's patterns are quite different from the last few years. Not so much blue and white is shown, and Oriental designs in soft tones on light grounds are more in favor than flowers.

A dainty dress for summer is made of striped green and white taffeta. The corsage is made of the silk opening over a yoke and vest of cream guipure. A small strap fastens the material at the top of the vest. Narrow velvet ribbon constitutes the trimming and the stock and girdle are of green velvet.

Are Women Neater Than Men?

Such was the question recently asked by a cynical old bachelor, who is a stern critic as to all that concerns a woman's attire.

This was the reply: "Women are endowed with strange vagaries, and, while extremely slatternly in many ways, are very neglectful in others. Even the smartest society girl is not so particular as to the freshness of her collar as the plain, every-day man of business. To change his linen at least once a day is a sort of religion with most men. With women it is different. They will inspect their collars after a day's hard wear, and decide that they will do again, not recognizing the fact that if any dandruff exists on the matter they should be consigned to the laundry without demur.

"Again, man is much more concerned as to the state of his foot-gear than a woman. The woman will gown herself handsomely, and forget to look at her shoes. She is willing to condone the loss of one or two buttons, and the consequent baggy appearance of her ankles. Like the peacock, she trusts to the gorgeousness of her plumage, and hopes that her skirts will cover all defects."

How the Eyesight Tires.

People speak of their eyes being tired, meaning that the retina or seeing portion of the eye is fatigued; but such is not the case, as the retina hardly ever gets tired. The fatigue is in the inner and outer muscles attached to the eyeball, and the muscle set by is gardening, and he varies it by commodation which surrounds the lens of the eye.

When a near object is to be looked at this muscle relaxes and allows the lens to flatten its surface, accompanied by sotory power. The inner and outer muscles are used in covering the eye on the object to be looked at, the inner one being especially used when a near object is looked at. It is in the three muscles mentioned that the fatigue is felt, and relief is secured temporarily by closing the eyes or gazing at far-distant objects. The usual indication of strain is a redness of the rim of the eyelid, betokening a congested state of the inner surface, accompanied by some pain. Sometimes this weariness indicates the need of glasses rightly adapted to the person, and in other cases the true remedy is to rub the eye and its surroundings as far as may be with the hand wet in cold water.

This Dog Eats Money.

A man at Narbonne, France, lost a 100-franc note in a funny way recently. He was in a restaurant and took the note from his pocket to pay for his dinner, when, as the note lay upon the table, a gust of wind flopped it into his plate.

Taking it out he placed it on the edge of the table to dry, whence it slipped to the floor.

Just then along came a hungry little poodle, and, sniffing at the note, he got a good whiff of the gravy, snatched up the paper and swallowed it. The owner of the note then sued the owner of the poodle for 100 francs, and the courts have decided that the latter must pay.

The New Libel Law.

Those smart individuals of every community whose prosperesities for "practical joking" are constantly incurring in them a desire to furnish their newspaper brethren with false news, to be exploited at the derision or defamation of the person who has been selected as a butt for their wit, had better beware.

Governor Voorhees has signed the Gledhill libel law, which provides that any person who wilfully states, delivers or transmits by any means whatever to a newspaper for publication therein, any libelous statement untrue in fact is declared guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $500 or by imprisonment at hard labor not exceeding two years, or both. No matter how careful and astute an editor may be, there are times when he has been imposed upon by persons who have seemed willing to sacrifice their realibility and good name with the apostle of the sanctuary if, in doing so, they might satisfy a grudge, serious or otherwise, against some unoffending party to the newspaper.

Heretofore, the newspaper has been obliged to face the irate one with the whole liability and responsibility for the steps, under this new law, which goes into effect July 4th, the person at the bottom of the affair will be in a position to face the music with prospective consequences serious enough to relieve it of all humorous phases.

Transformation of the City Park.

The transformation of the city park, under the direction of the Woman's Town Improvement Association, from a waste of land distinguished by weeds and tall grass, whose rank growth was interrupted only by a couple of footpaths a year ago, into its present beautiful landscape view, is a sight that makes glad the heart of every citizen who takes pride in the city.

The women whose ingenuity and indefatigable efforts planned and carried out the Fete Champetre last summer may now look at this public breathing spot and say well done! For, indeed, they have accomplished that which had long been regarded as an ideal that seemed never to be a realization. With its smooth lawn of verdant, its graveled paths in strait and curved lines, its overhanging, shady boughs of chestnuts, hickorys and oaks, its pretty and thriving flower beds, in the midst of all of which sets invitingly for a cool and pleasant rest numerous benches, it is now a practical ornament to Plainfield.

Now that it has been put in such a delightful condition by the women of progress let us hope that it may never again retrogrede into the disgraceful condition that the public-spirited fair ones found it in. It is an object worthy of the care and expense of the city itself, and when the time is opportune for a small appropriation to be made to maintain it in its present condition, the city fathers should not be parsimonious in the matter.

Early Closing of Stores.

In view of the fact that the profits on the goods sold in the local stores do not exceed, and usually do not equal, the amount of bills for illumination after 7 o'clock, and the additional consideration that by uniform action of all the merchants there is a guarantee that no trade will not be diverted to a rival, there ought not to be any good reason for the failure of the Board of Trade movement for the early closing of stores.

Leaving out all question of sentiment or feeling for the welfare and pleasure of the clerks who might benefit by the success of the movement, it seems, under the above condition of things, that the early closing idea is a good business proposition at any rate. The trading which is done in the stores after 7 o'clock now would certainly be added to the volume of business transacted previous to that hour if people knew the stores were to close, and that would not incur any loss. On the contrary it would be a very gratifying change to all parties concerned in business.

The early closing movement ought to succeed.

The hundreds of fishing and game clubs which have come into existence attest the increasing devotion of Americans to manly outdoor sports. It is stated that there are more than a thousand of these between the Atlantic and the Mississippi.

Man Manufacturing.

The United States leads the world in the variety and excellence of its manufactures, but the most marvelous of its products out of raw material is that of man. The New York Journal in a recent leader anent the sneer of a Berlin "reptile" organ, "America with its mishmash of waste pieces of nationality * * * suddenly becomes an Anglo-Saxon race," has some pungent and vigorous comments:

The republic is a gigantic amalgamating mill. Persons like the Berlin editor, peasants, impoverished wretches for whom there is no room in Europe, who shame by making, come here and are made over into men. Citizens are manufactured out of colloquies and the children of intellectual and physical runts from the old world become bright, active, well nourished Americans. That is the glory of this republic. Liberty means opportunity for the common man—the man who does the work which is taxed and looked down to within an inch of his life in the land of his ancestors. A human being can be one here instead of servant or a beast of burden for the nobility and gentry.

Anglo-Saxon genius and institutions specially under their republican form can alone recreate the most diverse elements into the same mold. No other race has shown this power of regenerating the raw material of other nationalities. Not only does the foreigner transplanted under these fresh conditions flower into fullness of manhood, but he becomes completely saturated with the spirit of his new habitat, more American in many cases than the American born. The English speaking race subjugates all others to its intellectual and spiritual sway. But in the American alembic this wonderful chemical force does its best work.

Eccentricities of Patriotism.

The enthusiasm which emblazons itself with the colors of Old Glory at this juncture is intensely human, even if some of its vagaries provoke a smile now and then. Men and women are proud to sport emblematic flags and ribbons, and we even see the shirt waists of the fair sex arrayed with red, white and blue. Enterprising shopkeepers display nightdresses variegated with such colors to bring pleasant dreams, as did the people of Du Maurier's novel, and table napery is edged with the patriotic hues. The candy makers hide their sweets in imitation cartridge boxes and warships, and the fashionable florists construct their most popular bouquets with flowers deftly arranged in the belligerent flag symphony of sight and odor, if such a bull can be tolerated. One of the most interesting and witty of these extravagancies is that shown in the barber's pole which adds the blue to the red and white stripes and spangles it with stars. This may be taken to symbolize the fact that we mean not only to "take the Spaniard by the beard," as was the favorite boast of that heroic old sea king and Spaniard hater, Sir Francis Drake, but to shave him bare-the with a very keen razor as well as to give him a good lathering. Don Quixote of today, who has all of the old knight's pompous absurdity without his nobility of temper, has invited such "barberism" as a quid for his quo. Signs of exuberant patriotism are inspiring even if eccentric. Genuine effervescence is never quite stopped by the rim of the glass.

A poor little girl, unhappy enough to be born a cripple, lately poisoned herself because her childish acquaintances made life unendurable by taunting her with her lameness. They called her "limpy" and "cripple." They shouted after her when she appeared on the street until she could bear it no longer. The spirit, known by mere mongrel children who thus drove one of their playmates to death was fiendish, for none but a fiend can deliberately torment that which is helpless. It is the same spirit as that which tortures dogs and cats and dumb animals. If the offenders had been taught by their parents and teachers to be merciful and kind to misfortune, they would not have thought of teasing their lame comrade. It was the fault of the parents and teachers more than of the young ones themselves. Worst of all, it is not only children who torment those who are down. Among the lower and more ignorant classes of grown people it is the common habit to sneer and enjoy a wretched, contemptible merriment at the disgrace, loss or misfortune of acquaintances. Heaven have mercy on those who indulge such mirth! It is an infallible sign of ignorance and an evil, undeveloped mind.

The most enlightened diplomacy is now that which takes the whole people of a country into the confidence of their statesmen and shows them every step of the policy which is thought best and wisest for the nation. It was hoodwinking the ignorant masses of Spain and making them believe constantly that Cuba was being conquered which has brought the kingdom to its present state. The American government can trust its own people, and it should lead off in the new national policy of open dealing. Diplomatic mystery belongs along with the secret underground passageway and the murder vaults of the middle ages.

Before the war began there was greater activity among certain branches of American manufactures than had ever been known before, notably the iron trade. A number of orders had been sent in from Japan and Egypt for locomotive engines, while the Russians had called for 800 miles of steel railway tracks for Siberia

His a Queer Look.

Not long since many millionaired Hetty Green applied the name of "legal buzzards" to the lawyers and said all her troubles had been caused by them. Hetty wronged the profession. There are no more conscientious, high minded men anywhere than are to be found among the lawyers as a class. They are as much opposed to extortion or swindling in any shape or form as reputable physicians are to quacks. "Legal buzzards" is awfully suggestive as well as sweeping. Take it back, Hetty!

And yet what are we to conclude when in all the large cities there are lawyers so called, members of the bar and of legal societies, who for a steady thing watch the death records and almost before a deceased person has been buried thrust their business cards impudently under the noses of the surviving relatives, trying to drum up business? We submit whether this practice would not naturally suggest in an imaginative mind the comparison to a carrion crow. It is certain that the best class of lawyers have too much sense and delicacy to do a thing like this, but when a man or woman who has just lost the dearest member of his or her family opens the mail on the day after the card of a lawyer who wants to settle up the deceased's affairs what will that man or woman conclude concerning all lawyers? It is like an undertaker who tries to obtain a corpse for burial before the life is out of it.

There is always a place to draw the line, and we think the legal profession should draw it hard and quick on lawyers who lie in wait to pounce upon the remains of the newly dead.

Taxation or Borrowing.

Matthew Marshall of the New York Sun is certain we are able to pay for this war as we go along without the government issuing any bonds to raise money. The war will not cost more than $25,000,000 a month at most, and Mr. Marshall says the taxation necessary to raise that would not be onerous on 75,000,000 people. He writes:

On some accounts it would not be a bad thing if the opponents of a bond issue were to prevail and if taxation and not borrowing should be the method employed for raising money for the present emergency. That taxation could, if necessary, be made sufficient for the purpose is indisputable. Thirty years ago, when the country's population was less than half as great as it is now, the government's net revenue was between $400,000,000 and $500,000,000 annually, whereas for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, it was not $245,000,000. Hence half the taxation per head of 1898 and the years immediately following it would give us an ordinary revenue of from $600,000,000 to $700,000,000; an equal rate would add not less than $400,000,000 to the present revenue and don bling that sum would provide us with a sum beyond the most extravagant estimates of our needs. Imagine a taxation of $12.75 per head of a population of 38,000,000 in 1898 yielding $500,000,000, and taxes of $20 per head of a population of 75,000,000 would yield over $1,400,000,000. One argument in favor of taxation in preference to borrowing has not been considered sufficiently if at all, and that is the demonstration of financial strength which our resort exclusively to taxation would make to the world. Nothing would so fill that to have money enough, materials enough and mechanical ingenuity enough to equip with any or all of them to see or on land. It would seem to show them that we also have ample pecuniary means to do it.

Any European country, even though it is prejudiced in favor of Spain, must admit the magnanimity and generosity which Admiral Dewey exercised at Manilla. The effect of the fight in Manilla bay was to leave the city entirely at his mercy. Indeed he telegraphed to the department at Washington, "I can take Manilla at any time." He was unwilling, however, to precipitate conditions which he knew would follow the capture. Such capture would have been the signal for the wildest demonstrations on the part of the insurgents. They are only half civilized, anyhow, many of them, and they would have run amuck in the streets of Manilla, looting, butchering, torturing not only Spaniards, but the European residents. The admiral had troops enough to not only hold the Spaniards but also the insurgents themselves in check, he could have held Manilla in an orderly way without any attendant scenes of robbery and murder. But he did not; therefore he refrained. Dewey showed himself not only a brilliant naval commander, but a humane man.

Indications are that before the war with Spain is ended some of the nations of Europe will be drawn into it in one way or another. If this should be the case, it will be the beginning of the great European war for which mankind has been looking during a generation. Perhaps it will be the world's last great war, and after that the nations will dwell with one another in universal peace.

There is one way in which patriotic women can help their country, even though they cannot go to war as can be Red Cross nurses. They can follow the example of Helen Gould and give money for the prosecution of the war.

The war has made the woolen and cotton mills boom. Among the first orders given by the United States at the beginning of hostilities was one for 3,000,000 yards of cotton goods and 2,625,000 yards of woolen fabrics.

What other country than ours on the face of this earth could have raised and equipped an army of 100,000 men, volunteers at that, in less than a month?

Spain's navy is about two-thirds as large as ours, but in superiority of our fighting seamen over hers we are at least 16 to 1.

English the Coming Language.

If the number of persons habitually using and writing it are any test of the growing importance and popularity of a language, then English is at the head of all tongues spoken on this globe today. It is the language of practical force, power, push and advancement in material things. French was formerly universally the language of diplomacy, because in French one can say so much and mean nothing at all. English is the language in which the commercial and industrial business of the nations is transacted because English says just what it means. Even in the Spanish-American republics the foreign mails contain more letters addressed in the modern Anglo-Saxon than in any other tongue.

Civilized languages, those written, spoken and printed at the present day, number altogether 12. They are used by half a billion people. Of these fully one-quarter speak English as their native tongue. These are, however, less than half of the number who habitually employ it to communicate with their fellow men. Two-thirds of all the world's letters are written and addressed in English. It is the people of the English speaking countries who write the letters and do the business of the world. All the Spanish-American republics put together, those of Central and South America and Mexico included, send in a year fewer letters than the colonies of faraway Australia do.

We only mention these little facts by way of reminding the American people, especially those who wish to write for newspapers, of the weight of responsibility that rests on them in the matter of learning how to use their glorious English language correctly.

Strength of Woman.

Charles Reade went so far as to declare that women were physically stronger than men in some of their muscles, especially those of the back and loins, if they would only train and use their bodies. The exploits of Charmion, a young French girl now giving acrobatic performances in this country, go far to prove that women may certainly be as strong as most men if they will undergo athletic training. Charmion is only 19 years old, weighing 117 pounds. Lately in a test she compared her actual strength with that of one most powerful man of the time. They were Sandow, the professional athlete; Lovering, the former college champion strong man, and Godfrey, the strongest man among Bowdoin students. All these are men of mature age and fully matured powers. A trial of strength of lungs, legs, back and arms was made. The girl, without any previous special training, proved herself to have greater lung power than Godfrey, while she was 9 points behind Lovering and only 33 points behind the great Sandow himself. Again this mere girl, who had never prided herself especially on mere dead strength, showed that she had nearly half as much leg and back power as Sandow.

Of the athletic training of women in general Charmion says, quite truthfully in the New York Journal, "If women of the present day would pursue physical exercises diligently, the women of successive generations would be models of physical development, not to say beauty."

The London Times is usually considered, not altogether without just ground, as mildly hostile to the United States. These words from a recent editorial in its columns are therefore all the more weighty: "As the American people have been stirred to interference in Cuba by feelings which again and again have prompted serious action in this country (England), so they will carry on the contest in the admirable spirit that had troops enough to not only hold the Spaniards but also the insurgents themselves in check, he could have held Manilla in an orderly way without any attendant scenes of robbery and murder. But he did not; therefore he refrained. Dewey showed himself not only a brilliant naval commander, but a humane man.

Indications are that before the war with Spain is ended some of the nations of Europe will be drawn into it in one way or another. If this should be the case, it will be the beginning of the great European war for which mankind has been looking during a generation. CALLANT CHIEF GRANT THERE.

He Bravely Stopped a Runaway Horse This Morning.

An exciting runaway occurred Monday morning at the corner of Park avenue and Second street. The horse and butcher wagon owned by J. Mintz, a local cattle dealer, was left standing on Second street close to Edward Brown's butcher shop, when suddenly he started to run away. The horse made a dash across Park avenue and struck the sidewalk in front of the City Hotel, driving two men into the hotel to escape injury. The animal whirled around and started through Park avenue toward Front street. When near the ladies' entrance to the hotel Chief Grant distinguished himself by gallantly stopping the horse in his flight. The Chief quickly brought the horse to full stop, thus preventing any further damage.

Dislocated His shoulder.

James Sayer, aged 33 years, unmarried, and an employee at C. V. D. Cole's livery stable on East Second street, fell from a ladder at the stable Monday afternoon and dislocated a shoulder. He was removed to the hospital where he is doing as well as can be expected. The injury is not serious and in the course of a short time Sayer will be out again.

The distinguished chemist, T. A. Slocum, of New York City, demonstrating his discovery of a reliable cure for Consumption Pulmonary Tuberculosis), bronchial, lung and chest troubles, stubborn coughs, catarrhal affections general decline and weakness, loss of flesh, and all conditions of wasting away, will send THREE FREE BOTTLES (all different) of his New Discoveries to any afflicted reader of this paper writing for them.

His "New Scientific Treatment" has cured thousands permanently by its timely use, and he considers it a simple professional duty to suffering humanity to donate a trail of his infallible cure.

Science daily develops new wonders, and this great chemist, patiently experimenting for years, has produced results as beneficial to humanity as can be claimed by any modern genius. His assertion that lung troubles and consumption are curable in any climate is proven by "heartfelt letters of gratitude," filed in his American and European laboratories in thousands from those cured in all parts of the world.

The cure is Consumption, uninterrupted, means speedy and certain death.

Simply write to T. A. Slocum, M. C., 98 Pine street, New York, giving your P. office and express address, and the free medicine will be promptly sent direct from his laboratory.

Sufferers should take instant advantage of his generous proposition.

TURTONS FINALLY WIN.

COMPLICATED CASE ENDED IN COURT OF ERRORS AND APPEALS.

Originally it Was a Will Contest, But by the Death of John Young It Became a Suit to Recover Certain Moneys.

The Court of Errors and Appeals yesterday, by a vote of ten to one, sustained the decree of the Court of Chancery in the case of Waters B. Parrot, administrator, against James Craig, executor. This case in its different branches has now been in the courts for three or four years. Originally it was a will contest. Mrs. Catharine Craig, a few hours before her death, called Mrs. Turton to her bedside and dictated two or three lines, which Mrs. Turton wrote on a sheet of letter paper. They were as follows:

"All I have and possess I give to Morgan Turton and his wife to do with as they please." Mrs. Craig signed the paper, and two nighbors were called in to witness it. The paper was executed Sunday. After Mrs. Craig's death, her nephew, John Young, in whose favor she had made two wills not long before, began a contest, R. V. Lindabury reresenting him, and Craig A. Marsh representing the Turtons. The court held that the paper written by Mrs. Turton and signed by Mrs. Craig was a good will and revoked the earlier wills.

During Mrs. Craig's life time she was in the habit of handing moneys to Mr. Young, which moneys Young deposited in a savings bank in his name as trustee for Catharine Craig. He had deposited in this way about $3,500, but had drawn it all out and spent it on himself in the life-time of Catharine Craig. After the Turtons won in the will case, they demanded of Young that he account for the money which he had spent. Young replied that Mrs. Craig had made him presents of these moneys as she had a right to. Young died suddenly and the Turtons then brought suit in the Court of Chancery against his executor. This suit was brought by Mr. Marsh for the Turtons and defended by Charles H. Hartshorne, Esq., of Jersey City for the Young estate. The Turtons were successful in the Court of Chancery, and the Young estate took an appeal to the Court of last resort. The appeal was decided yesterday in favor of the Turtons, with costs.

SUCCESSFUL BIRTHDAY PARTY GIVEN AT GRACE M. E. CHURCH.

A Pleasing Programme, Divided into Four Parts to Represent the Seasons, Was Presented—Those Who Had Charge

The members of the Epworth League and the Ladies' Aid Society of the Grace M. E. church gave a birthday sociable Monday, followed by an ice cream and cake sale. Each person attending was expected to bring in an envelope provided for the purpose a sum of money equivalent to the number of years old he or she was, and deposit it with Miss Della Voehl at the proper time.

This scheme to raise money was extremely light on the young, but as a person's age increased the contribution grew larger. The proceeds went towards the interest fund.

Preceding the sale of refreshments, a programme was presented. It was divided into four parts, one for each season of the year. First, of course, came spring. Dyckman Winckler opened this part of the programme with a violin solo, accompanied by Miss Alice Carroll, entitled "Spring Song." Three poems, one upon each of the months of March, April and May were then read by Miss Lizzie Hoagland. After the reading of the poem for each month the people having a birthday in that month came forward and deposited their bags of money. The bags were received by Miss Vohel and turned over to M. Charles and Lewis A. Hummer, who counted their contents.

The next part, "Summer," was opened with a selection by a chorus composed of Miss Grace Carroll, Miss Alice Carroll, Miss Schuck, Mrs. Wisezier and Mrs. Most. The selections were read by Mrs. Taft. Louis Hummer rendered a piano solo as an introductory to autumn, and the poems were read by Dr. H. K. Carroll. A very pretty contralto solo by Miss Grace Carroll opened the last part of the programme, and John Steiner read the winter selections. After the last selection the choir sang "Jingle Bells" and the audience joined in the chorus.

After all had delivered up their bags of coin, it was found that most of the birthdays came in January, nineteen of them, with a total amount of $6 33, while September ended the list with 79 cents and only seven birthdays. The committee in charge of the ice cream and cake consisted of Mrs. J. H. Carney, chairman; Miss Margaret Schuck, Mrs. J. E. Winckler, Miss Grace Clark, Mrs. Edward Sebring, Miss Carrie Tingley and Mrs. Andrew Lutkins. Altogether about $42 was realized from the birthday bags, and quite a little more from the sale of cake and cream.

COUNTY JAIL WARDEN IS CHARLES W. DODD.

The Plainfielder Assumed Office Tuesday Noon.

SUPREME COURT DECISION.

DECLARES THAT VETERANS' RIGHTS ACT IS UNCONSTITUTIONAL.

Contention Made by Craig A. Marsh Is Upheld by the High Court—Mr. Blore Accepted the Decision and Is Now Out of Office—Freeholder Hubbard Is Pleased Over the Decision.

Captain J. Frank Hubbard, the director of the Union County Board of Freeholders, and Charles W. Dodd, the newly-elected warden, were expressions of great satisfaction Tuesday morning. The Supreme Court Monday decided the contest over the wardenship of the jail in favor of Mr. Dodd. The director has taken a keen personal interest in this case from the beginning. He knew how efficient an officer Mr. Dodd had been during his former term as warden, and he believed that the attitude of Warden Blore in denying the authority of the Board of Freeholders and holding possession of the jail by force, was wholly unwarranted.

"Warden Blore refused to deliver the jail to Mr. Dodd or to recognize the authority of the Board of Freeholders to dismiss him from office, and in so doing relied upon what is called the Veteran Act, passed by the Legislature last winter. This act declared that honorably discharged Union soldiers should be entitled to preference in appointment to office and should not be removed from office except for cause and then after a regular trial. Mr. Blore in refusing to give up the office said that he had been advised by his lawyer, Mr. Lindabury, that the Board could not remove him and he was entitled to hold the office continuously as long as he did his duty.

Mr. Dodd obtained an opinion to the contrary from Craig A. Marsh, whom he engaged to bring suit in the Supreme Court to turn Mr. Blore out of the office and obtain possession of the jail. The case was heard in the main court at Trenton on June 10th and was decided Monday, the court declaring the Veteran Act of 1897 to be unconstitutional.

The ground of the decision is that the title of the act is confined to veterans in the public service of State of New Jersey, whereas the body of the act attempts to extend its provisions to veterans in the service of cities, towns and counties.

Mr. Blore had the papers served upon him Tuesday and his counsel agreed to give up possession of the office at noon.

EARLY CLOSING A SUCCESS.

Local Merchants Will shut Up Shop at 7 P. M. After July 4th.

Horace Sherwin, H. Schwed and F. T. Woodhull, the committee from the Board of Trade who have the early closing of the stores in charge, met Tuesday after having interviewed the merchants and gave their report.

All the dry goods men, the gentlemen's furnishing stores and the clothiers have agreed to close at 7 o'clock through the summer, beginning July 5th, and lasting until Sept. 1st, Saturdays excepted.

About the War.

The present war has made a demand for a book furnishing details of the two navies and the parts of the world that have been brought into notice through the different campaigns. Mast, Crowell & Kirkpatrick have issued as the July number of the Farm and Fireside Library a book that just answers the need. It is called "The Handy War Book," and is prepared by Lieutenant E. Hannaford.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease, and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address,

DR. YERKES' TRIBUTE TO COL. CASE'S LIFE.

Solemn and Impressive Services at the Dead Man's Bier.

ELABORATE FLORAL PIECES.

LARGE DELEGATION OF GOVERNMENT OFFICIALS PRESENT.

Dr. Yerkes Spoke Consoling Words to the Bereaved and Drew an Inspiration for the Living From the Exemplary Life That the Deceased Had Lived—Baptist Deacons as Pallbearers.

Solemn and impressive were the funeral services held Monday afternoon in honor of Colonel Rufus King Case at his late residence on East Ninth street. The beautiful June day, the scent of many flowers, the presence of many warm friends and the tender words of song, prayer and address, united in paying the last honors to a man whom all Plainfield held in highest respect, and who will be sadly missed in social and church circles, as well as in the government office where he served so efficiently and so faithfully for over thirty years.

The service began at 5 o'clock and was conducted by Rev. Dr. D. J Yerkes, in whose church, the First Baptist, Colonel Case was for many years an honored member and an earnest worker. Dr. Yerkes read a selection from the Scriptures, which included comforting words concerning death, the future life and God's care for His own. A choir composed of Mrs. H. E. Rider, Miss Blair, Miss Needham, Miss Nancy Randolph, L. H. Biglow, Jr., Chas. W. McCutchen and B. T. Barnes, then sang with much feeling the beautiful hymn beginning "Go to the grave in all thy glorious prime." This was followed by an earnest, sympathetic address by Dr. Yerkes. The text was that beautiful word of the Lord Christ's: "Be of Good Cheer; I Have Overcome the World."

The doctor gave a brief account of the important events in Colonel Case's life, his enlistment at the age of 21, promotions for meritorious conduct, and his long service in his responsible government position. He united with the church at the age of 14, kept the faith amid the temptations of military life, and entered upon religious work with new zeal at the close of the war, becoming finally superintendent of the Sunday-school and deacon of the church. His character was well summed up by his pastor and friend, who described him as of discreet judgment, brave but modest, profoundly conscientious, of firm principle and religious belief, steadfast to duty, devoted to the service of his Master—a man whose life was a definition of consecration. The doctor spoke warmly of the influence of such a life, and then closed with a few tender words of comfort and cheer addressed to the bereaved family.

The floral tributes were numerous and beautiful. A large cross, with a pillow at the foot, was the gift of Col. Case's late associates in the quartermaster's department. Other beautiful pillows were from his children and from Winfield Scott Post, No. 73, G. A. R., of which he was a member. A floral harp came from the Exempt Firemen's Association, and an exquisite broken column of flowers from the officers and teachers of the First Baptist Sunday-school. There were also a large number of floral offerings from relatives and friends.

The following officials from the Quartermaster's Department in New York, where Col. Case was Chief Clerk, were present: General B. M. Batchelder, Quartermaster General, U. S. A., retired; Captain C. M. Littell, Assistant Quartermaster; C. Bollinger, Chief Clerk, property branch; Major W. Ewald, Chief Clerk, transportation branch; Thomas Ryan, transportation branch; George F. Otis, J. Pressler, E. W. McLaughlin, Geo. W. F. Randolph, M. B. Lovejoy, B. D. Creighton, T. E. Brown, C. B. Brown, J. B. Hodges, T. J. Stedman, property branch; Capt. Alex Sutorius, A. Roble, store keeper; J. Peacock, transportation branch; George F. Otis, J. Pressler, E. W. McLaughlin, Geo. W. F. Randolph, M. B. Lovejoy, B. D. Creighton, T. E. Brown, C. B. Brown, J. B. Hodges, T. J. Stedman, property branch; Capt. Alex Sutorius, A. Roble, store keeper; J. Peacock, property branch.

Interment was made at Hillside cemetery, Tuesday. The bearers were L. W. Serrell, Sr., Dr. J. B. Probasco, George F. Brown, E. L. Bonny, George Batchelor and L. W. Randolph.

School Buildings to be Repaired

A special meeting of the Plainfield Board of Education was held last Monday. It was decided to have the walls in the Stillman and Franklin buildings stippled and tinted. The contract for the work in the Stillman building was awarded to Woolston & Buckle for $123, and for that in the Franklin building to E. E. Marshall & Co., for $145. New desks were ordered for the Lincoln, Washington and Irving buildings.

PREPARED THE BOYS FOR COLLEGE LIFE.

Closing Exercises of Prof. Leal's Preparatory School.

THE WINNERS ANNOUNCED.

WHERE SEVERAL OF THE GRADUATES WILL CONTINUE STUDY.

The Exercises Held in the Casino Monday Night—Eight Creditable Essays Presented—Cultured Audience Was Present, and Bestowed Liberal Applause on the Young Men Who Were Honored in the Class

The closing exercises of John Leal's school for young men and boys were held last Monday in the Casino. They were attended by a fashionable audience who frequently gave hearty approbation of the achievements of the young men who furnished the programme.

The Casino was patriotically decorated with American, English and flags of other nations, while a pretty display of palms, flowers and flags formed the decorations on the platform. In the arrangement of flags the American flag was given the preference and the scene was most attractive.

Seated on the platform as guests of honor were Rev. Dr. W. R. Richards, Corporation Counsel Craig A. Marsh and William A. Wadsworth. Mr. Leal also occupied a seat on the platform and announced the several numbers on the programme. Interspersing the programme, which was composed of selections for the senior contest, there were selections of music by Rogers' orchestra.

Each essay was accorded applause on the part of the enthusiastic audience. The judges were Rev. A. C. Nickerson, pastor of the Unitarian church, A. V. D. Honeyman, a member of the Borough Board of Education, and Dr. B. VanD. Hedges, of this city.

After listening to the various essays, eight in number, the judges decided that Thomas Lewis Thomas, of Dunellen, was entitled to first prize, and George Huntington Richards, of this city, second prize. The subject selected by the former was "Fort Wagoner," by Stansbury, while "The Fall of Pemberton Mill," by Phelps, was the subject of Mr. Richards' essay. Both young men acquitted themselves in a meritorious manner.

The other contestants and their subjects were as follows: "The Slave Who Saved St. Michael's," Stansbury, Aubrey Congdon Crowe; "The Traitor's Deathbed," Lippard, Howard Emery Bushnell; "The Greatness of Stonewall Jackson," Hoge, William Austin Townsend; "Christmas Day at the Workhouse," Dagonet, Orville Theodore Waring; "The General's Client," adapted Owen Howard Fleming; "The Southern Negro," Grady, Henry Way Leal.

Those who did not receive prizes were given honorable mention.

At the close of the programme Rev. G. Kennedy Newell, pastor of Hope chapel, announced the prize winners in the junior contest which took place yesterday morning at Mr. Leal's school. The first prize was awarded to Dudley Paul Babcock, while Samuel Wickham Corwin won the second prize. Mr. Leal announced the winners of the contest in the evening, and each winner was given a hearty handshake and a word of congratulation when the prize was awarded. In conclusion Mr. Leal addressed a few words of congratulation to the graduating class composed of Irving Wayne Clark, Charles Griffith Davis, Walter Lester Glenney, Paul Wellington Kimball, Henry Way Leal, Willard Wadsworth and Orville Theodore Waring.

Mr. Leal then announced where the graduates would go next year. Irving Clark and Paul Kimball will continue their studies at Princeton, Charles Davis and Orville Waring will go to the University of Pennsylvania, Walter Glenney will go to Columbia, Henry Leal will go to Yale, while Willard Wadsworth will go to Harvard.

At the conclusion of these announcements, the members of the crowd congregated in one corner of the hall and gave the school yell several times. There were not many that could understand it, but it was enjoyed nevertheless.

In the senior contest the first prize was $10 and the second $5. The first prize in the junior contest was $5 and the second $2 50.

Death of J. P. Townsend

The Plainfield friends of J. P. Townsend, of Philadelphia, will be pained to learn of his death which occurred Saturday in that city. The funeral took place today and the body was taken to Albany for interment.

WHILE YET IN YOUTH FEAR NOT A HARD TASK.

Common Sense Sermon of Dr. Schenk to Graduates.

JEREMIAH'S GOOD ADVICE.

LIFE IS NOT ALL ACTIVITY; MEDITATION FIGURES LARGELY IN IT.

Both Qualities are Necessary to the Proper Development of Youth—Work Hurts None, It's Worry That Kills—Yoke of Religion Needed.

Thursday evening of this week fourteen young people are to graduate from the North Plainfield Public School, and take their part in the busy world. Preliminary to their going it was very fitting that Rev. Cornelius Schenck, Ph.D., of the Trinity Reformed church, should address the members of the class in his church Sunday night. Owing to the inclement weather only ten of the graduates ventured out. Those who were present heard some excellent advice which was applicable to all.

The text was taken from the Lamentations of Jeremiah, 31 chapter, 27th verse: "It is a good thing for a young man to bear his yoke in his youth."

Upon this text Mr. Schenck spoke somewhat as follows: "These are the words of an old man, and because they come from a person of experience and observation, we should heed them. The yoke represents something that is not agreeable—perhaps galling. The horse and the bullock resent the yoke in their old age unless they had been broken to it when they were young, and so it is with man. The time for adapting himself to circumstances is in his youth.

"We must bear in mind the difference between things that are pleasant and those which are good. As the pruning knife and the hammer are necessary to the tree and the rock, the one to improve the quality of the fruit and the other to bring out the hidden metals, so the yoke is necessary to bring out what is best in the heart of the young man.

"Jeremiah says that it is necessary for the young to bear affliction. No Christian can make progress in a calm. The young often think that life is made up of activity, but that is not so. Life is made up of activity and meditation, which are related to each other as the roots are related to the branches; both are necessary to growth. The young man should bear yoke of submission. We are under the yoke of authority; none of us are free.

"The prophet also suggests the yoke of toil and work. Work hurts no one, it is the worry that kills. Finally the prophet warns young men to bear the yoke of religion, which gives the character its added element. If we put on this yoke in youth we will not feel its weight, when in latter years its very touch will be burdensome. The world wants good young men and women today, who will not be afraid of the sneers of the other half."

In closing Mr. Schenck made a few personal remarks to the graduates, advising them that the world never were such a bright face for them as it does at the present, and telling them that the opportunities for achievement are many. With the graduates who were seated in the front of the church, were two of their teachers and State Superintendent Baxter.

A MECHANICAL ENGINEER NOW.

Walter B. Rittenhouse Graduated From Stevens Institute of Technology.

Among the sixty-five graduates at Stevens Institute of Technology, Hoboken, who received their diplomas last week was Walter B. Rittenhouse, of East Sixth street. Besides the coveted sheepskin, he received the degree of M. E., mechanical engineer. The course at Stevens is the most complete in that branch of any educational institution in the country and a graduate from Stevens is considered well prepared.

Rittenhouse attended the Plainfield Public Schools and was a member of the class of '97, in the High School. He left in 1893, and entered the Stevens Prep School, going into the Institute the next year. He has always stood high in his studies. He was chosen class treasurer. He graduated among the highest in his class.

Mr. and Mrs. G. M. Rittenhouse, of this city, were present at the commencement exercises.

Prize in Philosophy.

Isaac Titsworth of Dunellen, a member of the famous class of '95 at the Plainfield High School, is to graduate next year from Rutgers College. He has just been awarded the first Junior prize in philosophy. The prize is $25 in gold, and among the Juniors in the contest were the two men who won the pro-entrance honors.

Dr. Mabie to Address Graduates.

Dr. Hamilton W. Mabie, one of the editors of the "Outlook," will be the speaker at the commencement exercises at the Plainfield High School Thursday evening.

GASHED BY A GOLF BALL

A PECULIAR AND SERIOUS ACCIDENT SATURDAY AFTERNOON.

The Ball Was "Sliced" by a Stroke of Howard Wharton's Stick and Soared 250 Yards Away to Hit Fred Walz.

A serious accident occurred Saturday on the Hillside Tennins and Golf Links, which can not be blamed to any one and is liable to happen to any one. Howard Wharton was driving a ball from the seventh tee when he happened to "slice" it. Sailing through the air at tremendous speed it struck Fred Walz, who was fully 250 yards away, fairly in the forehead, cutting a deep gash just over the eyes.

The young man was carried to Frank A. Barnaby's house across the street, where Dr. Hodges, was obliged to take several stitches in the wound before binding it up.

The accident is a serious one, and although not affecting Mr. Walz's sight, will confine him to the house for some time. The accident brings to mind one that happened to L. W. Serrell, Jr., last year, when he was struck by Mrs. Serrell with a golf stick as she was about to drive a ball.

BOUND TO HAVE A RECEPTION.

Borough School Commencement Will Not be Without its Social Side.

The graduates of the borough public school were considerably surprised a day or two ago to learn that the alumni of the school did not intend to give them a reception following the Commencement exercises this Thursday evening. Heretofore the alumni has always given a reception the night following the Commencement, but it has always been attended with more or less expenses, until now the alumni is in debt about $30. Considering the financial side of the question the members of the alumni have decided that they cannot afford to give a reception this year.

Unfortunately, this news has not been conveyed officially to the superintendent of the school. The only information obtained was second handed from scholars in the school, and it leaves but a very short time to make any arrangements for a reception. A reception will be held, however, and will be given by the graduates themselves. They are now making arrangements for the affair. It be held Friday evening of this week and will have all the pleasant features associated with it. The graduates, naturally feel quite indignant to think that the reception usually given should be allowed to go by default.

CAN'T MACADAMIZE NOW.

Property Owners Along Summit Avenue Did Not Subscribe Enough.

The statement recently published in the News that the street committee of the borough had decided to macadamize Summit avenue, is not true. In conversation with Councilman Woolston, chairman of the street committee, a reporter was informed that the amount of money subscribed by the property owners along the street, representing about 1,200 feet, was only $114, which would not warrant the committee in undertaking the work which would cost at least $600.

The committee are sorry that the work cannot be done, but now they can only grade and fill-in the centre of the street with a quantity of slag they have on hand at the present time until such a time as the property owners raise enough to do the macadamizing.

A BLOW TO CAVALRY CHURCH.

Delegates Were Not Accorded Usual Privileges at Baptist Convention.

The services in Mt. Olive Baptist church Sunday night were attended by about three hundred persons to listen to the new pastor, Rev. E. E. Jackson, who will be formally installed as pastor next Thursday evening.

An interesting announcement was made by the delegates to the New England convention held in Brooklyn last week, when they stated that the members of the Cavalry Baptist church were not accorded recognition there because they had not been regularly organized. It was stated that they were advised to return to Mt. Olive church and live in peace.

After the report Rev. E. E. Jackson in his sermon exhorted the congregation to imitate the better class of white people that they might be respected as a people of high attainments.

Of Educational Interest.

Prof. H. J. Wightman, superintendent of the public school of North Plainfield, has just issued a neat volume of seventy-five pages reviewing the methods and work of the borough school during the past year. It explains the work of the school in a very creditable manner, and is of great value to teachers in general who wish to profit by the ideas prevailing so successfully under the supervision of Prof. Wightman.

Huckleberries at Any Rate.

Samuel Boss, of Central avenue, who has just returned from a trip through Pennsylvania, says that the crop of huckleberries this year will be enormous through that district.

CLOSE FINISHES BY THE LOCAL TROTTERS.

Continuation of Matinue Races By Plainfield Driving Club.

THREE EVENTS SATURDAY.

EX-JUDGE W. A. CODDINGTON WON THE EVENT FOR ROAD WAGONS.

"Highland Boy" Defeated "Myrtle Twig" in Two Very Exciting Heats, Finishing Neck and Neck—S. B. Edward's Mare in Her First Race.

The interest in fast horses and good trotting seems to have donned "seven league boots" this season, as far as Plainfield is concerned. The approaching meet of the Central New Jersey Driving Association may be the cause of it, however. At any rate, the matinee races of the Plainfield Driving Club, that were continued on the Gentlemen's Driving Park on Park avenue, Saturday afternoon, were well attended and a great deal of interest shown.

The track was fast although the brisk south-east wind rather impeded the progress of the horses on the first turn and along the back stretch. There was plenty of good sport nevertheless. A number of improvements in the general appearance of the Park were noticed, the preparation of the Driving Club for the big meet Wednesday and Thursday.

The event of the afternoon that attracted the most attention was the match between several prominent horsemen in road wagons. What made the race of unusual interest was the fact that the starters in it were the same as those who are entered for the special race at the race meet Wednesday. The contestants were W. A. Coddington's brown mare "Belle," "Belle Hayes," driven by her owner, I. F Randolph, of Elizabeth, Johnny Osborne's "Roxie French," N. B. Smalley's black trotter, "Ned Norton," and Robert Fairburn's roan mare "Lady Harrison." Randolph used a top buggy and the others pneumatic tired road wagons.

There was considerable trouble in getting them started. "Lady Harrison" broke time after time just before reaching the wire until her owner withdrew in disgust. After several other trials they got a fair start. From the very first "Belle" pulled into the lead and there she stayed without a skip until she went under the wire at the finish. Randolph's mare was apparently the only one to push her. The two horses stayed together the entire distance, the finish "Belle Hayes" responded well to her owner's efforts but could not overcome the lead. "Roxie French" and "Ned Norton" fought it out along the stretch for third. The heat was a repetition of the first. Judge Coddington and Mr. Randolph were bunched all the distance and the other two straggled along in the rear.

Samuel H. Edwards' bay mare "Molly" made her first appearance of the season in a race in the 2:30 class. She trotted against Douglas Darby's "Sunday" and was defeated in two closely contested heats. "Sunday" won by a neck in the first heat after leading all the way. She won by a larger margin in the second. "Molly" was driven by Frank Edwards, a son of the owner, who has trained, brought up and driven the horse.

The closest races of the day was the 2:25 class, in which "Highland Boy" and "Myrtle Twig" were the only starters. Brantingham's mare "Myrtle Twig" had the pole in the first heat and took the lead. The chestnut horse crept up on the back stretch but dropped back on the turn. As they turned into the home stretch, "Highland Boy" came by with a rush and took first half way down the stretch. It was neck and neck and Brantingham's mare began to gain when they passed under the wire, with "Highland Boy" a nose to the good.

The second heat was trotted slightly faster and with equal closeness. Charles Brower, who was piloting the winner, tried the same tactics with success although the mare made a plucky fight. "Highland Boy" has a lower mark than "Myrtle Twig."

W. W. Williams, R. A. Fairbairn, and Nathan Robins officiated in the judges' stand.

The summaries of the events of the afternoon were as follows:—

Special to Road Wagons. Owners to Drive.
W. A. Coddington's br. m., "Belle" 1 1
I. F. Randolph's ch. m., "Belle Hayes" 2 2
John B. Osborne's br. m., "Roxie French" 3 3

Time, 2:32½, 2:30½.

A Clever Artist.

The cover to the June number of Edward White's magazine, The American Queen, which represents a stately woman in the costume of a Red Cross nurse, grasping an American flag, was designed by Miss Jessamy Hearte, of Putnam auenue. One of Plainfield's most popular young society women was the model for the figure.

RABBI MARRIED THEM.

HAPPY WEDDING CEREMONY IN THE BOROUGH SUNDAY.

Miss Rose Fischner United in Wedlock to Arthur A. Philo, of Keyport—Ceremony at Groom's Brother's House.

There was great rejoicing at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Herman Philo, of Grandview avenue, Sunday afternoon, when their ward, Miss Rose Fischner, was united in marriage to Arthur A. Philo, of Keyport, N. J., brother of her guardian. The ceremony was performed before a number of the relatives and friends of the couple at 5 o'clock.

Rev. Dr. Joseph Leucht, of Newark, performed the marriage ceremony. The bride was gowned in white organdie and carried white roses. The bridemaid, Miss Ella Fischner, her sister, wore a gown of Cerse organdie. She also carried white roses. The best man was Joseph Philo, of New York, a brother of the groom.

The house was handsomely decorated with cut flowers and palms. After the ceremony followed the wedding supper.

A reception was given to the guests and dancing ended the evening. Prof. Philo furnished music. The newly-wedded couple took the 10:23 train for New York after receiving a rousing send-off by their friends. They will go to Akron, O., where they will visit relatives. On their return they will take up their residence at Keyport.

Among the out-of-town guests present were: Mr. Salz and Bert Mount, of Keyport; Rev. Dr. Joseph Leucht, Mr. and Mrs. M. Lundheimer, Mrs. J. Eckstein, the Misses Hersh, Mr. and Mrs. Herrmann, Miss M. Lyons, the Misses Eckstein, Miss Strab, Miss Mollie Wolf, H. Sthall, H Solomon, of Newark; L. Schekan, of Paterson; Miss May Solomon, of Elizabeth; Philip Mitz, of New Market; Rev. and Mrs. J. Wermes, Miss B. Wermes, Mr and Mrs. A. Ceylon, Miss Goldstick and Harry Philo, of New York.

Congratulatory despatches were received from Akron, Ohio, and from Lime, Vancouver and Victoria, British Columbia, from married sisters of the bride.

A MYSTERIOUS FIRE.

T. A. B. Hall Threatened With Destruction Early Monday Morning.

At 4:35 o'clock Monday a. m. Patrolman Flanagan sent in an alarm of fire from Box 46, corner of Liberty and West Second streets. Just a few minutes before the alarm was received that T. A. B. Hall on West Fourth street was on fire. The department responded with its usual quickness, and inside of three-quarters of an hour the fire was extinguished. The chemical engine and one line of hose from a hydrant was all that was used.

The origin of the fire is mysterious. It broke out on the north side of the building near a place where a stove stands. It burned considerable and reached the eaves of the building before it was put out. There was no fire in the stove neither, had there been of late. The loss will probably amount to about $50.

CR. WARDE LOCATED.

Erstwhile Military Academy Man is Staying in Binghamton.

Dr. Andrew D. Warde, the missing superintendent of the defunct New Jersey Military Academy, has at last been heard from. He is located at present at Binghamton, N. Y., where he is boarding. His present location was learned through the friends of a Plainfield family who were interested in the school. The Doctor gave this friend's name as a reference where he went to board. The boarding housekeeper applied to them and, as they had not heard of Dr. Warde's trouble, they gave satisfactory statements about him. Then they afterwards heard of the trouble in Plainfield, and wrote to their Plainfield friends to tell where the missing superintendent was staying.

Peter Knows Enough Not to Do It.

The New Jersey Contractor says that the report that Peter Breidt, the Elizabeth brewer, is contemplating the erection of a brewery in this city, at the corner of Fourth street and Spooner avenue, is without foundation in fact. The only occasion for the circulation of this report by the News is that Mr. Breidt has acquired a house on Spooner avenue by the foreclosure of a mortgage.

Clubhouse on Park's Golf Course.

John Abbott, of West Front street, has received the contract to erect a clubhouse for the Park Golf Club on their new grounds in Hyde's woods. The work will be started at once and pushed rapidly to completion. The work on the links progresses favorably and it is hoped that the grounds will be ready for play by the middle of August.

Medicine for the Dons.

Thomas H. Kellar, of this city, as eastern representative of the Peters Cartridge Company, completed a deal with the United States Government Saturday for 612,000 worth of ammunition for the army. The ammunition consists of 45-70 cartridges for the rifles and 45 and 38 calibre Colts for revolvers.

THE VISITING TEAM WAS SNOWED UNDER.

Crescents Administered Overwhelming Defeat.

REMARKABLE FIFTH INNING.

THE VISITORS WERE FIFTH WILLIAMSBURG FIELD CLUB.

The Final Result Was 30 to 6 in Favor of the Crescent—Sixteen Runs Were Scored in One Inning—Terrible Batting by Home Team.

Truly, Saturday's baseball game was a record breaker. Never was there such an exhibition of the kind before in this town. Even the small boy, who hangs up the score on the big score board after each inning, was non plussed. The score had gotten beyond his years to keep it. For the benefit of those who did not see the game, it should be explained that the Crescents won. In fact, they were so far ahead that their opponents, the Williamsburg Field Olub, were not in sight, and it is doubtful whether they will be seen again, in Plainfield at any rate.

The score was about 30 to 6. The word "about" is used advisedly, as the Crescents' runs came in so fast that the scorers found difficulty in keeping up with them. It was not less than 30, anyhow.

The mistake that caused all the trouble occurred in the first inning. The Crescents had an idea that they had at last found foemen worthy of their efforts, and they began to show what they were made of. Last year the Williamsburg team defeated the Crescents 15 to 5. But, as one of the visitors significantly remarked, it was a different crowd they ran up against this time.

The visitors made a warm opening. The first man to bat received his base on balls. Then followed clean hits by Shea and Grady that filled the bases. The cranks on the stand opened their eyes in wonder and prophesied that the Waterloo for the Crescents had now arrived. Then McLoughlin, who was in the box for the Crescents woke up to the importance of the occasion. The next two men succomed to his curves and were retired. Jim Mc Meel made a clean hit and brought in two runs amid deafening yells. Mc Meel then tried to steal second and Grady was caught at home by a clever trick.

The Crescents then made that woeful mistake. They thought they had met their match and opened up with such possibilities for the future that everybody trembled for the visitors. A single by Hollister, two bases on balls, two passed balls and a double by Stevens netted four runs for the Crescents.

For the next two innings, Mac struck out six men and no runs were scored for the visitors. In the third, the Crescents made three more on a double by Cavanaugh and single hits by Collins and Vroom.

The Williamsburg boys did nothing in the fourth while the Crescents, now fully entered on their campaign, saw four men complete the circuit. It was clean hitting, too, that was the cause of it all. Hollister, Mets, Collins and Lederer hit safely for one base while Stevens sent the ball over the centre fielder's head, nearly to the track, and ran three bases before the ball could be fielded back.

And then came the fifth inning. There is not much use trying to describe it. MacLaughlin was first to bat and he had two other chances before the inning was over. Did they hit the ball? Never was such batting seen in Plainfield. Nelson had been taken out of the box, for the captain of the visitors thought that the Crescents were hitting him too hard. But the reception that the new man, Charters, received was enough to take the heart out of the best twirler on the diamond. That poor little leather sphere was batted all over the field without rest. And when the ball did go anywhere near one of the visitors he promptly dropped it, for the fever was upon them and they were powerless.

There were, however, few errors on the part of the visitors. It may have been from lack of opportunity, for the Crescents covered every part of the field where there was anybody. They lost the ball several times in the high grass and everybody ran bases and laughed and yelled until the grand stand itself nearly expired at the exhibition. The wind was just right to carry the ball out into the field and that aided in the fun. Everybody made a hit or two, a run or two, and then a Williamsburg fielder made a mistake and caught Mac's fly which ended the inning.

After that the Crescents, who had played an almost errorless game, let down and the visitors managed to score four runs on fooling. The Crescents made three more and then gave up trying so that the game might end sometime.

The detailed score was as follows:

AN EDUCATIONAL RECOGNITION.

High School Certificate in Modern Languages Accepted by Two Colleges.

Added recognition has come to the Plainfield High School from two of the greatest of the women's colleges in the country. Three years ago a French course was started at the High School. It was intended to have to have the pupils complete the course, which was to fit them for college in the subject in three years. The three years are now up.

Principal I. W. Travell applied to the faculties of Wellesley and Smith Colleges for an extension of the certificate privileges to modern languages, and the request has been granted. Now graduates from the High School may enter those colleges without having to take an entrance examination in modern languages. The High School certificate already admits them without examination in the principal branches.

DOG BIT A WOMAN.

Dog Attacked at Her in a Yard at Netherwood Saturday.

Mrs. Wenzel, a German woman from Stony Hill, who peddles vegetables and garden truck about the city, was bitten by a savage dog at Netherwood Saturday. Mrs. Wenzel went into Richard Kissam's yard on South avenue, near Berkman street, with some peas. As she entered the yard a big dog belonging to William Crook, a colored resident, sprang at her and fastened his teeth in the fleshy part of her thigh.

Owing to the thick dress the dog's teeth did not penetrate very far, and made only a flesh wound. The woman was more frightened than hurt. Roundsman Frederickson, who was just then coming around the corner, did all he could to assist her.

To Celebrate the Fourth.

Friendship Council, No. 81, Jr. O. U. A. M., of New Market, will celebrate the Fourth of July this year in a very appropriate manner with athletic sports in the afternoon and fireworks in the evening. The committee in charge are sparing no pains or expense to make this year's the grandest celebration ever held in New Market. The grounds are beautifully situated along the banks of the lake, and are spacious and well shaded. There will be several entirely new features in the afternoon and the fireworks will surpass anything ever before presented in this section. The committee, in order to give their whole time and attention to the sports and fireworks, do not intend to run the refreshment stands, but propose to let them out.

Saw the Soldier Boys.

Physical Director C. E. A. Heywood, of the Y. M. C. A., returned from a wheeling trip through Maryland and Virginia. Mr. Heywood went first to a conference at Philadelphia, then on to Washington and Baltimore, finally bringing up at Camp Alger in Virginia. Mr. Heywood spent one night with the Y. M. C. A. workers at the camp, and a part of the next day making personal visits among the soldiers in camp. Mr. Heywood spoke of the condition of the men in camp, and said that they are in strightened circumstances, with poor food and little of it, and badly worn clothes.

A Lively Runaway.

A horse belonging to John Kelly, a hackman, living on Clinton avenue, ran away Thursday afternoon back of New Market. One of the wheels broke and frightened the horse so that he ran away. By the time the animal reached Front street he was tired and weak, and probably so blind with fright that he could not see where he was going. In front of the New Market postoffice a lightwood wagon stood close to the gutter, and Kelly's horse jumped into it badly damaging it. Kelly's horse was caught and taken to Roberts' stable where its owner soon came after it.

Entertained Her Sunday-School Class.

Miss Helen Bogart, of East Sixth street, entertained the members of her Sunday-school class Thursday evening. There were fifteen young people present, and the evening was passed in a pleasant way.

DECORATED GRAVES OF PYTHIANS GONE.

Impressive Memorial Service of Crescent Company.

VISITORS FROM BROOKLYN.

A MONUMENT DEDICATED IN THE METHODIST CEMETERY.

Several Cemeteries Visited by Details of Knights—Rain Interfered in the Afternoon—A Banquet Served in Hand's Hotel at Scotch Plains.

The rain of Sunday interfered materially with the observance of Decoration Day by the members of Crescent Company, No. 13, U. R. K. of P., and Rathbone Company, of Brooklyn. In the morning the graves were decorated by details from Crescent Company.

In the afternoon at 2 o'clock Crescent Company met Rathbone Company from Brooklyn at the North Avenue station. The two companies, headed by Unity Drum Corps, of Elizabeth, marched to the North Plainfield Cemetery, where a service was held. The march was then continued to Fifth street and Park avenue. At this point it began to rain very hard, and the Sir Knights took shelter under some trees, but many of them were thoroughly drenched. Mrs. E. R. Pope, of Park avenue, invited the Knights to her porch, where they remained until stages could be secured to continue the journey.

When the stages arrived the Knights went to the Plainfield avenue cemetery and held services and dedicated the new monument recently erected over the grave of the late George Rutherford. The continued rain necessarily cut the services quite short at this cemetery as well as at Hillside. At the latter place George Lee photographed Crescent Company and Rathbone Company separately and then together.

From Hillside Cemetery the Knights went to Scotch Plains and held services there, after which all adjourned to Hand's Hotel where dinner was served. The Knights returned to Plainfield from there and the visitors returned home on the 8:32 train to New York.

Those who took part in the services held at the various cemeteries were First Sergeant, J. C. Blimm; chaplain, J. S. Higham; captain, J. E. Flannery; first lieutenant, Jacob Blimm; and Friendship, Charity and Benevolence were represented by Wm. Young, Louis Mohring and Charles McGinley. At the dedication of the monument in the Plainfield avenue cemetery there was an address by Stephen Higham and a prayer by Chaplain J. S. Higham. There was also singing by the Knights.

BOROUGH PAYS TO BE PAID.

Five Dollars Due to Dog Catcher Will Settle His Fine for Fighting.

North Plainfield is at present without a dog catcher and the reason for it is that the man who held that position was arrested Friday a. m. and locked up. Isaac Randolph is his name and he was living with Mrs. Freeman and her daughter on Race street. Friday morning Randolph and the daughter engaged in a quarrel, with the result that Randolph knocked Miss Freeman down and slapped her face. The young woman had Randolph arrested, and when he was arraigned before Recorder Long a fine of fine of $5 or five days was imposed. As the borough owes Randolph about $5 for his services as dog catcher, he will be released and his wages will be used to pay his fine. It will now be the duty of the borough to secure another dog catcher.

A PRESBYTERIAN SOCIABLE.

Chapel Decorated With Flags and Flowers—The Programme.

A pleasant church sociable was held Thursday at the First Presbyterian church under the auspices of the women of the church. Those in charge decorated the chapel very prettily with flags and flowers, and small tables were arranged about the room, each one bearing a banquet lamp. The attendance was quite large and the opportunity given to become better acquainted was enjoyed by all.

During the evening an impromptu programme was presented. There were piano duets by Miss Remsen and Mrs. Gabay, vocal solos by Miss Charlotte Messerschmith and Miss Kathryn Glen, piano solos by Miss Ida Talsmy, recitations by Miss Mary Lucky and whistling solos by Mr. Evans. Miss Mabelle Force was the efficient accompanist on the piano. The social was made complete with the serving of refreshments by the women in charge after the programme.

Fell and Broke Two Fingers.

While walking down the steps of the back piazza of his home Friday Joseph Dunham, of Arlington avenue, slipped and fell, breaking two fingers of his right hand. Dr. Adams dressed the fingers, and today Dunham carries his hand in a sling.

DEVOTION TO DUTY CAUSED HIS DEATH.

Excessive Work Brought Fatal Illness to Col. R. K. Case.

A DISTINGUISHED RECORD

A VALUABLE GOVERNMENT EMPLOYE FOR OVER THIRTY YEARS.

An Honorable Record as a Citizen of Plainfield Where He Had Lived Since Boyhood—Only Sick for Forty-Eight Hours.

A true soldier, an honest gentleman and a loving husband and father, Colonel Rufus King Case stood at his post until the end, faithful to his country. While he was not exposed to the storm of shot and shell as are Uncle Sam's brave soldiers who are now on Cuban soil, he displayed just as great heroism in his prompt response to the call of his country for extraordinary duties in supplying her armys with the necessities of life. He overcame physical ailments, put aside the imperative demands of his body and finally gave his very life that the work of the Nation might go forward and the Stars and Stripes wave victorious over her soldiers.

Saturday morning, at 3, Colonel Case passed away at his home, 117 East Ninth street, after an illness of forty-eight hours. Beloved as he was by a host of friends in this city, and his numerous associates in the army, death will be greatly mourned, for in him Plainfield has lost one of her best and truest citizens and the United States a valued and faithful worker.

As chief clerk of the quarter master's department of the Department of the East of the United States Army, Colonel Case has had extraordinary demands on his time and efforts since the breaking out of the war. The business of the departmen has swelled to remarkable proportions. Everything done by department had to pass under Colonel Case's eye and, of late, he has been compelled to labor seven days a week, going to his office in the Army and Navy building, New York, on the 7:26 train and returning late in evening. Like the true soldier that he was, Colonel Case uttered no complaint but remained at his duty until his body, weakened by the terrible strain, fell an easy victim to pneumonia, and the Colonel, forty-eight hours after the attack, passed quietly away.

Like a true Christian, as all his past life has shown him to be, Colonel Case prepared for the end when he saw that it was inevitable. His labors were ended and he was willing to go, his only sorrow being that he must leave his loved ones behind. The end was peaceful and quiet, Colonel Case passing into a state of unconsciousness toward the last from which he never recovered.

Colonel Rufus King Case was born in Hunterdon county on Dec. 19, 1840. When but a lad his parents both died, and he and his brothers, Samuel and Augustus, came to Plainfield, where they were cared for by their grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Lacey. The greater part of his boyhood was spent in this place. He went to school here and had grown to age when the Civil War broke out.

Like many of his comrades, Colonel Case felt the stir of patriotism and enlisted from here in the Sixth Regiment of New Jersey Volunteers on August 26, 1861. On January 1, 1862, he was appointed regimental quartermaster sergeant. On June 23d of that year he was commissioned second lieutenant of Company C of that regiment by the Governor of New Jersey. He was promoted to the first lieutenancy of Company G. of that regiment, his commission being given by the Governor January 1, 1863. At the expiration of his term of service, September 7, 1864, he was honorably mustered out.

He entered the service again, however, November 23d, of the same year, when he was commissioned by President Lincoln as captain and assistant quartermaster of volunteers He was commissioned major, by brevet, by the president February 1, 1866, for "faithful and efficient services." Later he was commissioned lieutenant colonel, by brevet, by the President, to date from March 13, 1865, for "gallant, faithful and meritorious services during the war."

He served on special duty as regimental quartermaster of the 6th New Jersey Volunteers, then as acting assistant quartermaster of the artillery brigade, 3d Army Corps. He was afterwards appointed side de camp to Brevet Major General Rufus Ingalls, at General Grant's headquarters, during the campaigns from the "Wilderness" to Petersburg and before Petersburg. September, 1864, he became assistant chief quartermaster of the Army of the Potomac and remained in that position until the disbandment of that army.

He participated in all the campaigns of the Army of the Potomac, except Antietam, and in all the campaigns of the armies operating against Richmond. He was present at the surrender of the Army of Northern Virginia, to General Grant at Appomator Court House. He was on duty in New York City from June 2, 1865, to May 31, 1866, when he was honorably mustered out.

After leaving the army Colonel Case returned to Plainfield where he took up his residence. He soon after entered the quartermaster's department of the Department of the East of the regular army, where he was made chief clerk, in which capacity he had served until his death.

He married Miss Lucretia Vail, of Quakertown, and they came here to live. Twenty-seven years ago they moved to their present home on East Ninth street, where they have resided ever since.

Colonel Case was a Republican but never took an active part in politics. He was placed on the Republican city ticket for the Common Council and served very efficiently in that body for three years. He was one of the principal advocates in the formation of the Muhlenberg Hospital and was president of the board of governors of the hospital.

Colonel Case was a prominent worker in the First Baptist church, of which he has been a deacon for several years. When Charles W. McCutchen resigned the superintendency of the Sunday-school several years ago, Colonel Case was chosen to fill that office.

In past years Colonel Case was an active worker in Winfield Scott Post, No. 73, G. A. R.

His widow and five children survive him. The children living are Mrs. Charles VanWinkle, Mrs. Dudley Miller, Miss Margaret Case, Miss Emma Vail Case, all of this city, and Rufus Ingalls Case, of Philadelphia.

Miss Emma Vail Case was to be married Wednesday afternoon to George H. L. Morton, of Dobbs Ferry. The ceremony will take place, but it will be private.

Colonel Case was an exempt member of No. 2 Engine Company of the Plainfield Department. The Exempt Firemen's Association turned out in a body to attend the funeral.

DEATH OF SAMUEL MILLIKEN.

Had Been a Sufferer for Over Thirty Years.

After an illness lasting over a period of thirty years, part of the time spent in intense suffering, Samuel Milliken, Jr., of 320 Central avenue, passed quietly away Saturday morning at 8:30 o'clock. The funeral services were held at 2:45 o'clock Monday afternoon from the residence.

Mr. Milliken formerly lived in Philadelphia and Bellefonte, Pa. Several years ago he moved to this city and took up his residence on Central avenue, opposite Ninth street. Mr. Milliken was engaged in the iron foundry business in New York, and although an invalid attended to it. For the past nine months Mr. Milliken had been confined to the house, part of the time to his bed. He had been slowly sinking for three days and the end was not unexpected.

Mr. Milliken leaves a widow and three children, one daughter, Mrs. James M. DeGraff, of Central avenue, and two sons, Edward and Foster, of New York. He was a Presbyterian and united with the Crescent Avenue church first and later with the First Presbyterian church. He was in his 78th year.

Miss E. D. Lyon, of Putnam avenue, is spending some time at Riverside, Conn.

Dyspepsia Degrades

its victims. It puts them in the power of the weakest organ of the body and makes them its slaves. They must eat to suit it, drink to suit it, and live a lenten life of self-denial.

AYER'S PILLS

TRIBUTE FOR THE HOME

TWO ORPHAN GIRLS SUCCEED WELL IN THE WEST.

Sent From the Children's Home Many Years Ago and Are Now Married and Happy in Their Own Homes.

Grant Biddle and Miss Janet Richards were united in marriage at the Congregational church at 8 o'clock last evening, in the presence of a large number of friends and relatives, Rev. J. C. Reeve, officiating. The bride was beautifully attired in blue and the groom wore the conventional black. * * * The contracting parties are well and favorably known in this community. The groom is an intelligent young man and assistant cashier of the Citizens' Bank of this place. He is a son of D. B. Biddle, who is a prominent citizen of this place.

The above is an excerpt from a newspaper clipping received by Mrs. M. E. Kimball, president of the Children's Home, from a western town and furnishes a pleasant tribute to the work of the Children's Home. The bride in the case was an orphan girl who found a home in Plainfield's philanthropic institution, and from there was sent to a western town where she was adopted by a family whose name she honored when she became the wife of what the newspaper clipping credits as "an intelligent young man and an assistant cashier"—ample evidence that she must have "done well."

The bride was one of two sisters who were taken into the home, both of whom went west together, and in a letter recently received by Mrs. Kimball from her she said:

"I think you will be glad to know that Lucy has married very well, more than a year ago, and now has a dear little girl four weeks old."

A few days later came a paper containing the marriage notice of the correspondent, Mrs. Kimball adds this very touching comment:

"Here are two happy women in good homes, instead of two poor, forlorn sisters that came to us."

MONEY FOR A MISSIONARY.

Warren Chapel Members Assist Miss Rachel Mair Financially.

The annual missionary entertainment under the auspices of the Junior Christian Endeavor Society of Warren chapel was held last Thursday in the chapel. There were about seventy members present and a large number of friends and members of the chapel. The exercises were in charge of Mrs J. O. McKelvey, superintendent of the society, and the object for which the entertainment was held was to raise money to assist Miss Rachel Mair in her work in Africa. Last year the sum of $41 was sent to Miss Mair and it is expected that that amount will be realized this year.

The chapel was prettily decorated with American flags and wild flowers, under the direction of Mrs Burton. Miss Hattie Taylor also assisted in making the affair a pleasant one.

The programme consisted of songs and recitations by Florence King, Anna Martin, Ruth Wilson, Ethel Reynolds, Norah Schenck, Flossie Demarest, Minnie Freize, Jennie Smith and Carrie Krewson, and there was singing by the choir from the Junior Society. During the evening a collection was taken by Henry Wilson and Willie Brown. The entertainment was followed with the serving of refreshments by those in charge of the entertainment.

A CHILLY RECEPTION.

Y. M. C. A. CYCLISTS DID NOT HAVE GOOD TIME LAST NIGHT.

The New Brunswick Association Seems to Be in a Bad Way, and Did Not Know Anything About Cyclists' Visit.

It was by far the chilliest reception that any wheelmen ever had, in fact, it was not a reception at all that greeted the thirty seven cyclists who went from this city to New Brunswick last Thursday in the regular run of the Y. M. C. A. Cycling League of Northern New Jersey.

As the body of wheelmen finished in front of the Y. M. C. A. building on Church street, New Brunswick, they were all prepared to partake with relish of the refreshments that always form a part of the entertainment for the visiting clubs A cheer, intended to give notice of the arrival, was without effect. Then Capt Thomas A. Cuming roused out a sleepy, grey-headed janitor. The janitor was dazed at the sight of the invading force, and it was some time before the situation could be explained to him. Then he said that there was no general secretary in New Brunswick any more. Neither was there any Y. M. C. A. bicycle club. In fact, he was not certain whether any of the association except the building remained. The visitors were welcome to the building, however, if they wanted it.

Then eight riders from the Rahway Y. M. C. A. and three from the Somerville Association came puffing up the hill and everybody went into the building and tried to enjoy themselves minus the welcome they had expected.

At last a few young men, the stragglers from the association, dropped in and explained that they had known nothing of any run. They had not been notified even of the forming of the League and so had no idea of this visitation.

Some of the visitors had friends in New Brunswick whom they hunted up. Others wandered about the town in search of adventure.

Going over, the Pumptown division, headed by Roy Phillips, Will Hobbie and Frank Benedict, on a triplet, remained with the crowd, but they returned to Plainfield by themselves, the triplet pacing the others.

The main body left New Brunswick at 9:45 o'clock and reached here about an hour later.

COLORED KNIGHTS ELECT.

Grand Commandery Officers Chosen in Cyprus Lodge Rooms Last Night.

The annual meeting of the Grand Commandery, Colored Knights Templer, of New Jersey, was held Thursday in the rooms of Cyprus Commandery, West Front street, when the following officers were elected: Grand commander, A. W. Brown, Plainfield; deputy grand commander, N. J. Williams, Fairhaven; generalissimo, N. J Newton, Camden; captain general, James Cannett, Plainfield; grand recorder P T. Colding, Camden; senior warden, W. S. Jones, Plainfield; junior warden, Edward Turpin, Camden; prelate, Edward Paine, Camden; grand treasurer, William Douglass, Plainfield; sword bearer, B. E. Johnson, Plainfield; warder, J. H. Walker, Fanwood.

The officers were installed by P. T. Colding and William Douglass. After the meeting a good time was enjoyed by the members present.

NEWS FROM THE FRONT.

David L. Curtis Not a Deserter, But Has Been Appointed Orderly to Gen. Kent.

Some malicious-minded person has been circulating a story about that David L. Curtis, son of E. J. Curtis, of New York, who enlisted in the Seventy first Regiment, New York Volunteers, had deserted from the army and had been shot. That this is false Mr. Curtis knows because he has received a letter from his son, dated Tampa, Fla., in which the young man refutes all such stories and tells that he is in the best of health. He has been appointed orderly to Brigadier-General Kent, and is, therefore, allowed more privileges than some of the other men and, perhaps, that is where the story originated. Curtis expected to sail for Porto Rico when this letter was mailed, June 10th, and must be on Spanish soil by this time.

BROTHER A BRAVE MAN.

Commander of the Marines at Guantanamo Related to a Plainfielder.

Lieutenant Colonel Huntington, who commands the little band of marines, whose brave stand on the hill by Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, has made them famous throughout the civilized world, is the brother of Samuel Huntington, who lives on Franklin place. Mr. Huntington and his family are now away for the summer. Lieutenant Colonel Huntington has visited in this city, where he is known by a number who have met him at his brother's home.

The hero of Guantanamo is modest and unassuming, whose ability in the marine corps has landed him at his present high position in the force. He is very popular among his men and he accomplishes much by the force of example.

EARLY CLOSING OF STORES IS AGITATED.

Board of Trade Will Try to Inaugurate the Plan.

MUNICIPAL CONSOLIDATION.

FORMER MAYOR GILBERT MAKES SOME SALIENT REMARKS.

He Says That When the Matrimonial Alliance Between Borough and City Takes Place It Must Mean Happiness and Thrift.

The regular meeting of the Board of Trade was held June 15th in the Babcock building. There were about twenty members present and several items of interest were discussed at length, among which was the city building ordinance, the formation of another local building and loan association and the consolidation of the city and borough.

After D. W. Rogers and R. B. Rogers were elected to membership, and the application of J. H. Leggett was received for membership, President Lounsbury called upon former Mayor Alexander Gilbert for a report from the committee on consolidation.

Mr. Gilbert stated that he was sorry that he was unable to give a report in full, as the committee could only report progress Continuing, he said, "The subject of consolidation is a very attractive one to many people. It suggests a great change, enlarged boundaries, greater power and a position of promi[nence] in the State. If it could be effected properly there is no reason why such a consolidation should not take place with a great deal of pleasure. There are so many difficulties that is not possible at present to determine the subject fully in all its phrases. We ought not to be unduly hasty. Plainfield has lived separate and apart from the borough and has been thrifty and happy, while the borough has lived without us with the same result. When the matrimonial service takes place we want the same thrift and happiness to exist."

Another important matter, introduced by Mr. Schwed, was that of the early-closing movement. Mr. Schwed advocated the idea and suggested that a committee be appointed to secure the desired purpose. Secretary Runyon stated that Edward White, Woodhull & Martin, Putnam & DeGraw and a number of the merchants are willing to close at 7 o'clock every evening. Some of the merchants are anxious to try the early-closing movement by closing Wednesday and Friday evenings. The motion that a committee be appointed to see the merchants prevailed, and President Lounsbury appointed Mr. Schwed, Horace Sherwin and Mr. Woodhull.

The building ordinance was introduced at this time by L. B. Woolston. He asked the secretary to read the resolution on the subject which was passed at a meeting held sometime ago. Mr. Woolston then said that he thought the Board of Trade should take a very conservative position on this subject. The late Mr. Erickson, he said, had worked hard to perfect such an ordinance, and he did not think it would be the proper thing to tear it all to pieces. He said that he objected to the repeal of the ordinance outside of the fire limits, but he thought the ordinance should be modified somewhat.

Charles W. Runyon stated that it was an exceedingly difficult matter to draw a building ordinance to cover every point and have everyone satisfied. He thought it would be a good idea to refer the present ordinance to a competent committee of men and let them amend it and change the fire districts.

Mr. Gilbert at this time spoke a few words. He said that the question of changing the ordinance was one of grave importance. It is hard to construct and very easy to tear down. He said that Mr. Erickson worked for two years in constructing the ordinance and he had given it very careful attention and thought. He knew it was the effort of Mr. Erickson, and that is that Plainfield in time would have a city vastly superior to other cities. Mr. Gilbert said that when he first considered the ordinance he thought it was about ten years ahead of the times, but he was convinced that it was a good thing. He suggested that a meeting of architects, builders and contractors be held and have the ordinance amended and not tear it all to pieces.

President Lounsbury made a few remarks in which he set forth the position of the Board on the subject. He said that the Board had nothing whatever to do with the resolution presented to the Council at the last meeting asking for a repeal of the ordinance, although the resolution adopted by the Board is identical. It was Fred Bird that had engineered the resolution to the Council and he secured the signers. Mr. Lounsbury stated further that when the ordinance was first under consideration before its first adoption, the committee from the Council absolutely refused to take out certain objectionable points. It was approved by some but not by the majority. The question, Mr. Lounsbury said, is, is the present ordinance satisfactory to the majority and are there any objectionable points?

Charles Hand's idea was that the ordinance should be so amended as to leave old frame structures alone, so that a man in improving his property would not be obliged to use iron on a wooden building.

Mr. Lounsbury introduced a new subject for the consideration of the members and it caused a great deal of discussion. It was in regard to the great number of Plainfield people who send from $1,500 to $2,000 of town every month to building and loan associations in various parts of the State. He said that the matter was talked of at a recent meeting of the Board of Managers of the Board, and it was the general opinion that another building and loan association could be organized in this city and would do well. The president said that it was not the idea of the Board to organize such an association, but they would freely offer the use of their rooms for such a purpose. The reason for such a move emanated out of the consideration of endeavoring to secure certain factories to locate in this city. The owners of the factories, if they came here, would want to borrow some money from the Board, and the latter thought it would be well to have an association that would fill the bill.

Mr. Gilbert, J. D. Spicer and several others argued against the plan, and Mr. Gilbert stated that it would be impossible to control the investment of capital, that capital would go where it could get the most in return. The question was discussed at great length and nothing definite resulted.

Secretary Runyon remarked that the application of J. H. Leggett made the one hundredth member in six months. He expressed a desire that during the next six months the Board would grow more rapidly. Mr. Runyon also stated that a number of the members objected to holding the meetings Wednesday evening, as it is prayer meeting night. This subject was not discussed. No further business was introduced and the meeting adjourned.

A. G. A. R. FUNERAL.

Obsequies Held Over Remains of Late Benjamin Wright.

Funeral services over the remains of the late Benj. Wright, who died at his home on West Fifth street, were held Wednesday afternoon, June 15th. The services were in charge of Winfield Scott Post, No. 73, who turned out in good numbers.

Rev. C. L. Goodrich, to whose church the deceased belonged, was the officiating clergyman, assisted by Rev. Cornelius Schenck. Both pastors made comforting remarks, and Mr. Schenck said that the departed had expressed a belief that all was well with his soul before the end came.

The services were very simple and were soon over. The G. A. R. men acted as an escort to the grave, which was in the North Plainfield cemetery. The pallbearers were Councilman E. D. Moffett, Capt. Wm. Hand, Wm. H. Day, Nathan Pennington, Andrew Cox and Robert Walker. At the grave the regulation three rounds of 24 guns was fired. The post sent a handsome pillow and there were floral pieces members of the family.

AT BOYNTON BEACH.

Popular Summer Day Resort Has Many New Attractions.

Boynton Beach, the popular summer day resort, is open again for the season of '98. Many improvements have been made in the place, and this season promises to be a very successful one.

William W. Stratton, of East Third street, is one of the men in charge of beach, and Mr. Boynton himself will have personal oversight of the place. Tomorrow afternoon the Sons of Malta Encampment, of New York, will run an excursion to Boynton, via the Iron Steamboat line. Beginning on July 1st, an orchestra will play every afternoon and evening, and there will be free dancing for old and young.

The Twilights' Picnic.

July Fourth will be a gala day for the Twilight Social Club when they will give a grand picnic in the Crescent Rink. The dancing surface is the finest and largest in the State, and the music by Rogers' full orchestra will be excellent. The building is a very cool place in warm weather, and the committee in charge will do everything in their power to ensure an enjoyable time to all who favor them with their presence. A beautiful souvenir will be presented to all who attend.

A Disgraceful Fight.

A disgraceful fight took place on South avenue just beyond the city line late Thursday afternoon The two combatants, strangers to Plainfield, were both under the influence of liquor. One man received two black eyes and was badly cut on the face. After they became exhausted they fell asleep by the roadside, a sorrowful looking spectacle to the passersby.

WILDERNESS LODGE'S FESTIVAL SPLENDOR

A Fairy Like Scene Enacted There June 15th.

REDEEMER GUILD IN CHARGE

PROFITS GO TO SWELL THE CHURCH BUILDING FUND

J. O. Stevens' Beautiful Home the Gathering Place for Those Seeking an Afternoon or Evening of Great Pleasure.

Under the spreading maples that surround Wilderness Lodge on every side, the subdued Chinese lanterns glowed like moons about the unwinking planet-like reflectors, lighting up the spacious grounds and revealing the animated throng that flocked about. Out in the fields on either side the fire-flies flashed in defiant rivalry to the greater illumination. Never did Wilderness Lodge, the beautiful home of John O. Stevens, secretary of the Postal Telegraph Cable Company, on Clinton avenue, near Fourth street, present a prettier picture than June 15th, the occasion of the lawn festival of the Guild of the Church of the Redeemer.

At any time Wilderness Lodge is a charming place. In the afternoon when the festival began it was like one grand park. Long rows of yet unlighted lanterns were strung from tree to tree. Lawn seats were placed in shady spots while hammocks were offered to those in search of ease. A Venician gondola, a trifle smaller perhaps that those strange craft that navigate the watery thoroughfares of Venice, rested on the lawn near the main entrance. There the children played. Another attraction on the front lawn was an archery, under the charge of J. O. Stevens.

A patriotic booth, covered with an artistic draping of flags, served as recruiting office for the army of thirsty ones who there found lemonade in plenty. Mrs. Frank Bowley was in charge.

In front of the house where the paths to entrance separated, a pretty booth of green and white contained an attractive display of homemade cakes. A powerful attraction at the booth were the great strawberries, grown right in the garden at the side of the house. They were sold in fancy decorated baskets, Mrs. Frank Brown and Mrs. Rhodes were in charge, assisted by Miss Josephine Brock.

Out in the open, at the left of the house, a tent had been erected. From it was served ice cream, ice and more of the delicious strawberries. Tables were arranged under the trees where the guests were served. Mrs. W. E. Brock and Mrs. William S. Smith were in charge. The waitresses were the Misses Clara Woltmann, Emily Thompson, Lizzie Brock, Helene Phillips and Iola Moore

Something more substantial than berries and frozen cream were served in the dining rooms in the house. Here those in charge of the pleasant repast were the Misses Davis, Miss Addinson, Miss Pierson, Miss Harford and Miss Stevens.

While every department had its committee, there was a general committee, composed of Mrs. A. E. Faber, chairman, Mrs. J. O. Stevens and Mrs. Henry Phillips, that exercised supervision over all and directed the movements of the army of assistants.

It was in the evening, however, that the festival was in its beauty. At the house an attraction was provided in the shape of four hundred hour candles held in the parlors. The watchful eye of E. Frank Richards was at the door. The programme was under the direction of Walter A. Hudson, of New York, the well known pianist. The talent who took part in the series of concerts consisted of Miss Louise Miller and Miss Alice Kingsland, of Mount Vernon, and Miss Clyde Burnett, of Plainfield, pianists; Miss Marguerite Burnett, violinist; Fletcher Hallock, banjoist, soloist and mouthophonist and mandolin soloist; James Beekman, Councilman William N. Runyon and George O. Stevens, vocal soloists. The concerts were remarkably well attended.

And after the programme was all over, Stevens, Runyon and Hallock gathered beneath the trees and sang together college songs and plantation melodies, while the patrons of the festival sat around and listened.

Full returns have not been made, but the Guild will probably net several hundred dollars toward the building fund of the church, for the benefit of which the festival was given.

NEW TROLLEY SCHEME

EFFORT TO BUILD A LINE FROM RAHWAY TO CRANFORD.

The Plan, it is Said, is Fathered by the Elizabeth and West Id Road Capitalists in Opposition to Bergen Idea.

Rahway, June 22—There is a big scheme on foot to construct a macadam road, eighty feet wide, and also a trolley line, from the town of Cranford to Bloodgood's Mills, in Clark Township, and from there across that township to Westfield avenue in Rahway, and down that thoroughfare to connect with the Rahway and Middlesex Electric Railway.

There is at present a narrow road leading from Cranford to Bloodgood's Mills, but the intention is to widen this to eighty feet. From Bloodgood's to Rahway the new road will have to be opened up through the fields. It is said that the syndicate that has this scheme matured has the promise of all the land free wanted for the construction of the proposed trolley line and macadam road, which the farmers, who own most of the land, believe will create quite a boom in the value of their holdings along the line of the proposed electric railway.

It is strongly suspected that the trolley company that is working to get the right-of-way through the townships lying between Plainfield and Elizabeth, is the syndicate that is working for an electric railway between Cranford and Rahway, to be operated as a branch of the other line. The chief obstacle the syndicate would have to contend with in pushing its plan is what might be developed in the Union County Board of Freeholders, whose consent it would be necessary to secure before opening a road from Bloodgood's to Westfield avenue in Rahway.

A majority of the Freeholders are pledged to the Bergen plan for an electric road between Elizabeth and Plainfield, and the other company has been fighting this project, as it wants the right of way for itself. The Freeholders may see fit to block the scheme to run a branch line from Cranford to Rahway in retaliation for the opposition the Riker syndicate has made to the Bergen plan.

Death of Mrs. Pearson.

The death of Mrs. William J. Pearson, of West street, occurred Monday afternoon after a long and tedious illness. The deceased has not enjoyed good health for many years, and of late her condition was such that her death was not wholly unexpected. She was born in Hunterdon county, and has lived in the borough during her married life. She was the wife of Mr. Pearson, of the firm of Pearson & Gayle. Mrs. Pearson was a woman of many excellent qualities and she had a host of friends who will learn with sadness of her death. She leaves a husband, one daughter and a son.

Apoplexy of the Brain.

Mrs. Clarkson Mundy, of East Third street, was stricken with apoplexy of the brain Sunday morning and is now in a critical condition. She is unable to utter a single word. Mr. Mundy discovered his wife's condition when he called her for breakfast and she did not answer. The affliction causes a great deal of sympathy among those who know Mr. and Mrs. Mundy. They are worthy people, but not blessed with an abundance of the world's goods.

TO BE INSTALLED AS PASTOR.

Elaborate Ceremonies to Be Followed Out at Mt. Olive Church.

The installation services of Rev. E. E. Jackson to the pastorate of Mt. Olive Baptist church will take place Thursday evening of this week at 8 o'clock in the church. Rev. W. D. Johnson, of this city, will be master of ceremonies. The following programme has been arranged for the occasion:

Hymn by the choir; invocation by Rev. W. H. Wrenn; hymn by the choir; Scripture reading by Rev. J. A. Harris; prayer by Rev. H. P. Thomas; hymn by the choir; installation sermon by pastor W. T. Dixon, of Brooklyn; prayer by Rev. Travis, of Orange; hymn by the choir; charge to the church by Dr. D. J. Yerkes, of the First Baptist church, city; charge to pastor by Rev. D. W. Wisher, New York; to the church by Rev. R. D. Wynn, New York; charge to the deacons by Rev. J. H. Bailey, of Elizabeth; welcome to the State by Rev. J. O. Coster, D. D., of Newark; welcome on behalf of the New England Convention by Rev. R. A. Motly, D. D., of Jersey City; welcome to pastor by Rev. J. W. Richardson, D. D., of Park Avenue Baptist church; welcome on behalf of our Sunday-school and teachers by the superintendent, M. C. Dobbins.

Spiritual matrimonial hand-shaking by the deacons and trustees of the church. Those invited are Revs. H. P. Matthews, Wm. Perry, Wm. Hill, Rev. Harris, of Cranford; Rev. Smith, of Red Bank; Rev. Burchett, of Elizabeth; Rev. James Grover, city. Welcome greeting by the congregation.

COMPLAIN ABOUT THE ODOR.

East Front Street Residents Say That the Fat House is a Nuisance.

Theodore Glaser, who keeps the fat house back of French's mill, was arrested Monday afternoon on a complaint sworn out by John A. Powlison, of the firm of Powlison & Jones, who charges him with maintaining a nuisance. Mr. Powlison claims that the place has been very offensive to him and all the residents who live near, or who have occasion to come by the place.

Glaser was represented by William G. DeMeza, and he entered a plea of not guilty. His trial was set down for July 8th. Meanwhile he is under $200 bonds, with David Smalley as bondsman.

This fat house has been located back of the race for years, and the Board of Health has threatened to make a complaint against it many times.

A Fine Work of Art.

The Burlington (Vt.) Free Press and Times under date of Wednesday, June 15th, has the following to say regarding a Plainfielder: "Julian Scott, the famous painter, whose production of the Battle of Cedar Creek, which hangs in the State House at Montpelier, has won so many admirers, is the guest of Judge R. S. Taft, and is engaged on several oil portraits for Burlingtonians. Mr. Scott, whose home is in Plainfield, N. J., was born in Lamoille county."

Cut by a Swinging Shelf.

Grocer P. H. Currin, of Grandview avenue, sustained a severe cut in his cheek under the left eye Monday while he was in the cellar under his store looking for something. He struck his face against a swinging shelf. The cut is a bad one and caused the face to swell considerable.

A Rustic Place for the Children.

Mrs. Pliny C. Fisk, of West Seventh street, has built a cozy little arbor in a large apple tree by the side of her house where the children can play without fear of falling. The house is reached by a flight of rustic steps, and is large enough for several to be seated in very comfortably.

THIS DARING ROBBER WORKED BOLD, INDEED

Looted the House of A. M. Vanderbeek in Broad Day Light.

THEN ESCAPED UNSEEN

THOUGHT TO HAVE HID IN THE HOUSE AT NOON TIME.

When Mrs. Vanderbeek Went to Col. Case's Funeral the Thief Ransacked the House for Valuables and Carried Away a Good Many of Them—Suspicious Man Seen—Police on the Case.

The most daring robbery that has occurred in this vicinity in many a day took place Monday afternoon between the hours of 2 and 4 o'clock at the home of Andrew M. Vanderbeek, 98 Duer street. The thief called off everything of value that could be taken, and even used Mr. Vanderbeek's satchel to assist him in taking the valuables. Thus far there is not the slightest clew to the robber. The supposition is that the thief is well acquainted in the neighborhood and especially with the house he entered, for he seemed to know exactly where to go for the valuables.

Mr. Vanderbeek is quite positive that the thief gained an entrance to the house shortly after noon Monday, while Mrs. Vanderbeek was in the back yard hanging up clothes, and secreted himself in some out of the way part of the house. To substantiate this theory the fact remains that when Mrs. Vanderbeek left the house to attend the funeral of the late R. K. Case, she securely fastened every door, the back door being made doubly secure with two locks. When she returned the back door was unlocked.

While Mrs. Vanderbeek was away the robber got in his fine work. He first operated in Mr. Vanderbeek's bedroom and a more completely ransacked room one could not find. The bureau drawers were pulled out and papers of more or less value were scattered about the floor. On the bureau there stood a jewel box containing many valuable little pieces of gold and silver in the shape of scarf pins, buttons, etc. These were all taken, as well, in fact, as everything that had the slightest value attached to it.

From this room the thief went to the room occupied by Raymond Poole, a nephew of Mr. Vanderbeek, but nothing was taken here. The intruder then went to the dining room where he made another great haul. Silver and gold ware, spoons, knives, forks and money were taken. The money was taken from a small drawer which was inside another drawer. A silver table set was also taken. This was not so valuable as regards its actual worth, but it was prized highly by the owners. The thief so thoroughly cleaned house that there was not enough left to set the table last evening for supper. Included among the things taken were many things that were presents to the couple when they were married, and on account of the association attached to them they were prized.

While all these operations were going on Mr. Vanderbeek's six year-old boy was playing across the street with Frank Bailey and another lad. They noticed a strange man come down the street, whose pockets seemed to be filled to the limit. The boys stopped playing ball to watch him. He went down Duer street to Lincoln place where he turned. At the corner of Duer street and Lincoln place the man stopped and removed his coat, after which he proceeded on his journey. He walked slow and was apparently in no hurry.

When Mrs. Vanderbeek returned home about 4 o'clock she at once noticed that the back door was unlocked. When she reached her bedroom she was dumbfounded. The room was in a terrible condition. It required only a short time for her to learn of the thief's visit and word was sent to her husband. Chief Marshal Wilson was consulted at once and he is now working on the case. In his opinion the thief does not live a great way from the scene of the robbery. The robbery has also been reported to the officials of other near by places and every effort will be made to catch the guilty party.

Among the things stolen was a silver watch valued very much by Mr. Vanderbeek. It was given to him by his uncle, Andrew Vanderbeek, of this city. Mr. Vanderbeek estimates his total loss to be about $200. He says that among the missing articles there are many that could not be duplicated and which are prized more for the association attached to them than for any money value.

—The vestry of Mt. Olive church and parsonage are being overhauled and beautified. The vestry will be completed by Thursday and the parsonage by Tuesday. The vestry work will be paid for by the Young People's Christian Endeavor Society which has the money in hand.

PASSING COMMENT.

Things that Are Not Exactly News but Just as Interesting.

When the steam roller first came it was the custom of those in charge to place signs at either end of the block on which the roller was at work, saying "Danger, Steam Roller at Work." That precaution has not been observed of late, and horses and carriages are allowed to venture close to roller without warning.

Everybody on North avenue, turned and looked yesterday noon when they saw a file of colored men marching down that thoroughfare, headed by one of Uncle Sam's blue coat carriers. Although there are plenty of martial signs about the country Plainfield has seen little and any little military demonstration attracts considerable attention.

George Taggart seems to be getting along swimmingly with his pen and brain in New York. Mr. Taggart's clever work in a dramatic line is a regular feature of the Dramatic Mirror every week, and not infrequently his old Plainfield friends read other literary gems from his pen that impress themselves upon the minds of the great editors as being pretty good. Now, however, George has developed into a song writer. The fact that his first work in that line is a good composition is evidenced in the announcement of the New York Journal that next Sunday its musical supplement will be made up of the touching ballad, which is entitled "Charity Begins at Home." The words are set to the music of Kerry Mills, who has gained fame by writing the music to "Let Bygones be Bygones." Mr. Taggart has the best wishes of his Plainfield friends for further success in the musical realm.

The good old ordinary has grown with the evolution of the bicycle to become an uncommon a sight as it was, years ago, in its infancy. There are countless wheels to be seen on the streets every day and nobody even thinks about them as they pass by so noiselessly. The sight of a high wheel, with its queer looking handlebars and little wheel trailing in the rear, now attracts lots of attention and the pedestrians stops and look back at the wheel with its rider perched way up in the air. Last week, James B. Taylor, of West Seventh street, found a small boy in need of ready cash and with a high wheel in his possession. Taylor purchased the machine, which, when new, cost $150, for 50 cents. Since then Taylor and his friends have found an endless source of amusement in the good old ordinary. It is a Columbia, 54 inch, made ten years ago. The machine is now in fair condition, but bids fair to be a wreck in a short time. Taylor learned its peculiarities after flying over the handlebars several times. Now the other boys scrape sudden acquaintance with curbstones, neighboring trees and whatever else happens to be around.

A rather laughable incident—but not without its embarrassing features to at least one of the actors—was observed at the North Avenue station a few mornings ago. When the train arrived from New York at 8:17 o'clock a short man of light build jumped off of one of the coaches and loitered around the platform for a few minutes and then engaged in conversation with some acquaintance. When the Philadelphia train, arriving at 8:48 o'clock, rolled into the station, the man of short stature hurriedly bid his friend good-by and made a rush for the train. But he only got within a few feet of the coach when he heard the brakeman yell:

"Train for Philadelphia!"

The man halted quickly, turned and walked back towards the waiting room. It was evident that he did not want to go to Philadelphia, and had made the start for the train without knowing its destination. Just at that moment an employe of the railroad, whose duty it is to announce the destination of trains, walked by him. The latter had just called out the train inside and outside of the station, but not in stentorian tones.

"Why didn't you call out that train?" asked the short man who had made the mistake of running for it.

"I did," replied the man in the uniform.

"Well, I didn't hear you. You want to yell a little louder," said the stranger with a commanding tone.

The uniformed man looked at him as if surprised at his termerity in telling him how he should perform his duties.

"Where did you want to go, anyway?"

From the tone of the train caller's voice it was evident that he was slightly exasperated at the stranger's catechism, but the latter was not awed.

"I guess you don't know who I am, do you?" exclaimed the stranger with considerable spirit.

"No sir, I don't," was the rather brisk and unsuspecting reply.

"Well, I am H. P. Baldwin, general passenger agent of this road."

If a bolt of lightning had suddenly descended from the sunny sky and struck the latter at that moment he would not have been half as surprised and not one-tenth as much disconcerted as he was at those words.

And it was H. P. Baldwin. But the uniformed man didn't know it, and he hasn't heard the last of it yet.

Two women bicycle riders rode to this city Sunday and put up at a local restaurant for dinner. They were dressed in extreme bloomer style, short divided skirts, cap and all. When they went to the toilet room to rid their hands and faces of some of the dirt which they had picked up on their ride, the laundress, who mistook them for males, insisted at first upon their using the men's wash room, and raised quite a laugh before the attendant could be made to see her mistake.

Closing Exercises at St. Mary's School.

The closing exercises of St. Mary's School will be held in St. Mary's School Hall Thursday and Friday evenings. The programme Thursday evening will include a drama, "Which is Which," or "The Heir of London," and a farce, "A Public Benefactor," besides several other numbers. Friday evening, "The Troubles of the Little Folks" and the operetta, "A Merry Company" will be given.

Granted a Pension.

General W. H. Sterling, of First place, the soldier's friend, has received word from the Pension Department at Washington notifying him that a pension of $10 per month, dating back to November, 1897, has been granted John N. VanArsdale, of 213 Spooner avenue. General Sterling conveyed the good news to Mr. VanArsdale and refused, as he always has, to accept the fee of $10 allowed by the Government.

Entertained a Dozen Friends.

Miss Esta Yaegar, of Liberty street, entertained about twelve of her intimate friends at her home last Tuesday. The time was passed in dancing, singing and having a general good time. At a late hour refreshments were served after which the guests departed well pleased with the time spent.

CYCLING COMMENT.

The interest of the small boys and the larger ones, too, was centred in a five-mile road race from Randolph road to Holly's Corner and back last night. The race was arranged by Henry Staats, of Park avenue, who gave the contestant their handicaps and also offered the only prize, a "search light" lantern, which was won by Raymond Poole. There were 20 entries, but only 14 started. They were started at intervals of half a minute a part, there being two minutes between the time the first man started and the scratch man. Their handicaps were as follows: E. Van-Lieu started at 7:03; G. Cholly, 7:03½; Edward Duck, 7:04; G. Feiring, H. Angerbauer, W. Martin, H. Martin, W. Emmons, R. McMurtry, 7:04½; C. Dodd, C. Sorenson, L. Casey, C. Westerfield and Poole, 7:05. The riders soon bunched, and kept their positions all the way around. The handicapping seemed to have been very fairly done, judging from the way the riders came in. Henry Staats started the men, and Alfred Springer was at the corner of Park avenue and the Oak Tree road, known as "Holly's Corner," to see that each rider rode to the top of the hill and turned around within the prescribed limits. On the home stretch a bunch of seven riders got together, and it was a toss-up between them to see which one would win. When near the tape the excitement was intense. Poole took the lead and crossed the line a close winner. Dodd was right behind him, and Westerfield third. The time was just thirteen minutes.

Mr. and Mrs. Jomini, of Canada, who have been living in the West End, have returned to Canada, where they will remain.

Two Ounces of Blood Daily

Two ounces of blood will fill a small wine glass, and that is the quantity of rich, red blood which is daily added to your blood vessels when you take one of Dr. Campbell's Red Blood Forming Capsuloids with each meal three times daily.

No other iron medicine will do this, because all others are unnatural or acid preparations of iron, while Capsuloids contain natural iron identical with the iron already in your blood.

You cannot take any ordinary iron medicine, because it's acid, and injures teeth, stomach and bowels; but

You can take Capsuloids, or natural iron medicine, because it contains no acid, is perfectly natural, and perfectly mild.

Infants and invalids, as well as adults, take Capsuloids without feeling them in the slightest, even though they have never been able to take any other kind of iron medicine.

What are Capsuloids? They are the natural iron called Hæmoglobin, extracted from the blood of healthy young bullocks. This natural iron is just the same as the iron in the human blood. We then enclose this dissolved natural iron in little soft pointed globes of pure gelatine. They are easily swallowed, are free from taste and smell, and their contents enter the blood within from one to three minutes after they are taken into the stomach.

Capsuloids is the greatest of all tonics for the nerves, heart, lungs, bronchial tubes, mucus membranes, liver, bowels, kidneys, and especially for all monthly irregularities, when these organs are affected with blood diseases.

Capsuloids act entirely through the blood, enriching it and increasing its quantity two ounces daily. The effect upon the health, color, nerves and spirits is seen almost immediately. Think of the power and effect of adding two ounces of rich, red, new blood each day!

Many doctors have ceased using all other kinds of iron, and prescribe Capsuloids exclusively. Send for pamphlet, containing their testimonies, and local testimonials.

This is not a patent or secret medicine. It is prescribed largely by doctors.

A Prominent Physician.

A prominent New York physician in discussing the merits of Ripans Tabules with a Mercury M. D. said: "Several years ago I asserted that if one wished to become a philanthopist, and do a beneficent deed—one that would help the whole human race—nothing could be better than to procure the Roosevelt Hospital prescription, which is the basis of the Ripans Tabules, and cause it to be put up in the form of a ketchup and distributed among the poor."

Sales Increasing.

The largest retail drug store in America is that of Hegeman & Co. on Broadway in New York City. A reporter who went there to learn how Ripans Tabules were selling bought a five-cent carton and asked:

"Do you have much call for them?"

He was referred to a gentleman who proved to be the head of the department. He said:

"The sale of Ripans Tabules is constant and is increasing, due especially to the influential character of the testimonials in the daily press, and growing out of these, through the recommendation of friend to friend. Satisfaction with them is very general. When once they are begun I notice that a permanent customer for them is made. This, I believe, is through their intrinsic merit, which proves the bona fide character of the testimonials. I find them especially useful in the general run of stomach troubles."

An Elderly Lady.

An elderly lady living at Fordham Heights, a part of New York City, and who was known to be a warm advocate of Ripans Tabules for any case of liver trouble or indigestion, said to a reporter who visited her for the purpose of learning the particulars of her case: "I had always employed a physician and did so on the last occasion I took one, but at that time obtained no beneficial results. I had never had any faith in patent medicines, but having seen Ripans Tabules recommended very highly in the New York Herald concluded to give them a trial, and found they were just what my case demanded. I have never employed a physician since, and that means a saving of $2 a call. A dollar's worth of Ripans Tabules lasts me a month, and I would not be without them for twice if it were my last dollar." At the time of this interview there were present two daughters who specially objected to their mother giving a testimonial which would parade her name in the newspapers, but to do this the elder lady argued: "There may be other cases just like mine, and I am sure it will be a pleasure in recommending the Tabules to any one afflicted as I was. If the telling about my case in the papers enables some other person similarly affected to be as greatly benefited as I have been, I see no objection." The daughters, after thinking it over, felt about the benefit she had received, decided she was quite right.

TEN FOR FIVE CENTS. RIPANS ONE GIVES RELIEF

A druggist needed considerable urging to induce him to carry a preparation which he had not made a regular drug custom—the price 5 cents. The low-priced sort, he lamented, are the poor sort—the druggist's profit is small. Ripans Tabules are an exception to the rule. The druggist wants to sell them because customers want them. One—or a single portion of one—will relieve any ordinary case of indigestion, biliousness, dizziness, sick headache, bad taste in the mouth, coated tongue, sour stomach, or bad breath. Ripans Tabules are sold at some Bigger stores and further shops. One gives relief.

BOYS What sort of start are you going to make in life? Are you going to make money and be successful business men? Or are you going to wear yourselves out in the cheerless drudgery of hard labor? Half of this depends on your parents, the other half on you.

YOUNG MAN Wealth and honors await you if you prepare yourself to take them. Most succeed WHO ARE READY. If you want to be paid a good salary you must make yourself worthy of it. There are thousands of $20 a week places begging for good men and willing to pay $1,000 to $10,000 a year for them. Why not be worth $20 a week? If you will get it—sure. The best equipment a young man can have who expects to make his own way in the world is a course in

WAR NEWS!

WILL BOMBARD SANTIAGO

American Troops Will Not Make a Direct Assault.

SAMPSON IS ORDERED TO EXTEND BLOCKADE.

Shafter Will Use His Big Guns to Reduce Santiago—The Fight Expected Shortly By Officials—Orders Sent to Sampson to Follow President's Last Proclamation—More Aid For Shafter—Insurgents Arrive at Camp.

TO BOMBARD SANTIAGO.

Shafter Favors That Method To a Direct Assault By Troops.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

Washington, June 29, 1:39 p. m.—General Shafter reports to the War Department that he had surveyed the field about Santiago and could carry the city by assault in forty eight hours.

He has decided, however, to wait until the big guns are in position and carry the city with their assistance instead of by direct assault.

TO EXTEND BLOCKADE.

Sampson Instructed to Increase Blockade According to President's Proclamation.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

Washington, June 29, 1:50 p. m.—Orders were sent to Rear Admiral Sampson this morning by the Navy Department directing him to extend the limit of the Cuban blockade, as provided by President McKinley's proclamation.

Rear Admiral Sampson has now the largest fleet of vessels under his command that was ever directed by a single officer in the United States Navy. The vessels number 107.

TO FIGHT SOON.

Army Officials Expect to Hear of Another Great Conflict Shortly.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

Washington, June 29, 1:37 p. m.—Although there is nothing in the plans of the Admistration to base an attack on Santiago within the next few days, there is a general feeling among the officials of the War Department that news of a battle similar to that of last week will shortly be forthcoming.

The opinion has foundation in the fact that Gen. Wheeler's division has moved up to a point within rifle shot of the Spanish outpost surrounding the capital.

Some anxiety is felt in relation to the Spanish reinforcements under General Pando. The subjugation of Santiago will be brought about by storming the earthworks according to the military methods of half a century ago.

In modern warfare great use will be made of Shafter's big guns landed from the transports to reduce the defences of Santiago. They will cause great havoc among the Spaniards without causing the loss of life that ultimately followed the old method.

MORE AID FOR SHAFTER.

Cruiser Yale Returns to Carry More Troops to Southern Cuba.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

Washington, June 29, 12:03 p. m.—Word has been received at the Navy Department that the auxiliary cruiser Yale has started from Baiquiri, Cuba, for Newport News, Va.

The Yale just carried a load of supplies and ammunition to Shafter's army in Cuba. The supplies were successfully landed only a few days ago.

The present mission of the Yale is to take aboard another complement of troops at Newport News, under the command of Brigadier General Garretson for service in southern Cuba.

SPANIARDS PREPARED.

Spanish are Fortifying the Different Approaches to the City of Santiago.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

Playo Deleste, Cuba, June 28, via Kingston, Jamaica, June 29, 12:54 p. m.—News was received at Cuban headquarters today from the Cuban scouts that was afterwards communicated by General Castillo to General Shafter concerning the movements of the Spaniards.

The information was to the effect that the Spaniards were strongly entrenched at Santa Ursula and Lagunas, both important entrances to Santiago.

Two heavy batteries have been erected in the two named places and heavy ordnance mounted, including the guns landed from the Spanish cruisers in the harbor.

The batteries are supported by 6,000 men, mostly veteran troops. They have erected a strong fortress and strengthened the other defences.

General Shafter has issued rigid orders that the American troops shall not engage the Spanish forces unnecessarily. The object of these orders is to keep the troops for a strong and decisive attack. It is known that the Spaniards will make a strong resistance and Shafter does not wish to have his men tired out beforehand.

MORE INSURGENTS.

Half Clothed and Nearly Starving Cubans Join American Forces.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

Siboney via Playa Delecte, Cuba, June 28, via Kingston, Jamaica, June 29, 12:54 p. m—Two thousand insurgents of Garcia's command arrived today on the troop ship Loena from Asecradoes under command of Sanchez.

The majority of these insurgent troops were half naked while in some instances they were entirely nude. They were all half famished and made ravenous attacks on the provisions that were supplied them. They said that they had had little to eat for months.

Army in Good Health.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

Washington, June 29, 12:12 p. m.—Major General Shafter reports to the War Department that the health of the army in Cuba is remarkably good. No deaths have occurred among the wounded at the battle of Laquaisina. The graves of the dead at that battle have been so marked as to make identification sure.

Red Cross Yacht Sails for Cuba.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

New York, June 29, 12:10 p. m.—The yacht Red Cross departed from this port this noon for Cuba. She carries large medical supplies and a corps of physicians for Red Cross service in Cuba. The yacht is owned by

BRAVE SOLDIER ONCE; NOW STURDY CITIZEN.

Interesting Sketch of the Career of Commander Smith.

ALWAYS ACTIVE IN G. A. R.

HAS A BROAD ACQUAINTANCE WITH NEW JERSEY VETERANS.

Born in Freehold and Enlisted in the Army in 1863—Engaged in Many Encounters, Always Acting Bravely—Once Shot From Under His Horse—Many Years Prominent Borough Citizen.

William C. Smith, who was elected Grand Commander of the G. A. R, of New Jersey at the annual State encampment at Long Branch last Friday, was born in Freehold, Monmouth county, but has resided in Plainfield for the last thirty years.

He enlisted in Company F, Second New Jersey Cavalry, at Freehold, August 10th, 1863, and was discharged November 1st, 1865, after having served in some of the toughest engagements of the Civil War. In all he was engaged in thirty nine battles or skirmishes with the Confederates, and was once shot from under his horse while crossing the Tallahassee river and so badly injured that he had to be sent to a hospital at Mound City, Mo., from which place he went back to service before he was actually fitted to do so. He was assigned to the invalid corps, but of his own free will went back to his resiment and fought with his comrades until he was discfiarged at Natchez, Tenn., under order 76 of the Department of the Mississippi. Among some of the important en*gagements he took part in was those* at Fairfax, Va., Wahatchie, Tenn., Lulia, Miss., Jackson, Tenn., Aberdeen, Miss., Tallahatchie, Miss., Bolivar, Tenn.

At the close of the war Commander Smith returned to Freehold to take up the peaceable pursuit of a mason and building contractor. He came to Plainfield a few years later. Here in a short time he built up a large and prosperous contracting business and has ever since been identified in the active business in Plainfield.

Commander Smith is a man who regards his citizenship as of great importance, and has always taken a great interest in local affairs. For several years he was treasurer of the township of North Plainfield. After the borough of North Plainfield was formed he was one of its Councilmen, in which position, as chairman of the street committee, he did excellent service in improving the municipality. In politics he is a Republican.

Ever since the close of the war the military spirit has always been prominent in his character. When Plainfield was honored with Company E., Third New Jersey National Guards, Mr. Smith was captain of the company. At that time Company E was one of the best drilled companies in the National Guard, the credit for which belonged solely to Mr. Smith.

In G. A. R. circles, both local and State, he has been a prominent figure for several years and his elevation to his present high position is but the most natural result in choosing for the highest office in the State a man who is excellently fitted for the position by experience and ability. He was one of the first members of Winfield Scott Post, No. 73, of Plainfield, when it was organized December 13, 1882, and since then has held nearly every office in the gift of the post, being its commander for two years. He has been officer of the day for the post for several years, and a member of the council of administration almost from the very start.

No G. A. R. man in the State has probably a broader acquaintance among the members of the order in New Jersey than Mr. Smith. For two years past he has been chief of the staff to the Department Commander, and in this position he has been in constant personal communication with every post in the State several times a year. He has also visited nearly every post at least once during his term as chief of the staff, and in this made many acquaintances that developed considerable support in securing for him the honorable position to which he has been elected. In this way also he is eminently fitted himself to know the needs of the Grand Army throughout the State better than any other member of it.

Grand Lodge to Meet Here.

The grand lodge, Sons of Temperance, will meet in this city July 27th. The session will be an all-day one, and representativesf rom all over the State will be present.

—The contract has been awarded for flagging Hillside avenue from Watchung to Prospect avenues.

THE 4TH IN PLAINFIELD.

THERE WILL BE NO PUBLIC CELEBRATION HERE THIS YEAR.

The Unusual Patriotic Feeling Will Be Expressed In a Greater Amount of Burnt Gunpowder — Large Sales.

Plainfield will not see any active public celebration of Independence Day next Monday. The one experience of three years ago in arranging a public celebration for the day was sufficient. As a result, the Fourth of July will be a quiet day in Plainfield. Quiet—no, not quiet, for the youth of the city is overflowing with patriotism this year that will find vent in the burning of gunpowder and the kindred other noisy manner of celebrating the day. There will be no public celebration in Plainfield. The only outdoor event of the day open to the public will be the two baseball games. The evening will see, however, several handsome exhibitions of fireworks. The Park Club and the Hotel Hunterston will be the principal ones, each of which will be followed by a dance.

Westfield, Dunellen and Bound Brook are all preparing for active celebrations and will probably attract many Plainfielders. Athletic games, bicycle races, baseball, speeches and sundry other attractions will form part of the different celebrations.

It is evident already that the year will see an unusually noisy Independence Day. Never has the demand for firecrackers, fireworks and cheap cannon powder been so great. The manufacturers of blank cartridges report *a demand for blanks far in ex*cess of what they had supposed. As a result most of the supply has been contracted for and those who came late have suffered.

The local dealers have noticed the increase although the trade in fireworks and firecrackers has scarcely commenced. Those who usually wait until the last moment before purchasing may find themselves without any it they do so this year.

ENGAGED IN GOOD WORK.

Supplying Flowers to Hospitals—To Entertain Poor City Girls.

An executive meeting of the Local Christian Endeavor Union was held Tuesday in the Y. M. C. A. This was the last meeting until September. The president spoke of the work done during the past month. The outlook for fresh air work during July and August is very good.

A branch of the national fruit and flower guild was formed under the auspices of the Local Union, with Mrs. W. S. Lewis president and Miss Florence G. Hawkins secretary and treasurer. The guild procures transportation free for fruit, flowers and jellies to any of the hospitals or missions in New York. This free transportation is given by the express companies. The Park Avenue Baptist, Seventh Day Baptist, First Baptist, First Presbyterian and First Church of Christ joined the guild Tuesday, and the other churches are expected to join soon.

The fresh air home for girls has been given up, and instead the members of the Union have decided to take young girls into their own homes a week or ten days at a time. This plan was adopted because the Union lacked means to rent a house, and to go to the expense necessary to maintain it.

HAS IT IN FOR THE POLICE.

A Boisterous Individual Didn't Like His Night in the Rookery.

"I'll tell you one thing, Judge, the police 'll have to be careful how they tackle me again," said Malon Titus, an elderly man, after City Judge DeMeza Wednesday had fined him $5 for being drunk yesterday.

Titus's threat was not heeded and he went stumbling on towards home.

The prisoner was ejected from the cafe of the City Hotel Tuesday by the bartender into the hands of Officer McCue, who locked him up in a cell after a hard tussle, for Titus, although "too sick to remember anything," as he said Wednesday, determined not to be taken to the lockup.

What trick he will play upon his captors next time he is arrested remains to be seen, but it is very evident that he has something up his sleeve.

Sailboat Upset and Boy Drowned.

While sailing on Prince's Bay Saturday afternoon, Larry Towsley and Robert Wilmot, of Metuchen, and Wm. Bennett, of Iselin, were upset by the squall that preceded the storm. Bennett was struck in the face by the boom and sank immediately. His body was recovered Sunday evening. He was a cousin of Robert M. Clark, the well-known Plainfield lawyer. The funeral was held Tuesday and Mr. Clark was in attendance.

DISLOCATED HIS HIP.

WILLIAM MOORE'S WEIGHT WAS TOO MUCH FOR THE LEADER PIPE

The Pipe Broke and Moore Fell Fourteen Feet—Taken to the Hospital—His Injuries are Not Very Serious.

William Moore, aged 42 years, residing at 479 West Front street, was taken to the hospital Tuesday evening about 9:30 o'clock suffering from a dislocated hip.

Early in the evening Mr. Moore was on the roof of his house cleaning out the leader pipe. He allowed his weight to rest considerably on the pipe, and the result was that it broke. He fell a distance of about fourteen feet and the hip bone was dislocated. The injured man's family heard the noise and they hastened to learn the cause. They found Moore lying prostrate on the ground and unable to move or get up.

They communicated with the family physician and later the man was taken to the hospital in the ambulance, where he received proper treatment. Moore's injury is not considered at all serious, and it will only be a question of a short time when he will be able to leave the hospital.

VISIT OF GEOLOGISTS.

EARTH'S FORMATION TO BE STUDIED BY SCIENTIFIC MINDS.

Harry H. Webb, of Westervelt Avenue, Will Conduct the Party to Several Points of Interest in This Vicinity.

Plainfield and vicinity will be invaded by a party of scientific minds July Fourth when the New York Mineralogical Club will come here to visit the Watchung mountains, Washington Valley, Scotch Plains and Fan *wood to study the geological and min*eralogical formations to be found in this section.

The party will be guided by Harry H. Webb, of Westervelt avenue, this city, who is a member of the club, and a thorough student of the subjects to which it is devoted. Mr. Webb has made an exhaustive study of geological and mineralogical formations through this section and is well-pre*pared to explain the interesting fea*tures of the various spots selected by him to be visited.

The party will arrive here from New York on the 9:34 a. m. train and will board a trolley car on the Somerset street line, and at the terminus will disembark to walk to Wilson's stone quarry. Mr. Webb has prepared an interesting circular descriptive of the places to be visited. One paragraph prepared by Mr. Webb reads:

"Wilson's quarry in the trap ridge has produced excellent specimens of green and white prehnite, some stilbite and calcite. Copper occurs at the juncture of the trap and sandstone. Interesting glacial phenomena are to be seen. A sandstone quarry at Washingtonville, half a mile distant, may also be visited, where dendrite has been found. The region is very picturesque, and it is advisable to take a camera or field glass."

During the day the excursionists will be entertained at dinner by Mr. Webb.

VOLUNTEERS ERECT A TENT.

This Summer it is Located on the Corner of Church and East Second.

The American Volunteers were so successful in their tent services last summer in the borough that they decided to erect the tent again this year, this time in the vacant lot on the corner of Church and East Second streets.

The tent was raised Tuesday and will be formally opened for services Saturday night. The tent is a large one, seating 850 people, and no doubt the efforts of the Volunteers will be as well rewarded in this part of the city as they were in the borough.

Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock the Sacrament will be observed, Rev. A. A. Phelps officiating. July 4th a flag raising and ice cream festival will be held from 4 until 10 o'clock. A large flag will be raised at 5 o'clock with appropriate ceremonies, and there will be speaker and music. Commander Booth and Colonel Lindsay, the latter from Philadelphia, are expected here some time during July.

Accidentally Shot Himself.

Richard Rudd, of Clinton avenue, accidentally shot himself in the left hand Tuesday while handling a revolver. The mechanism was out of order, and while trying to adjust it the pistol snapped. The bullet was only of twenty-two calibre, and did not penetrate very deep.

Masonic Degree Conferred.

The Master Mason degree was conferred on one candidate at the meeting of Anchor Lodge, F. & A. M., held Tuesday. There was a very large attendance of members. The lodge will call off for the summer months in a short time.

MET TWO HOBO ROBBERS

A FORLORN-LOOKING PEDDLER TELLS A THRILLING TALE.

Peter Rote Says Two Tramps Attacked Him on a Train and Stole His Stock—In City Court Yesterday Morning.

Peter Rote is the name of a poor unfortunate from Lancaster, Pa., one of whose eyes has been put out by a flying nail. He faced City Judge DeMeza Wednesday and told a thrilling tale of being robbed by two tramps on a coal train Tuesday night.

Rote said that he was a peddler, and left New York Tuesday with two "fake" gold watches and a few trinkets which he intended to take out into the country and sell. He also had a five dollar bill in his pocket.

Rote boarded a coal train at Bayonne, and just as the train was passing through this city Tuesday two rough-looking tramps climbed over the cars to where he was and while one held him the other struck him a blow in the face and, holding a knife close to his eye, ordered him to keep quiet or they would kill him.

They took his watches, trinkets and money and then left him. Rote climbed off of his car at Dunellen, and says that he notified the authorities there of his loss, but this they deny.

He then came to this city, reported what had occurred to Sergeant Kiely, who locked him up for safe keeping until yesterday. Central Railroad Detective Dougherty was put on the case, and Rote will be held until tonight to see whether any trace of the alleged robbers can be found.

Rote claims to have trouble with his good eye, has a partly healed cut on his throat, which looks as if it might have been inflicted by himself, and altogether presents a forlorn appearance.

A SALAMAGUNDI PARTY.

Mr. and Mrs. G. F. Meillick Entertain in Honor of Guests.

Mr. and Mrs. George Phelps Meillick gave a salamagundi party Monday evening at their home on LaGrande avenue, in honor of Miss Anne Meillick, of Montclair, and Miss Marion Hartley, of New York. The games at the different tables were "shouting cities," anagrams, jack-straws, tiddledy-winks and slap jack.

The first prizes were won by Miss Ethel Bowen and Frank Frost. Miss Martha Tracy and Miss Hartley tied for the booby prize, and Miss Tracy won it on the play-off. Carl Pfeiffer won the men's booby prize. After the contest was over the guests spent the remainder of the evening in dancing on the broad piazzas.

Those present were the Misses Brady, Ethel Bowen, Katheryn Ryder, Elsa Pfeiffer, Anna Miller, Sarah Schuyler and Martha Tracy, and Messrs. Frank Frost, R. A. Beebe, Henry W. Brower, Charles S. Cook, Carl Pfeiffer, Henry V. Ryder, George S. Ryder Van B. Schuyler, Russell Burke and Harry Patton.

PRIMARY TEACHERS PICNICED.

A Pleasant Day Spent at Mrs. F. O. Herring's Cottage.

About thirty-five members of the Primary Teachers' Union of this city assembled on *Johnston's Drive Tues*day and enjoyed themselves during the day in various ways. It was the annual picnic and the usual good time was a result. Owing to the heavy rain early in the morning it was impossible for the members to have their spread on the ground, and through the kindness of Mrs. F. O. Herring, her cottage on the mountains was used for the occasion. Games of all kinds were played and the time passed all too quickly. A bountiful lunch was served which the members fully enjoyed. It was late in the afternoon when the happy crowd returned to Plainfield, but all agreed having spent a most enjoyable day.

For a Public Library Flag.

Many have suggested that at this time particularly the Public Library should display a flag. In response to this suggestion a movement is now on foot to raise by individual subscriptions the necessary amount for a suitable flag for the purpose. Certainly the City Library should have a fine flag. The size and quality of this will, however, depend upon the patriotism and generosity of Plainfield citizens. Small or large amounts will be received for this purpose at the office of The Daily Press and at the Public Library.

Escaped the Fire

E. H. Booth and wife, of 630 Central avenue, were stopping at the Clifton House, Niagara Falls, and had just sent their trunks to the railroad station when the fire broke out that destroyed that famous hotel. They say it would have been terrible had it happened at night instead of 10 o'clock in the morning.

A TWILIGHT WEDDING AT END OF JUNE DAY.

Babcock-Phillips Nuptials Celebrated Tuesday Night.

A PRETTY HOME MARRIAGE.

EPISCOPAL SERVICE USED TO MAKE THE LIFE UNION.

Home of the Bride, Miss Elizabeth M. Phillips, Was Charmingly Decorated for the Occasion—The Wedding Party Made a Handsome Scene—The Groom is a New York Business Man.

The home of Mr. and Mrs. James Rushmore Phillips, of West Front street, was the scene Tuesday of one of the prettiest of June weddings, when their daughter, Miss Elizabeth M. Phillips, became the wife of Juan Acres Babcock, of New York, in the presence of a number of admiring relatives and friends.

The ceremony was performed at 7:30 o'clock by Rev. W. M. Downey, rector of the Church of the Redeemer, the beautiful Episcopal service being used. Miss Florence Pierson, of this city, presided at the piano and executed the wedding march. While the march was being played the bridal party entered the parlor. The flower girl, Miss Florence Phillips, sister of the bride, preceded the party. She was prettily gowned in pink and carried a beautiful basket of flowers. Following her was the maid of honor, Miss Georgia James, of New York, gowned in pink organdie. She carried sweet peas. The bride came next leaning on the arm of her father, who gave her away in marriage. She was charmingly gowned in white organdie, trimmed with ribbons. She also wore a veil and carried bridal roses. The groom and his best man, J. L. Peck, of Pittston, Pa., met the party at the altar, where the officiating clergyman stood ready to receive the entire bridal group.

The home was very prettily decorated with daisies, ferns and palms, and especially attractive were the decorations in the parlor where the ceremony was performed.

Following the ceremony a reception was held and the young couple were kept busy receiving the congratulations of the friends. All wished them success and happiness through life. A bountiful supper was served during the evening, while excellent music added very much to the enjoyment of the occasion. At an opportune time Mr. and Mrs. Babcock left the house to enjoy a three weeks wedding trip. They will first go to St. Lawrence county, N. Y., where they will visit Mr. Babcock's relatives. From there they will go to the Thousand Islands and the Adirondacks, and on their they will remain for the summer at a suburban summer resort on the New Haven Railroad. In the fall they will go to housekeeping.

Mr. Babcock is employed by the firm of F. J. Barger & Co., commission merchants, of Warren street, New York. He is very popular among a large circle of friends. His bride is also a highly-esteemed young woman who has a host of friends who will wish them health and her husband a prosperous journey through life.

Among those who attended the wedding were the following:

Mr. and Mrs. P. H. Acres, Miss Place, of Mamaroneck, N. Y.; Miss M. Dowdeswell, M. B. Dowdeswell, A. J. Dowdeswell, Mr. and Mrs. Hallino, Nelson Sherman, Chauncey Mitchell, of Brooklyn; Mr. Douglass, of Jersey City; F. C. Barger, Miss Barger, the Misses Piper, Miss James, Warren Silsbe, of New York; Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Dresser, of Bloomfield; Mr. and Mrs. J. O. Stevens, Mr. and Mrs. James Rogers, Mrs. Davis, Miss Davis, Miss Bertha LaRue, Mr. and Mrs. Horace Huff, James McGee, Adam Neuman, Rev. and Mrs. W. M. Downey, William Moore, Miss Ella Gardiner, Miss Florence Smith, Captain G. M. Phillips and wife, Miss Warmington, Mrs. H. N. Smith, Miss Florence Pierson, Miss Stevens, Clifford Pierson, of Plainfield.

There was a very large collection of useful and costly gifts received by the bride and groom. The maid of honor received a gift of a valuable stick pin from the bride, while the best man received a similar present from the groom. Among the gifts received was a costly silver service from a celebrated whist club of Brooklyn, of which the groom is the president.

Cut Dogs.

If you are thinking of buying a carpet, or if you will need one this fall, it will pay you to examine the Brussell carpets on sale at I. H. Beahm's this week at 45 cents a yard. They are all new designs and 75 cents would be considered very cheap for them.

THE LITTLE MOTHER.

BY DELLA M. HARRIS.

She was a feeble old dame, and the driver, impatient of delay, grumbled incessantly, being obliged to hold the door of the stagecoach open for a long time while she was assisted to enter. The occupants shivered as the stiff November gale rushed in. Several disrespectful men swore audibly. Everybody wondered why one so infirm should venture out in such inclement weather.

She was enveloped in a long cloak, the hood drawn close over her head. A thick, black veil completely hid her features. She leaned heavily upon a stout cane.

She was seated beside a handsome, thoughtful looking youth who had offered her his assistance. Before leaving the stage, the maid who accompanied her turned to the youth.

"Hast thou any sisters, sir?" she asked, and then blushed very red, and looked perplexed.

"Yes, mistress, I have," he answered.

"Hast—hast thou a—a mother?"

"I have a mother too, mistress."

"Then wilt thou take charge of my little mother?"

"That will I with exceeding pleasure."

Now why didn't the lass place her mother under the protection of that large, strong looking officer, the worthy Captain Lowell? Mayhap his buckles were not so bright, nor his cloak so fine, as those of the youth. Who can fathom a woman's motive? Not I, in good sooth.

The stage jolted on, and it was with difficulty that the men kept their places. The little woman braced herself with her stick, and kept her seat after a fashion that surprised them.

"Prithee, take my arm, little mother," Arthur Comstock, for that was the name of the youth, had suggested. The old dame vouchsafed no other response than to place her cane with more firmness.

"In truth she hath pluck," Captain Lowell whispered in Comstock's ear.

Then they fell to talking about the uprising among the Creeks.

"Dost see any danger in store for us, captain?" Comstock inquired.

"Heaven forbid an attack ere we get to Marion! We are almost out of ammunition, and must needs get supplies there."

"They say Thunder Hawk holds council with the English officer?"

"Ay, and it bodes no good for the colonists. 'Tis whispered that the devils skulk about and attack muleteers and stages. I told the driver it were well he go armed, even though we be few, and to wait for powder, but that he burst out laughing, and told me to look to myself, he was not afraid. The young upstart! 'Twere most unfortunate our trusty driver be stricken with fever."

"How—how send we reach Marion," Comstock said. "Are you cold, little mother?" for she was all of a shiver.

She dropped her cane and clung to his arm. The act went straight to his heart. Tenderly he wrapped her cloak close about her.

The road ran smoother now, and one by one the men went off to sleep. The captain and Comstock remained vigilant. Soon the little mother released her hold, and her deep breath told that she was asleep. Like a tired child, she leaned her head over against Comstock's shoulder.

"'Tis not a romantic situation, methinks," the captain said with a laugh. "Prithee, fancy the old dame be the delightful creature you told me of a few months since."

Comstock shook his head.

"'Twere well to have a lively imagination, my lad. Has aught come between you?"

"Only little note saying she loved me not, but another," he burst out. "Captain, many a time hath she lain her head on my shoulder and whispered, 'Arthur, this is my place till death us do part.' 'Twas an ill day when I met her."

"Yet you would have it she loved you only, when I warned you against these pretty playthings. Haply, Comstock, you are learning your lesson early. Much older was I when it came to me. How long since thou didst receive the note?"

"A month, as the world reckons time."

A smothered sigh came from behind the veil.

"Captain," whispered Lowell Comstock, "I deem it best to raise her veil, else I fear she may smother."

He was about to make good his intention when his hand was stayed. With yells as fierce and bloodthirsty that it seemed the demons of the whole universe were suddenly loosed, the Indians sprang from the bushes and began firing at the stagecoach.

Every man leaped to his feet.

"Great God! The Creeks have attacked us!" came from their pale lips.

Above the clatter of the heavy wheels, they could hear the driver lashing the horses.

"Verily, the devils are coming," the captain shouted. "They think us unarmed. I have a few charges, and shall use them, I promise you, when I see my vantage."

Hands and feet forward. Crack! Crack! Two more savages dropped. With renewed yelling the fiends rushed onward. Two more fell beneath the captain's bullets ere he flung down his rifle.

"'Tis all I have," he said. "Heaven pity us, and grant that driver and horses hold out till we reach yonder town!"

Suddenly the stage stopped, and the men who were not crouching were thrown to the floor. Comstock, with the old dame clinging to him, was dashed against the side of the stage. Some one bawled that the driver was making for the woods, and there well for the rest to do the same. A moment afterward, no one remained save the captain, Comstock and the little mother.

Captain Lowell sprang up.

"The fool hath set the brake," he said in hurried tones. "Comstock, if I can but reach the seat, we are saved. Nay," for the youth was about to protest, "no one wants you. See, she hath fainted."

Was it only a few minutes? To the listener within it was an hour. Was that a cry of pain that sounded above the whizzing of bullets, and the yells of the savages? Or was it only a grating sound as the brake was loosed?

The vehicle began to move. Faster, faster it went, till it seemed to be flying.

Arthur Comstock sought to revive the little mother. He threw back the thick veil, and oh, God! it was the white face, the face of Marion at last! Safe! When the jolly host of the Boar's Head beheld the pale face of the driver, and noted that his left arm hung helpless to his side, he threw down his pipe and cried out,—

"Good Lord deliver us! What's the matter?"

With his good right hand the captain beckoned him to open the door of the stagecoach.

"Good Lord deliver us!" he burst out again. "Are they both dead? Here, you men, lift out the youth while I carry in the maid. That's right, my beauty! Open your blue eyes."

Meanwhile, Captain Lowell had looked at the fine, pale face of the girl, and turned whiter than ever.

"Yea, 'tis as I thought," he said.

"You must have your wound dressed, you noble fellow." The surgeon was saying. "How you managed your frightened horses I know not. And with one hand, too."

Captain Lowell answered naught. He only followed the surgeon in a dazed sort of way.

When Comstock came to his senses, he raised himself and looked about him.

"I pray you where is she? Where is Helen?" he asked.

Captain Lowell came forward. His arm was in a sling.

"Ay, Comstock," he said in his hearty way, "the little mother was a *pretty maid, after all. Your sweet*heart, too, I take it. You could not have sunshined her better had you known it; much shaken as she, and much frightened, but safe. Comstock," coming nearer, "I would tell you all I know, and spare the maid. I was unjust. She was true to you, though it seemed not so. What if I told you now I—I have from the man who would woo her, and asked for her hand. That lazy nigger boy gave the note she wrote him over in your hands, and it were grieved you much. The—the other would come to you again. She was no fickle maid, she said, and had answered him for aye in the letter. She left him trying to tell her he had received it not. He never knew who the other suitor was until—until—it matters not now. Comstock, forever—I needs must go to take command of my men. Heaven bless you and make you happy!" And he was gone.

"And so you set out to find your humble servant after the boy made known his error," Arthur Comstock said that night, as he sat alone with his sweetheart, his arm around her, she leaning her head on his shoulder. "Prithee, darling, why go in disguise?"

"I deemed it more prudent, and safer."

"How didst happen to find me?"

"By mere chance. Sarah, my maid, saw you get into the stage. Acting, I take it, on an impulse, we followed. She put me in your keeping, and took the next stage for home."

"Why not reveal yourself to me then?"

"Before the—them all? I deemed it proper to wait till we reached Marion. Besides, it were much pleasure to have me care for you so tenderly when you knew me not."

"Didst hear me tell all to the captain?"

"I was so tired I fell asleep. When I woke, you were saying, 'A month, as the world reckons time.' Then I knew you were lonely."

"Wilt tell me, dearest, who your other wooer might be? Heretofore, I had no knowledge that there was one."

"Indeed, I would gladly leave that question unanswered. But know it was none other than our saviour this day, the noble Captain Lowell."

"God forgive us both, sweetheart, for the pain we have caused him is great. He is a noble fellow, and loved you much, else he would not have asked your hand in marriage. Nor will he be cast down or dispirited, but will bear it like the hero that he is. May much love, prosperity and happiness be mine in the future."

Three months later, when Captain Lowell returned home after placing under subjection the Creeks, a great feast was spread in his honor. The captain danced gayly with all the maidens, and was envied by the good folks, who watched his every gesture in worshipful silence, that when he led forward Helen Comstock, he whispered some words in her ear and nodded toward her husband. Whereupon she blushed mightily, and looked pleased. Some, whose eyes sought Arthur Comstock's face, did say that he returned the nod with a smile. Moreover, those seated near enough heard him say, as if forgetting he was not alone,—

"Ay, the captain hath fought a great battle, and hath conquered."

As if every man, woman and child for miles around knew it not!

ART OF DIPLOMACY.

EPOCHS IN THE HISTORY OF AMERICAN REPRESENTATIVES.

The Cuban Question in the Days of Pierce's Great Secretary, William Marcy—Other Instances of Yankee Tact in Dealing With Foreign Powers.

(By Thomas Burk Grant.)

It is the common belief in States that public men in the United States better suited to office through the choice of the people are inferior diplomats to the scions of aristocracy who are usually trained from youth upwards, and for whose order the diplomatic service is one of the great perquisites of state. This was the fixed belief of the English foreign office until the Tories made the mistake of hoisting their flag in Nicaragua, and taking possession of the port of a tiny American State. They no sooner did this than they frightened out of their right minds by the peremptory reminder that there was such a thing as the Monroe Doctrine still in existence in this country. Lest we might forget the virtues of arbitration this happy means of adjusting all differences was opportunely revealed by them, and not only was arbitration meritorious in the case of Venezuela but a large and comprehensive scheme of general arbitration was so pertinaciously urged that one would suppose this country would fall apart if it were not successful.

Since then Great Britain has been to some extent cured of the erroneous belief which she formerly entertained about the improvised diplomacy of the United States.

But that the belief still holds in other quarters is evident from the Duke of Veragua's reference to the President and we shall have to teach Spain the same lesson. Even Bonaparte who was more of a democrat than the other rulers of Europe is plain from the correspondence of Eugenie and whom of Louisiana indicated that he was a sincere friend of this country, could not always repress this prevailing feeling of European court noodles. He once referred to the late Chancellor Livingston, who was hard of hearing, and to John Armstrong, his successor, who could not talk French "the United States is represented a' the French Court by deaf and dumb imbeciles." The relations of Napoleon entertained about our Ambassadors extended also to the statesman for whom the Ambassador spoke, usually the Secretary of State. And whenever as ney or Sherman outwitted his diplomatic foes, or his high and mighty protestante European brother he was charged with using the language of bounce and of braggadocia, which the superior nature of the foreigners did not pretend to quite understand. Thus it went for years, and parried the thing blow; and the practice of this form of dissimulation was in his view one of the fine points of a diplomacy that Andrew Jackson scotched in his day, but which Cleveland and Olney McKinley and Sherman have made impossible in the relations of the United States with the chancelleries of Europe. Correspondence between the United States and European foreign offices will in future be something more than merely elegant phrasing and no European statesman like Lord Salisbury or the late Lord Granville will again need five months to answer the strictly business like letter of an American Secretary of State. We have Americanized foreign offices.

Among those statesmen who have done something to distinguish themselves in this line in former perilous times are a trio whose achievements present events seem to recall—Clayton, Marcy and Seward. John M. Clayton, the first of these was General Zachary Taylor's Secretary of State. It is to him we are indebted for the Clayton-Bulwer treaty which was in 1856 intended as a defense of our rights in the Isthmus against the rampant imperialism of Lord Palmerston, who was then the terror of all Europe. It is the habit in certain quarters now to discount the services of Clayton, and to say that the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, which Mr. Blaine gave notice of our intention to abrogate, only tied American hands by recognizing the equal rights of Great Britain in the Nicaraguan Canal.

But it must be remembered that when the Clayton-Bulwer treaty was signed, the United States was rent with the rival factions of slavery and anti-slavery. While having defied Europe and Napoleon was preparing to cope with Russia in the Crimean War, or entering upon the fruits of her conquests all over the world. The question of the annexation of Texas was also occupied the country for a number of years, and a war with Mexico had just been concluded which added 500,000 square miles of territory to the Union with all the vast responsibilities such an undertaking means. Daniel Webster had in a quiet, informal way arranged the Ashburton treaty with England, adjusting the boundary between New England and Canada. The United States had also for the sake of peace surrendered the difference between the 49th parallel of latitude and 54 degrees, 40 minutes in the northwest—which difference would have now entitled us to the rich mining regions of British Columbia—and it was no mean triumph of Clayton's to so far modify the stand England's demands at a time when she had scarcely abandoned her claim to search American vessels, and when Wellington was writing to remind us—"You have won nothing yet which gives you a right to demand on principle a territorial concession." Nobody could then have forseen the marvellous imigration and subsequent development of the United States and which now make our undivided possession of the Canal a necessity to proper naval connections between both shores of the Continent in time of war.

Of course the treaty was a compromise of undoubted American rights but it was a wise one under the circumstances; for after a war over Texas the United States were in no mood to stand up to Lord Palmerston as we are fortunately now able to do in the case of Lord Salisbury.

The next statesman who overmastered the foreigner and who boldly and successfully maintained American rights was William H. Seward. Of Seward's personality and commanding position the people are fully aware. The generation which knew him first as a leader of the Senate and afterwards as Lincoln's competitor at the Chicago convention of 1860 are deeply impressed with his mighty genius in the greatest crisis of the Union. The grasp and firmness of the man are responsible for three things that have profoundly affected American history. First, the sudden dispatching of the frigate Iowa to Hampton Roads, when it became known in Washington that Lord Palmerston had troops landed in Canada, and that the Navy of England, if opportunity afforded would be used in behalf of the Confederates. Second, that stubborn Americanism which triumphed over Lord Lyons in the Trent affair, and afterwards secured the settlement of the troublesome Alabama claims. Third, the acquisition of Alaska, which was really written off by the Emperor of Russia as a graceful concession to the Monroe Doctrine, and in reciprocation of Seward's magnanimous offer to recognize Czar for the coal burned by the Russian fleet in the darkest hours of its history. Seward was probably the greatest and most feared in Europe of all our great American Secretaries of State.

But it is the Secretaryship of William L. Marcy in the administration of Pierce that has most interest at the present time and bears more directly than any other upon those stirring events through which we are now passing. The other two foreign policy of Taylor and of Fillmore who preceded him, greatly angered the masses of the American people. They were tired of a government that did police duty for Spain in Cuba. They wanted to utterly repudiate the policy of "seat, scuttle and surrender," which under the Ashburton arrangement, and the whole Oregon boundary upon the saw part of Maine absorbed in Canada forfeited lands, they had set their hearts given away on the Northwest in the Oregon contention, and having valiantly contended for "Fifty, four-forty or fight" they gave the Pierce for nature of the foreigners did not an overwhelming majority. Marcy to thus became Secretary of State determined at once on breaking Spain out of Cuba and England out of Honduras. The circumstances of Marcy's time were in some respects more like the present. Then, too, the Cubans were looking for liberation. The Order of the Lone Star Instituted in 1853 to "liberate Cuba from the despotism of Spain" was very like the Cuban League now organized in the United States for the same purpose. Then, too, Spain was busy collecting outrages on American citizens by Spanish claims of filibustering. It is the question of the destruction of the Maine to-day; it was one involving a near war with Spain in the Warrior' then, that stirred the indignation of the people. It is a striking reminiscence that there was also a division of opinion between the President and Congress, of that period, with the trifling difference that it was the President who was then anxious to make war on Spain, and it was Congress that then declined the responsibility. Just as in President McKinley's case there was Vote of Congress of the sum of $10,000,000 at the disposal of the President as a mark of confidence; and a resolution authorizing a levy of 50,000 volunteers to fight in Cuba. Finally there was an alignment of the Cuban Liberation party which so closely duplicated that of the present Grand Alliance, if we may so call it, as to be little less than wonderful how almost exactly on the lines of Marcy's day the Cuban question come up once more as a great international diplomatic problem.

There was then as now an abiding desire to stiffen the foreign policy of the country, and Marcy, who sent a naturalized Frenchman as Minister to Madrid, was the man to send to sound Spain on the delicate subject of purchasing Cuba. The Secretary of State also took a step then far in advance of to-day. It was that while the United States would do nothing to disturb the relations of Spain to Cuba, the United States "would at the same time much dislike to see Spain make use of the assistance of other powers to assert its supremacy over the island" (Wilson's Rise and Fall of Slave Power in America, 1854-61, p. 29). He also sent to Buchanan who was Minister to England, a protest about sending ships of war to our coasts as not being reciprocal to this republic; and instructed Soulé to state to the Court of Spain, that "while she remains in fact as well as in name sovereign of Cuba, she can depend upon our maintaining our duty as a neutral power, however difficult it may be." Marcy added that it "was not proposed to acquire Cuba unless the inhabitants were very generally disposed to concur in the transfer."

This was substantially the same position taken by John Quincy Adams, by Clay, by Van Buren, Polk, Webster and Calhoun. Marcy also rigidly insisted that no other power than Spain should be permitted to acquire Cuba under any pretense whatever. In 1857 the American Minister at Paris had informed the State Department of the existence of a treaty between Great Britain, France and Spain which guaranteed Cuba to Spain. Webster had formerly declared that the United States would never recognize any such treaty. Marcy now supplemented this decision by the clear inference or by the positive statement that once Spain's sovereignty became nominal in Cuba, or she refused to sell Cuba for a fair price, we were in duty bound to wrest the island from Spain if we possessed the power "upon the same principle that would justify one individual in tearing down the burning house of his neighbor if there were no other way of preventing the flames from destroying his own home."

Suddenly, however, both Marcy and the President changed their position on the whole Cuban question. This was on May 31, 1854. The people were exasperated but powerless to give effect to their deep convictions. Congress debated the question during the dog days of June, and adjourned without taking any definite action on the subject. Thus Spain escaped at that time, and the magnificent opportunity furnished by the Crimean war, in which Great Britain, France and Russia were engaged in the following year, forced this country divided on the Cuban question. The Southern states were indisposed to exhaust those forces in an attack on Spain which later on they desired to marshall in the defense of slavery." The North was also equally reluctant to admit or acquire territory that might easily strengthen the slave-holding interest in the South.

But though local jealousies thus prevented the liberation of Cuba, in 1854, the policy of Marcy was well worthy of a country, and it was one which Napoleon's Ministers, with all their ingrained acumen and natural sympathy for Spain, were unable to withstand.

The sectional divisions spared Spain a humiliation then, but made it necessary that we should in 1895 invoke the Monroe Doctrine in the case of England in Venezuela and in Nicaragua. A stiff policy is the cure for Europe every time.

England's New Vaccine Methods.

London has just recently adopted the calf-lymph for vaccinating purposes, and has prohibited by stringent regulations all other methods. In fact it was at first proposed to put into operation the French system which compels the young health doctor to take a calf with him when vaccinating and to transfer the vaccine direct from the calf to the child. The new English method is simpler for preserving the vaccine in glycerine. It seems that vaccination with calf lymph has become the habitual, if not the universal, practice in most of the Continental towns, and in many cases vaccination with human lymph is prohibited. The evidence of bacteriologists shows that the admixture of 50 per cent, solution of pure glycerine in sterilized water to calf lymph can be stored for a number of weeks and remain quite active to vaccinate.

The new method of getting the vaccine lymph is described by a London expert, as follows: "To prepare a surface for the insertion of the lymph, the right side of the animal is thoroughly washed with soap and hot water, and then shaved over an area extending between the internal edges of the fore and hind limbs and from some four or five inches below the spinal ridge to the umbilicus. The shaved area is next washed with soap and hot water, then with a hot solution of boracic acid and, finally, with plain hot water. It is afterwards dried with clean, soft cloths.

"A number of superficial incisions, each about one inch long, are then made in a direction at right angles to the long axis of the body, and about a couple of inches from one another. The incisions of the several rows are made alternately on the latest employed for the purpose has a spear-headed blade, this shape being specially recommended by M. Chambon. Over each incision a drop of glycerinated lymph is allowed to fall from a glass tube, and then rubbed in with the flat portion of the blade of the lancet. The process is carried out by one of the laboratory servants, and is a somewhat lengthy one.

"When the lymph has dried, the calf is removed from the table and taken back to its stall.

"The vaccine material is always collected on the sixth day after inoculation. To this purpose the calf has to be placed again on the table. The lymph is drawn up into a sterilized glass syringe and stored in tubes."

Laughter and Insanity.

"It is a curious fact," said a physician recently, who was a specialist in nervous diseases, "that, taken as a general rule, all lunatics laugh about twice as much as sane people.

"Laughter after a surgical operation is a symptom dreaded by doctors and nurses.

"That queer impulse to laugh which some people experience in the first moment of a sudden calamity is in reality one of the sharpest warnings of insanity that any one can receive.

"Some people fall into a habit of laughing at their own thought when alone; this should be always strictly checked, as it is an unhealthy sign, and may lead to brain trouble later on."

A Wonderful Tree.

"I know a tree," said the farmer to the learned professor, "what never had a leaf or bud, and yet there's nuts on it."

"Astounding, sir, astounding! No such remarkable tree has ever been found by the botanist. What is it?"

"A axe-tree."

THE LOCKET MAN.

BY JEAN ELGINBROD.

Babette thrust a hat pin into Marie Antoinette's thinly clad sawdust body. "I'm so lonesome," she said appealingly. But Marie Antoinette's classical china face remained stolidly indifferent. "An' we can't have any supper till mademoiselle gets those vests done. We've very much for dinner," she added reflectively.

Marie Antoinette, propped up in one corner of the little dingy, upper hall showed no sympathy. Babette rested her chin in her hands and watched the Irish children on the floor below fight over the possession of a gorgeous tomato can. The contest was not a very exciting one, and her interest soon waned. Crossing the hall she softly opened a door and looked in.

"Are they most done, mademoiselle?"

Mademoiselle Cecilia, sewing by the window, smiled bravely at the childish face above the faded brown pinafore. Then she looked at the pile of heavy vests on the chair beside her and sighed.

"Not yet, cherie," she said. "Have patience. We'll have a good supper after I get the money for them; perhaps some sweet crackers, too."

Babette nodded gaily. She closed the door again and went back to her seat on the top stair.

"We mustn't bother mademoiselle when she's so busy, an' besides it hurts her to talk,' she carefully explained to Marie Antoinette.

"An' then she'll be unchildlike eyes grew big and solemn. "An' she don't tell us 'bout the locket man' any more He's a nice man. When he was a little boy he lived right next door to mademoiselle, way off in the country."

She rocked her knees and sang part of a lullaby to Marie Antoinette, but Marie Antoinette wasn't sleepy.

Babette grew tired of the stillness and the darkness. She wondered if it was too cold to go out. She opened the door a little and looked cautiously into Mademoiselle Cecilia's tired eyes.

"We're going up to the corner, me an' Marie, to see the birds," she said. Mademoiselle nodded.

"All right, cherie, run along. Don't go any farther and come back soon."

Babette jumped into her brown hooded cape, and went down the four flights of stairs, past the Irish children, now peacefully at play, and a little Dutch baby amusing himself with a bit of string. Babette liked the little Dutch baby, and his mother made such nice spicy gingerbread men with cranberry eyes.

Out upon the street boys were playing marbles, their dirty hands blue with the cold, and the first hand-organ of the season was grinding out a wheezy dance.

Babette listened a moment, then, tucking Marie Antoinette securely under one arm, went on up the street and stationed herself contentedly before the window of a bird store. She could watch the yellow songsters for hours together, and Marie between whiles, and playing she was going to buy one, only it was so hard to decide which one was the prettiest. Sometimes she almost forgot she was only a little French waif adopted by Mademoiselle Cecilia, who lived in two rooms on the top floor of Poverty Flats, and sewed vests at nine cents a dozen. If mademoiselle might only get her voice well again! If she only had money to go to the new doctor!

Babette swallowed hard to clear her throat. She knew mademoiselle cried nights sometimes, and grew so thin and white.

Perhaps the "locket man" might make her well, but he never came. He had such a nice face, too—in mademoiselle's locket.

From a church a little further on came the sound of singing. The choir boys who were practicing for Easter chanted triumphantly:

"Break forth into joy, sing together, Ye waste places of Jerusalem."

Babette listened. Then the idea came. She peered around the corner and thought earnestly. Among so many people some of them would give her money—if she only dared to try. She might get enough to make mademoiselle's voice well again. How glad she would be!

She looked curiously up into the people's faces, then looked good. She hesitated a moment, then turned the corner and sped up the avenue.

The choir boys' chanting died away A few street venders were calling their wares, but Babette bravely took her station on the walk near the curb stone. She waited for a car to bear by, and until her little red cap. Then boldly ing it shyly out she took heart and began to sing a rollicking sailor song She knew a great many songs, and her childish voice was shrill and clear

People smiled at the odd little figure Some gave a few pennies, more passed carelessly by. Once a burly policeman strode past, but he di.. not happen to notice her.

Babette took courage. Now it was a quaint Easter carol, now a lullaby now an uneven chant. She began to grow tired, and Marie Antoinette hung head downward in a dejected fashion (She was growing hungry, too, as the afternoon faded into dusk. Mademoiselle would worry if she didn't get soon; but there was a little money in the cap!

Again she scanned the people's faces. Perhaps that pretty lady coming would give something. She hitched Marel Antoinette into a more respectable position, and began a love song mademoiselle used to sing.

Over and over again she words, "I've sped me back to thee, dear heart—to thee." But the pretty lady didn't give anything. No one seemed to hear it. A big dog splashed down the little dark face, and she wiped it away with Marie Antoinette's sprigged calico skirt.

Suddenly some one touched her on the shoulder.

"Where did you learn that song?"

Babette looked up into the brown eyes bent upon her. She noticed the pointed beard and curly hair and a light came into her eyes.

"Why," she said, "it's the 'locket man'!"

The locket man smiled faintly.

"Who's the 'locket man'?" he said.

"Why, it's you—it's Richard, you know, in the locket, in mademoiselle's locket. You're the little boy she used to live in the country 'bout. We're dopted, me an' Marie."

"What are you begging this way for? Mademoiselle must earn a good deal of money singing," he said harshly.

Babette looked up into his face.

"Oh, but she sews vests now, an' we don't have nice things any more, an' she cries lots of nights. She's lost her voice, you know."

"Lost her voice—Cecilia?"

Babette nodded wearily.

"An' we need it to get money, an' they couldn't make her well aagin, an' we come to Poverty Flats, an' there's a doctor now who'll cure her, only all her money's gone—an' I'm so hungry—"

Babette's tired little voice broke. He looked down at her.

"Come," he said, "take me home with you!"

Babette took hold of his outstretched hand.

"Yes," he said confidently, "it'll be all right now."

* * * * * *

Mademoiselle Cecilia, sewing by the little window that looked out over backened roofs and tall chimneys, cried a little to herself that afternoon. She wondered what was going to become of her—and Babette. If she only hadn't Babette! But she had taken the waif in days of prosperity; the little one was such a loyal friend and the poorhouse was a lonely place for the orphan. Perhaps it would be better if she had let the child go. There one was sure of something to eat and a place to sleep, at least, and she was the next step to starvation.

She thought of the dear old days when her father was alive, teaching French in the country academy—when Richard Hemingway lived just across the garden. What good times they had together—but here everything was different after that. She had the inherited Legrand pride and independence. She would be no man's portionless bride.

She did not tell Richard that—she knew he would not listen. She had slipped quietly away to the city with her little stock of money, and a friend of her father's had helped her on to success. In the height of her prosperity, after she had taken Babette, she read of Richard's departure to a Western State in the interest of a mining concern, and for a while her heart had failed her. What if he should never come back—or something should happen that he would never know it was for love, for struggling and working—for him, and not for fame?

Then she lost her voice, and she knew it was the end of all her dreams. She fought bravely, but little by little her money drifted away and her voice did not come back.

Ah, well—she did not like to think of that time.

She brushed the bitter tears from her tired eyes and bent to her sewing. To-morrow was Easter Sunday. She wondered how the old farm house looked, and the garden; the marsh would soon be golden with cowslips, the apple trees heavy with pink-hearted blossoms, great clumps of violets would hide by the straggling rail fence —and pure-faced anemones She could almost see them

She thought of the days that were coming, the dusty, smothering, summer days when the burning sun would beat at the window and upon the roof; the long nights when the great purple shadows rising ominously from the heated walks brought sickness, perhaps death, to the crowded tenement.

She looked at the sky now, now window. Daylight was giving place to dusk. Shadows lurked in the lowcelled corners. Where could Babette be?

The door opened and some one stepped into the room.

"I'm glad you've come back, cherie," said mademoiselle, not looking up.

"Cecilia, dear heart, don't look up. Wait!"

She started to her feet with a cry of fright and put out her hands blindly.

"Dick, oh Dick!"

Then she forgot her lost voice, her poverty, her independence, and went into his arms like a child. And from the threshold she heard Babette saying in her childish, tired voice,—

"It's the 'locket man'—it's Richard. Are you glad, mademoiselle?"

THE VOLTA BLOWN UP

COL. COLT SUPERVISED THE REMARKABLE EXHIBITION.

Forty Thousand Saw the First Explosion By the Aid of Electricity—The Secretary of War Was Present in Castle Garden.

The civilized world had a hearty laugh at the unique proposal that some one in authority arrange a naval battle between the United States and Spain outside the harbor of New York. It was received as the suggestion of a humorist. And yet there is no reason why a fierce encounter between the naval fleets would not furnish a grand spectacular demonstration in comparison with which yacht races would be the tamest of pastimes. The crowds who would take all risks in order to witness such an engagement would be unparalleled. To-day we consider it ultra-sensational to have two engines run into each other to show how terrible a railroad collision may be, and if the crowds that visit a wreck long after it has taken place be an index to the public appetite, fully half of New York's two millions are needed to fill the water to see a real naval battle.

Fifty-six years ago over 40,000 people witnessed the explosion of a steamer in New York harbor by Colonel Colt. This was one of the great events of sub-marine history, and in these comparatively quiet times caused the adjournment of Congress and the suspension from his duties of no less a personage than the Secretary of War.

Though Robert Fulton was one of the first improvers of the torpedo, it is not generally known that Samuel Colt, of the Colt revolver fame, was the father of the modern submarine battery in the days of President Tyler. Indeed the use of torpedoes in war down to the days of Tyler was regarded with the same nameless feeling of horror as that which strikes are produced for three hundred years in England. In was considered an inhuman invention due to "water-worms, fire-devils, and submarine assassins." Fulton himself was described by a squeamish writer in the Naval Chronicle, as "a crafty, murderous ruffian." But President Tyler took a different view of the submarine battery. He had an appropriation of $17,000 made to Colt for the perfection of his invention under the following circumstances.

The Government placed a schooner at Colt's disposal in August, 1842, to experiment upon on the Potomac. The President, General Winfield Scott and the heads of the various Departments in Washington took a day off to see Colt blow up the vessel in her. He destroyed the schooner from an observation tower on the banks of the Potomac while five miles distant; a feat which was then considered a most unparalleled an extraordinary triumph of science. He asserted that he could explode a shell under water at a distance of ten miles by the same methods, and it was in order to produce such a feat that Congress voted the appropriation.

Two months later, October 18, 1842, Colt's battery produced a still more notable effect in New York Harbor in the presence of 40,000 citizens, who went down the Bay to see it with as much interest as they now would go to see a yacht race.

It is worth reproducing the report made in the Evening Post of October 19, 1842, of this event, not only to show the entire success of the experiment and the manner of reporting the events of that period, but to contrast the space afforded and the utter absence of that vivid description with a similar spectacular event of the present day journalism:

"A vast multitude assembled yesterday afternoon to witness the explosion of Colt's Submarine Battery placed under a vessel of 260 tons. The North Carolina, seventy-four, about four o'clock gave a salute of thirteen guns. Immediately afterwards the signal for the explosion was given. The vessel rose bodily out of the water and then separated into fragments which were thrown about seventy feet in the air. The next moment nothing was seen of her except a few pieces of the wreck which were floating on the water and of which the boats lying near hastened to possess themselves. The Secretary of War was present in Castle Garden."

The name of the vessel was the brig "Volta." The experiment was performed under the auspices of the American Institute, while Colonel Colt applied the electric spark from a battery "on board of the revenue cutter "Swing." It is also noteworthy, en passant, that other papers like the "Morning Courier and Inquirer," did not give a single line to this phenomenal triumph of American science; though the "Courier" of the next day gave a whole column to a foreign dispatch relating to a fire in Liverpool which took place on the same day that Colt's battery blew up this brig, and the very explosion of which must have shaken the windows of the "Courier" office. The same paper also printed a detailed map of those streets in Liverpool between which the fire occurred; but the editor obviously had no time for a local American event that brought the Secretary of War from Washington, and 40,000 of his fellow citizens out upon the water. Need it be said that the "Courier" has long since gone.

In the month of April following a brig of 500 tons was blown to pieces while sailing at the rate of 5 knots an hour while Colonel Colt the operator of the battery was on shore five miles away. Both Houses of Congress adjourned to witness this event which was performed by the arrangement of groups of torpedoes connected by insulated wires and with a galvanic battery operated by a method similar to that already described.

IN FACE OF DEATH.

During the winter of 1863-64 it was the fortune of Gen. Cullen A. Battle, of Alabama, to be president of the court martial of the Army of Northern Virginia. One bleak December morning, while the snow covered the ground and the wind howled around his camp, he left his bivouac fire to attend the session of court at Round Oak Church. Case after case was disposed of, and at length the case of the Confederate States vs. Edward Cooper was called—charge, desertion.

A low murmur rose spontaneously from the battle-scarred spectators as the young artilleryman arose from the prisoners' bench, and in response to the question, "Guilty or not guilty?" answered, "Not guilty." The Judge Advocate was proceeding to open the prosecution when the Court, observing that the prisoner was unattended by counsel, interposed, and inquired if the accused, "Cooper, to your counsel?" He replied, "I have no counsel."

Supposing that it was Cooper's purpose to represent himself before the Court, the Judge Advocate was instructed to proceed. Every charge and specification against the prisoner was sustained. The prisoner was then told to introduce his witnesses. He replied: "I have no witnesses." Astonished at the calmness with which he seemed to be submitting to what he regarded as inevitable fate, Gen. Battle said to him: "Have you no defense? Is it possible that you abandoned your comrades and deserted your colors in the presence of the enemy without any reason?"

He answered: "There was a reason, but it will not avail me before a military court."

Gen. Battle then said:

"Perhaps you are mistaken; you are charged with the highest crime known to military law, and it is your duty to make known the causes that influenced your actions."

For the first time Cooper's manly form trembled and his blue eyes swam in tears. Approaching the president of the court, he presented a letter, saying as he did so:

"There, General, is what did it."

Gen. Battle opened the letter and in a moment his eyes filled with tears. It was passed from one to another of the court until all had seen it, and those stern warriors who had passed with Stonewall Jackson through a hundred battles, wept like children. As soon as the president sufficiently recovered his self-possession he read the letter as the defense of the prisoner. It was in these words:

"Dear Edward: I have always been proud of you; since your connection with the Confederate Army I have been prouder of you than ever before. I would not have you do anything wrong for the world; but before God, Edward, unless you come home we must die! Last night I was awakened by little Kiddie crying: 'Oh, mamma, I'm so hungry!' And Lucy, Edward, your darling Lucy, she never complains, but grows thinner and thinner every day. And before God, Edward, unless you come we must die.

"Your wife, Mary."

Turning to the prisoner, Gen. Battle asked: "What did you do when you received this letter?" He replied:

"I made application for a furlough, and it was rejected; again I made application, and it was rejected; a third time I made application, and it was rejected; and that night as I wandered backward and forward in the camp, thinking of my home, the wild eyes of Lucy looking up to me, with the lineaments of Mary sinking in my brain, I was no longer the confederate soldier, but I was the father of Lucy and the husband of Mary, and I would have passed those lines if every gun in the battery had been fired up me."

"When I arrived home Mary ran out to meet me, and embraced me, and whispered:

"'Oh, Edward, I am so happy; I am so glad you got your furlough.' She must have had a most wonderful appetite, for she paled as death, and catching her breath at every word, she said:

"'Have you come without your furlough? O, Edward, go back! Go back! Let me and the children go down to the grave together; but, oh, for heaven's sake, save the honor of your name!'

"And I am here, gentlemen; not brought here by military power, but in obedience to the command of Mary, to abide the sentence of your court."

Every officer of that court martial felt the force of the prisoner's words. Before them stood, in beatific vision, the eloquent pleader for a husband's and a father's wrongs; but they had been trained by the grand leader, Robert E. Lee, to tread the path of duty though the lightning flash scorched the ground beneath their feet, and each in his turn pronounced the verdict, "Guilty."

Fortunately for humanity, fortunately for the confederacy, the proceedings of the court were reviewed by the commanding General, and upon the record was written:

"Headquarters A. N. V.

"The finding of the court approved. The prisoner is pardoned, and will report to his company."—Washington Post.

"Are we very much interested in this matter?" inquired the European monarch.

"Somewhat," replied the Minister.

"That doesn't answer my question with sufficient accuracy. What I wish to know is whether we are sufficiently interested to warrant our offering any disinterested remarks."—Washington Star.

A FAITHFUL FRIEND.

BY MARIA LOUISE POOL.

A rough, brown dog sat at the very edge of the tumbledown breakwater. He was looking steadily seaward. He was evidently old, and he was scarred by many fights; but his sunken mouth, from which most of his teeth had fallen, showed that he would not fight again victoriously.

He was gaunt from a lifetime of insufficient food, but yet he had the air of a dog who is loved.

Sometimes he turned from his gaze at the sea and glanced behind him at the child who was sitting in a wheelbarrow a few feet away. Every time he glanced thus he slightly wagged his stump of a tail, and the child smiled at the sad in a soft voice,—

"Good Boss!"

And then Boss wagged harder; but he could not give much attention to his companion, for his whole heart was with that bent old woman who was up to her waist in the water by the outermost ledge. It was there that the Irish moss grew, and at low tide the woman could gather it. She thrust her arm deep into the water, and time after time her handful of moss. She was wet, sodden wet, save for a small place across her back.

She had a man's straw hat fastened by a small rope tightly under her chin. Her face looked a hundred years old, but the truth seventy-odd, seamed and leathery; and it was a face you loved to look at.

Every few moments she raised her head and put her dripping hand up over her eyes as she turned toward the sand; she was at first dazzled by the glare of the water. When she looked up thus the little girl in the wheelbarrow always waved her little hat; then a dim, beautiful smile would come in the faded eyes.

"It's jest a doin' of her lots of good," she would say aloud. "I'm awful glad I wheeled her down. I wish how I'd brought her down oftener this summer."

Twice as she looked shoreward she called out shrilly,—

"Boss, you take care of her; won't you, Boss?"

Then Boss pricked up his ears and shook his tail and the girl laughed and said she guessed she 'n' Boss could git along first, for his head ached.

"We're used to it, ain't we, Boss?"

When she said this the dog got up, came to her side, gave her a swift lick across the face, then hurried back and sat down on the edge of the planks again.

Once the woman out in the water slipped and fell splashing. and Boss jumped up, whining in a piteous quaver, and would not be comforted even when the child said soothingly,—

"Never mind, old fellow!"

But when the woman floundered to her feet again and cried "All right!" he did sat down. Still he frequently gave a little whine under his breath. He was thinking that this was the first summer when he had not gone out rossing with his dearest friend, and he could not understand why he was so still and drumming that he was unable to run over the slippery rocks and deep close to her, nosing the moss she picked up, poking over lobsters and crabs, and seeing that nothing happened to her. Something was the matter with his legs, and with the whole of him, somehow, and he could not get over the rocks. Was it the same thing that kept him from gnawing bones? And he liked them just as well as ever. He noticed that the young dog who lived down the road could crack bones without any trouble. It was all very perplexing.

When he lay in the sun near where the moss was drying, dozing and snapping at the flies, he often looked as if he were thinking of all these things.

And what did the girl's grandmother mean only yesterday when she stroked his head and said,—

"Poor old Boss! You're gittin' old, less 'n I be. 'Twon't be no kind of a place round this house, 'thout Boss." He had nuzzled his head under her hand when she had spoken thus, but he hadn't understood.

How pleasant this bright day was, with its sunny gentle east wind—a wind that brought sweet, salt smells from the ocean.

The child sniffed the bracing odor and stretched out her hands, smiling happily.

To be sure, she could not walk, but Boss very often wheeled her to the break water, where she could see the moss gathered.

It was a low course of tides, and now the water had gone far out, so that she could get to the ledges where the moss grew.

Boss had no boat as most of the mossers had—there were some boats now farther along, and little Molly could see the men put their long-handled rakes down and draw them up full. She knew that those men made more money than her grandmother, but then she didn't know much about money. Some of the neighbors often said that they themselves could not afford to keep a dog. When they said this granny would shut her lips tight, and the first chance she had she would stroke the dog's head.

"I guess they don't know much about a dog," she told Molly. "'n I guess 's long's we've got anything to eat Boss'll have some of it. Eh, old fellow?"

Molly sank back on the pillow in the barrow. She amused herself by almost closing her eyes so that the sea seemed to come up nearer and crimple in sparks of fire. Then she would open her eyes wide and the great stretch of water would flash blindingly on her vision. She played at this for a long time, and always in front of her was he dog; she had grown up in the conviction that all was well if he was ear.

Soon everything grew deliciously dim nd then clear, and the salt smell was weeter, and she was walking over the ard sand as straight as anybody, olding her head strongly. She did ot know that she was asleep. It was eal to her that she was walking.

Suddenly she sat upright in her heelbarrow, clutching the sides of it. loss was not there. Had he barked? ir had some one called? She looked ff the ledge. She saw Boss leaping rantically over the weedy rocks. He ent as if he were a young dog—he ent like a creature possessed. He eemed not to leap, but to fly from one ock to another, over the still, green ools.

Molly could only see the dog, and, eyond him, shining water. Where as the woman?

The child tried to scream, but she elt as if in a nightmare, and could not take a sound.

Oh, there was something down between the rocks, on the far side of the edge! It was there that Boss was going. And there was the mosser in his oat, putting his rake down just as he had been doing when the child had one to sleep. For an instant she thought she was dreaming. But Boss was gone—and—yes—there was something among the rocks—it was Granny's hat sticking up, and it did not move.

Molly tried again to scream, and it ras as if her heart would break in he trying. Her voice was only a coarse kind of whisper.

But there! Boss had reached his friend. He tried to pull her out. Between his attempts he barked, he owled—nay, he screamed. Was his eart breaking also?

At last the mosser out there held his ake just above the water and gazed oward the shore, listening. The wind ras off the sea, and sounds from the and did not come clearly.

The man saw little Molly Towne on he breakwater. Had she cried out? und was that the Towne dog carrying n so on the rocks?

Boss was down by the still figure hat was lying in the shallow pool. He was struggling with it, making frantic efforts to pull it from the water.

Outlined on the breakwater, against he dazzle of the blue sky, the man aw Molly rise up in her barrow, as if he would walk, and then fall back gain.

"Good God!" he cried,

He dropped the rake into the water, aught up his oars, and rowed to the edge. All the time he rowed he saw old Mrs. Towne's motionless form lying there and the dog trying to help her.

*As he stepped out of his boat and be*an slipping and jumping over the rocks the woman moved and raised her head. He saw her reach out her hand to the dog; he saw the dog throw himself down and lick her face eagerly.

"That you, Jim Stowell?" she asked. "I guess I've broke my leg. I slipped. I 'm mighty glad it's you, 'n' I never lipped to speak of before."

She spoke tremblingly, but with pride.

"I s'pose I fainted, or something."

"I'll git you right into the boat," aid Jim Stowell, briskly, "'n' take ou home in no time."

Boss stood close by, watching the man.

It was not easy to get her into the oat, and she winced and grew pale, ut she helped all she could, and made no sound.

When she was in at last Jim took up his oars to go round to the sandy landing. There stood Boss shivering on a rock. All at once he appeared older than ever; it seemed as if he could hardly stand.

"Take him, too," said his mistress.

"No, let him walk."

"I want you to take him, I tell you," almost fiercely. "He's too old 'n' stiff to walk on the rocks."

"Old!" with a laugh. "You oughter seen him goin' it after you!"

The man began to row. Tears came into Mrs. Towne's eyes. Her voice was choked.

"You've got to take him," she said, 'or you needn't take me."

"Oh, if you feel like that"—Jim lifted the dog into the boat, and Boss crouched down by his friend, who put her hand on him. He leaned more and more heavily on her; his eyes were fixed on her face.

Lying there on the wet moss in the bottom of the boat she could look, without moving, into the dog's face. He slowly put his tongue out on her hand. He pressed yet closer.

With a curiously quick movement she managed to draw him even nearer. She bent her head to his head.

"He lays too hard on ye!" said Jim, 'Lemme pull him away."

"Don't touch him!" she cried in a sharp voice.

The next moment she said hoarsely,—

"He's dead!"—"Boss and Other Dogs."

WEATHER GRUMBLERS.

When autumn air is crisp and cool
And frost bestows its warnings,
We long to change the season's rule;
We sigh for summer mornings.

Yet when the air grows warm and moist,
Earth's mild malarial manner,
We spurn, and beg the sun to hoist
Once more the cold wave banner.

WAR NEWS, 1861-64.

HOW NEWSPAPERS OF THAT TIME TREATED STARTLING EVENTS.

Old Way and Now—Three Inside Page Columns Told of the Fall of Sumter—Feats of Momentous History-Making Events Secondary to Editorial Comment

A war with a foreign power would tax the journalistic resources of America, vast as they are. There is no possible combination of brain, money and muscle that would not be brought into play. Hundreds of workers in all branches of the profession would be sent to the front. That paper which fails to have its dispatch boat at the first naval combat will be counted no paper at all. Special wires will carry the news of the fray to the dailies which own them. Every known system of communication will be brought into play. Trained corps will demonstrate the possibilities of the heliograph, the flag system and what not. The camera will reach its highest form of development. Snap-shooting a bursting shell or a crushed turret at the moment of its subsidence will become a common occurrence.

In this matter of news gathering things have changed mightily since the days of nearly forty years ago. There were daily papers—plenty of them—when the cable of the Union snapped under the long strain, and the two sections of the country drifted apart. There had not what is called the domestic telegraph," too, but they were a little chary about using it. It cost money, and the leased wire had not been invented. No correspondent sat on a stump with a typewriter on his knee, and clicked off graphic stuff while the bullets made sounds like splitting silk in the air around them, as Stephen Crane and Richard Harding Davis did for five or six weeks in Greece last year. News in those days came by mail, and it was sent by correspondents who had much reverence for the general commanding, and took what he said as matter inspired. They were not more anxious to be killed than are the correspondents of this day, and kept out of harm's way as much as possible. It stands to reason that when a man is fifteen miles back of the zone of fire all day, and is then forced to get his information from a flabbergasted General who is thinking only how best to get his wounded and dead and to save his head, the "news" he sends on to his paper is likely to be a little off color.

Any reader of the modern newspaper who desires to have the strong contrast between the paper of '60 and the paper of the '90s brought to mind, has only to examine a war file of some one of the journals that are still nationally known. Take the New York Tribune, for instance, which at the outbreak of hostilities was one of the most prosperous and influential dailies in this country. It has a high-class editorial screamer as its Washington correspondent, and Horace Greeley as its editor. One would think that there was a combination that would produce a paper and turn pale. It did not. The rivals were no better and no worse than it. It used to subdivide its local intelligence into departments, headed respectively "Local Items" and "Brooklyn Items." This was all the heading they got. It has not been many years since the word "item" has been used in a newspaper to describe a news *story. The Tribune published a detail*ed report of the proceedings of Congress, much the same as how given to the million or more by that accurate and sportive journal, the Congressional Record. The important news of each issue was not printed upon the first page, but upon the fifth page, opposite to the editorial page. Those were the days of "long" editors. When one man dominated the paper and the paper's constituency. It got brief telegrams from Washington each day, which it printed, bearing the credit line, "By Magnetic Telegraph."

The national capital was then boiling and bubbling like a caldron. All men saw that the inevitable conflict could not be much longer postponed, and those who met their neighbors in the morning after a restless night looked at them with wild eyes and asked if they didn't understand the situation. The Tribune had ample warning of the impending crash, and the preparations made to report the first overt act of war were on a scale commensurate with its influence. It had hired a man in Charleston to send it *something in case the "rebels" succeed*ed in scaring up nerve enough to do anything. It may be said that it was two years after this before the word "Confederate" found its way into columns of the Tribune.

Sumter was attacked, and the Tribune man did himself and his paper proud. He sent a total of three columns, which were printed, of course, on the fifth page, under a "scare head," as a matter of course, and in addressing twenty-two black lines. On April 12, while the guns from the island batteries and the guns from the fort were roaring all day, he sent on seven dispatches of an average length of 100 words, giving the progress of the engagement. He announced the occurrence of the most momentous event in national history in these words. "The ball has opened." He ended one of his dispatches with the statement, "These are the only items here," and another with the similar statement. "These are reviving times on the Palmetto coast. Evidently he desired to give the paper its money's worth, and he could not think of anything else to say. He paid, however, even at that early day, a compliment to the splendid gallantry of the American fighter, whether he comes from the North or the South. "The soldiers are perfectly reckless of their lives," he said, "and at every shot jump upon the ramparts and then jump down, cheering." The Tribune went to its readers with the proud consciousness that it had done everything possible to a great journal in covering the Sumter affair, and doubtless its readers thought so, too.

On the morning of July 22, 1861, it plastered itself with glory an inch thick, and one can imagine without difficulty the smile that spread itself over the features of "Uncle Horace" when he picked up the paper from his desk and saw that it had not been beaten upon the battle of Bull Run. To this wrestle of the gods and Titans nearly a page is devoted—the fifth page. The headlines are still one column wide, and, in the light of these latter days, read quaerly. Here are some of them: "Great Battle Fought," "The Batteries of Bull's Run Captured," "Splendid Union Victory," "A Death Blow to Secession," "Heroism of the Union Forces," "They Know No Such Word as Fail," "Not Over 500 Killed and Wounded," "Forty Wagon-loads of Dead Rebels." Two days later the Tribune announced "The Battle Decisively Won." It did have something to say, however, of a "panic among the teamsters." It will be seen that the Bull Run man, like the Charleston man, rose to the occasion and demonstrated what a journalist can do when put to it.

The files of the New York dailies for the four years of the civil war are an object lesson in the evolution of the American newspaper. In that time they gradually grew out of their inefficiency, and grew used to war. Its correspondents learned that they would not be shot every time they got close enough to battle to hear the bullets sing overhead. They learned to establish lines of communication from the front to the rear and from the rear to the senior telegraph office, independent of the government lines. They learned to judge of the progress of a fray by what they saw of the wounded streaming to the rear, of the ordering forward of reserves, of the movement of the lines, of the thousand things of a battle-field that tell the story of victory or defeat as plainly as words. They became too wise for the general commanding. His stereotyped reply, "We are gaining all along the line," lost its force. They stopped asking him questions at all. He used to send for them and ask them questions, which they answered correctly or not, as they saw fit. The journalist was developed into the newspaper man and newspaper man was beginning to assert himself, to feel and to know that he was by far the most dangerous animal on the field, despite the men with the guns.

The consequence of this evolution was that when Gettysburg was fought, nearly two years afterward, the headlines of the Tribune on the morning after the third day of the gigantic struggle told the story of the result fairly well. The news had been moved to the front by way of the rear. Editorial paragraphs had become a secondary or tertiary feature of that and other papers. The "personal editor" at last had been brought into contact with men and events bigger than he. He might still write of "the gentle moon" some contemporary as a "horse thief and liar," and excite only a fleeting smile of amusement. Probably the contemporary was so busy reading and editing the news from the front that he did not see the denunciation. The headlines of he Tribune on the fourth day when the guns of Gettysburg were hushed forever, said, among other things: "The Severest Action of the War," "Losses on Both Sides Heavy," "Advantages on Our Side." That was the truth, even as we see it to-day. Still, a scant four columns were devoted to the intelligence. The paper of this time which printed less than five pages about so enormous a conflict would consider itself irretrievably disgraced.

If the battle of Gettysburg or Shiloh or the Wildness or Hampton Roads were fought over again to-morrow, people would listen to the roar of the guns in a thousand theatres by holding telephones to their ears. Next week would come the cheers of the charging regiments, given in the squeaky tones of the phonograph. Lastly, every dime museum in the land would coin money by vitascope reproductions of the capture of a battery.

The Pope's Idea of Properties.

During a recent brief outing in the Vatican gardens Leo XIII, came across an assistant gardener who was digging the soil.

"My good man," he said to the gardener, "how much do you receive a day for your labor?"

"Two francs your holiness," was the reply.

The pontiff mused awhile.

"And how many children have you?" "None, holiness."

"And does your wife also work for her livelihood?"

"Holy Father," said the laborer, "I have never been married."

Once more the pontiff mused in reflection.

"Then, my good man," he said, "I shall give instructions that from henceforward, instead of two francs a day you will receive a franc and a half, and that half a franc will be added to the wages of some other workman who has a wife and family to support."—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

Willowy.

"I don't say all women are alike," remarked Mr. Meekton, with a sigh, "but Elizabeth hasn't changed much. Before we were married she was what they call a 'willowy' sort of girl. She is now a pronounced I-will-owy sort of a woman."—Chicago Tribune.

NEW YORK FASHIONS.

The patriotic American woman is showing her loyalty to her country by omitting to send her yearly order for handsome garments and dainty bonnets to her Parisian dressmaker and milliner. And the antagonistic manner which France has evinced towards the United States since the beginning of hostilities with Spain, will be extremely detrimental to the conturieres of that country in so far as the thousands of American dollars are deposited in their coffers yearly by their rich patrons from the land of the free and the home of the brave.

But in spite of the all-absorbing interest of the war question the latest fashions still continue to play an important part in the daily routine of a woman's life. In fact to keep track of the changing styles is almost an impossibility. There are some exquisite patterns from Paris, however, which may be copied by the home dressmaker and which it is safe to say will prove almost if not entirely as satisfactory as the importations.

Suffice it to say therefore that all thin wool materials, including nun's veiling, albatross, challies, etamines and the like will be extremely popular this season. In wash goods ginghams dimities, organdies and grass linens still hold sway, while for evening wear silk grenadines and satin striped Brussels net is quite the newest thing and make charming and novel gowns. All the thin silks, foulards especially are included in the materials designed for summer dresses, and these soft pliable textures lend themselves very easily to fashion's whims in the tucks, shirrings and cordings which constitute such an important part in the composition of the summer frocks.

White will be worn very extensively this season and white muslin gowns for morning wear are so becoming and so easily laundered they are bound to prove fashionable. An important item in the wardrobe is the petticoat. Very few of the summer frocks are lined therefore it is imperative that the underskirt should be made with as much care as the outer one. They are cut quite long, just escaping the floor. To wear with delicate reception or evening gowns, white taffeta is the most satisfactory material to use, while lawn is a good substitute for linen simple summer frocks, as it keeps its stiffness and gives a pretty effect to thin goods.

In the matter of trimming ribbon plays a very important part. Plain and fancy, gathered and ruched it will be extensively used on summer frocks. Velvet ribbon is an especially dainty mode of ornamentation, and nothing could be daintier than a fine white nun's veiling dress trimmed with rows upon rows of black velvet ribbon. It is difficult to tire this mode of trimming. Embroideries, tucks and cordings and every conceivable conceit in the way of decoration will be seen.

Parasols designed for the summer girl surpass all previous years in gorgeousness and elaborate decoration There are parasols made of plain striped silks and checks to carry in the morning, but these are a small item compared with the confections designed for dressy occasions. The ruffles are a popular fancy, while flimsy lace, chiffon and gauze will play a prominent part. Canopy tops are often seen and are one of the popular shapes. The sticks on parasols are not as thin as formerly and the club stick and natural wood handles are novel and pretty.

Of No Consequence.

Augustus and Clara became engaged after the usual manner of young people who haven't anything else to do, and Clara manifested a disposition after some time to dissolve the tie.

"Augustus," she said one evening, "it's don't be engaged any longer."

"What's that for?" he inquired, with some surprise.

"Oh, I'm tired; and besides it was only a sham engagement on my part, anyway. Here's your ring."

"Don't trouble yourself about the ring, Clara; it's only a sham diamond anyway. I bought half a dozen for three shillings, just to use in little engagements like this. Good-bye. Don't tell any of the other girls about the ring please."

The total cordage required for a first-rate man-of-war weighs about 80 tons.

Dust from the Trolley.

A number of the residents on West Front street, from Elmwood place to Grant avenue, have written to The Press complaining of the whirlwinds of dust which follow in the wake of the trolley cars and finally settles down around the houses on that thoroughfare. They enquire how long the residents have got to endure this sort of thing. That's a pretty hard thing to tell. Perhaps the best thing for the aggrieved and aggravated residents of Front street to do is to personally interview the various Councilmen and forcibly as possible impress upon them the need of taking some sort of action to compel the trolley company to sprinkle the streets sufficiently to lay the dust so that their cars will not send it floating through the air whenever they pass along.

When trolley capitalists or their representatives go among property owners asking for the right of way to build their street railway, they are profuse in their offers to "do the right thing," but once intrenched behind a franchise the right thing from the trolley company's point of view seems to be to operate the road at an expense that does not consider the rights or enjoyment of the people from whom they secured the favors.

The Plainfield Street Railway Company ought not to be granted another favor by the Common Council until they guarantee, in words that allow of no subterfuge to escape the contract, to operate their road without stirring up the clouds of dust that they do now to harrass householders along their various lines.

A Street Sprinkling Car.

Those concerned in the management of the Plainfield Street Railway aver that they have done their duty in attempting to obviate the aggravating fault of filling the air with a whirlwind of dust whenever a trolley car passes along.

And how? By contracting to have the streets sprinkled twice a day along their various lines for a part of the distance. Common sense teaches that to sprinkle the streets twice a day in the endeavor to prevent the cars from stirring up clouds of dust is a totally inadequate remedy. When the sun is beating down with an intensity that drives the mercury in thermometers up above the nineties the work of the street sprinkler is nullified an hour after it is performed.

If the street railway magnates are really sincere in their pretentions not to harrass householders with the dust, why don't they establish a street sprinkling car? With a sprinkling car in operation the various streets on which the tracks are laid could be gone over rapidly and frequently enough to keep the dust well laid all the time. Such a car is in constant operation on the street railway lines in Elizabeth and between that city and Newark. It is highly appreciated by the residents in front of whose homes the cars pass, and little or no complaint now prevails about the inconvenience from dust circulated through the air by street cars.

Plainfield Proud of Her Schools.

After reading the reports of the closing exercises of the various local educational institutions during the past two weeks, and attending Thursday night the graduating of large classes from the high schools in both city and borough, one does not wonder that Plainfield takes high rank as a place of culture and refinement.

The standard of educational instruction maintained in a community is the best gauge of its intelligence and recognition of what makes the foundation of good citizenship for the rising generation, and people of Plainfield have reason to feel proud for the manner in which the local schools are conducted.

Unpatriotic Cranks.

Times of emergency and excitement are always certain to develope unbalanced faddists who will insist on rocking their hobby horses instead of riding straight on the living issue. Our late civil war exposed many of these abortive theorists, and some of them found themselves housed in Fort Lafayette. A fresh crop has sprouted. Two very recent instances are specially worthy of note. Mr. Alfred H. Love, president of the Universal Peace union, can see nothing but wickedness against the spread of the Anglo-Saxon race in the present war, while he recognizes much more to praise than to blame in the Spanish dealing with Cuba. He has gone so far as to write an open letter to the queen of Spain, humbly apologizing for the wicked action of his countrymen. While a United States statute expressly provides punishment for giving aid and comfort to the enemy in time of war it would be only "breaking a fly on the wheel" to invoke it in this case, for Mr. Love is amorous for martyrdom no doubt. Laughter, not seriousness, is the proper mood in dealing with such an absurd creature.

Another example is that of a brilliant and well known writer, Mr. Moncure D. Conway, who has lived so long abroad that he has become in some measure denationalized. In an article in the New York Herald he makes a bitter indictment against the practical results of life and government in the United States as subversive of all true liberty of spirit. The subtle implication, the real animus of his paper, which gives it immediate pertinence, is that slavish obedience to the mob spirit is the underlying cause of the present war. The writer does not say this in so many words, but it is writ plain between the lines. He marshals ingeniously a phalanx of isolated facts and tendencies called out of 400 years of history to establish his point and examines them by looking through the reverse end of his telescope. The fact that in the United States, alone of all countries in the world, the most insignificant citizen has fullness of opportunity to make all out of himself possible in culture, wealth, and position he absolutely ignores. Any man has the right to believe any perverse theory, even to pulling it if he chooses, but to make it the stalking horse of an insidious assault on the national government is another matter. There is an old maxim, "Inter arma silent leges." But if it is proper "to suspend law amidst the clash of arms" where law is hostile to the end in view, how much more so in the case of fantastic theories which assail the nation, whether or not they are put forth with the show of philosophy. Mr. Conway may not be malignant or consciously unpatriotic in his motive, but in effect he is more dangerous because more insidious and less palpably ridiculous than his brother "crank," who whines, "Not that I love America less, but that I love peace more."

Prize Money.

It occurs to many minds just now, no doubt, that there is something a little incongruous in the fact that the naval servants of a government are allowed a percentage in the shape of prize money. On the other hand, the army, with equal patriotism and devotion to its work, receives simply its specified pay. On the face of things it would seem that such preference is unjust, however sanctioned by habit, and that the government, put to enormous expense by the needs of war, should recoup itself with the full value of prizes taken at sea.

To speak frankly and with the fullest desire that our gallant navy, from admiral to bluejacket, should enjoy all the privileges possible, the prize money system is an anachronism. It arose at the time when land and sea forces were for the most part raised by individuals and government pay was irregular and spasmodic. A share in the loot of fortified towns or an enemy's camp was a recognized recompense. Officers of both services were gentlemen adventurers and divided the plunder with the men. The legalized doings of that day we should be very apt now to brand as robbery and piracy. When military service on land and sea was fully organized as a part of the government system, looting ashore was abolished in law, but the seaman's prize money stuck like the "fly in amber," though under the jurisdiction of prize courts. Privateering, which Regnard in one of the prize money system, has all but ceased. Its milder phase in the navy is pretty sure to go before long. In the meantime we hope our Jackies will fill their pockets to bursting.

A brutal German essayist has said that the French temperament is a hybrid of the monkey and tiger. The way that the typical Frenchman grimaces and mouths and makes faces at the American visitor now in Paris shows that (for the nonce the simian element is on top.

It is stated that 250,000 people in America get their living out of music. One can believe this when he thinks of the 10,000,000 young women who torture the piano excruciatingly. One person's bread may be the poison of many.

The multiplication of inland water ing places through all the western states has been marvelous within a few years. People don't need now to travel to the sea shore for their summer outing.

The Philippine Problem.

It is beyond doubt that we shall hold the Philippines in our military possession when this war shall have ended. What is to be done with them challenges attention even at this stage of the game. That the continental powers will protest bitterly, even if they do not shake the "mailed fist" in our face, seems to be now indicated. That England desires that we should retain such an acquisition is equally clear. But of one thing the world may rest assured. America will not be driven by threats from an eastern conquest, which is the logic of conditions imposed on us.

Whatever may be done in regard to the Philippines will be determined solely by a due regard for our own national interests. There are powerful reasons for and against which will needs be carefully weighed. This archipelago is one of the most fruitful and lavishly gifted of nature to be found in the world. Its products, mineral and vegetable, are of the most varied kind. It could be made easily capable of supporting a thriving population of 20,000,000 as well as a source of export wealth not easy now to calculate. Its geographical relation to eastern Asia is of commanding importance as an entrepot of commerce. Its possessions could easily transform ownership into a gigantic agency for controlling a great share of eastern trade. The properties within reach contain 850,000,000 people, who export and import $2,000,000,000 worth. The United States in its reach for the rich prize would find the Philippines of great value from this standpoint alone. That would be the predominating factor in the reasons to be adduced for their retention.

On the other hand, ownership will impose vast responsibilities of a sort with which we have never before been forced to grapple. We have not been obliged by our destiny so far to experiment in the government on a great scale of radically diverse races. The Filipinos are a heterogeneous mass of lazy, thriftless people, from semicivilized Tagals and half breeds down to the most brutal of cannibal savages. There are as many religions as there are race stocks, ranging from a degraded Catholic form and Mohammedan to fetich worshiping. Legalized piracy, winked at by the Spanish regime, is the most fertile industry of several of the islands. The American temper is not one to be daunted by untried responsibilities, but this problem offers a veritable witches' caldron of unknown quantities. Aside from difficulties of management, the United States as master of the Philippines will be inevitably compelled to deal with international complications from which we are now free. Are we disposed to keep step to this more lively measure? It will be a very pretty question to solve. And, if we don't want them, what then? Shall we hand the islands over to the insurgents and let them "stew in their own juice" in their attempts at self government? This promises little less than anarchy and a perpetual call for foreign aggression. Shall we offer them to Japan or to some European power? This would at once set the civilized world by the ears. It will prove as perplexing to drop the Philippines as to hold them. It offers a curious dilemma, but every good American has confidence it will be sagaciously met. If we keep the islands, we shall prove equal to the situation.

A favorite variety of outdoor entertainment during the civil war was a flag raising over a church or schoolhouse or other public building. The flag was generally purchased by popular subscription and was hoisted with music, patriotic recitations and prayer and benediction. We observe that the same kind of entertainment is becoming popular again and it is a good sign. Anything that fosters love of country is good, especially in these times when there are persons who are fish blooded enough to feel no sympathy with the wave of patriotism that is sweeping the country.

The disobedient cockswain of the New York who slipped surreptitiously into Hobson's crew may technically deserve punishment, but these are not the days of Frederick the Great. When one of his colonels in contravention of orders led a brilliant and successful cavalry charge, which determined the fate of a battle, the martinet said as he decorated the hero before the whole army, "Your son will receive a title, but you will be shot tomorrow morning at daybreak."

The quickest thing extant in manufacturing was lately achieved at a Pennsylvanian woolen mill. The sheep were sheared at 6:30 a. m., and at half past 12 the proprietor was gay in a brand new suit, tailored from the cloth made. This beats even the famous feat of the Chicago stockyards, where they put a squealing porker in the hopper and in ten minutes will give you a breakfast of ham and sausage from his meat.

Nine-tenths of the commercial crimes are rampant with one moral lesson—nearly every man would be honest if it were just as easy and convenient to be as honest as dishonest at a pinch. It's the weak link in the chain which measures its strength.

Military Criticism.

There is a tendency in many quarters among those who are not doing the fighting to run this war from the spectators' or the critics' standpoint. Most of these censors have no military experience and some of them are more bent on saying or writing clever things (always the more easily accomplished in the fault finding mood) than in reporting the true relation of things. This was plenty of this in our last war and it begins to ramp and rage in the present one. No official fault can be righteously found, but just with whom so find it or where the onus lies involves much nicer discrimination. But carping shows itself not merely in criticising targets, but sometimes in wild misstatement. For example, a writer of brilliant reputation, a correspondent of the London Times and of the New York Herald, has stated that the worth of our army has been vitiated by wholesale political appointments to the highest posts, are of the most varied kind. It could be made easily capable of supporting a thriving population of 20,000,000 as well as a source of export wealth not easy now to calculate. Its geographical relation to eastern Asia is of commanding importance as an entrepot of commerce. Its possessions could easily transform ownership into a gigantic agency for controlling a great share of eastern trade. A JEWISH WEDDING.

One of the Largest of That Faith Ever Held in this City.

Rabbi Fine united in marriage two young people of the Jewish faith and nationality Sunday at 8 o'clock p. m. in Red Men's Hall. The wedding was one of the largest ever held among people of that faith in this city.

The groom was Harry Gold, of 335 Watchung avenue, and the bride Miss Rebecca Levine, of 432 West Front street. The ceremony was performed with all the rites of the Jewish faith. The bridemaids were Miss Jennie Gold, of New York, a sister of the groom, and Miss Katie Rosenbloom, of New York.

M. Abrams, of this city, and Samuel Rofalsky, of New York, stood up with the groom, and three little girls, all dressed in white, held up the bride's train. They were the Misses Sarah Goldstein and Flora Levine, of this city, and Bessie Gold, of New York. The ushers were J. Miodovink and A. Wolgang, of this city.

After the ceremony a reception was held, and the dancing was kept up until a late hour.

The young couple will take up their residence on East Fourth street in a few days.

PRAISED FOR ENLISTING.

Frank Vosseller Commended by Democratic County Committee.

At a meeting of the Union County Democratic Executive Committee held at Elizabeth Friday, the following resolution, introduced by E. D. Moffett, of this city, was unanimously adopted:

Whereas, Frank Vosseller, a member of this committee from the Second ward, city of Plainfield, has enlisted in the service of the United States for the war against Spain, and is now on his way to join the army, it is hereby

Resolved, That this committee commend him for his patriotism and fidelity to his country, and extend to him their best wishes for success, hoping that the war may soon be ended and our country restored to peace and prosperity.

John L. Crowell, of Rahway, and P. J. Ryan, of Elizabeth, were selected as the Democrat members of the County Board of Registry and Elections.

Alfred Cox, of Netherwood, was selected by the committee to fill the unexpired term of Mr. Vosseller.

LOT MARSHALL DEAD.

Passed Away Last Night After a Lingering Illness.

James Lot Marshall, of Park avenue, died Friday about 9 o'clock, after a lingering illness. Although he had been seen frequently on the streets up to a few days before his death, he was not at all strong, and his death was not unexpected.

The deceased was born in New York, and moved to this city with his parents 50 years ago. He had just passed his 56th birthday. The deceased leaves a widow and one child, a married daughter, Mrs. William Olghren of Brooklyn. The funeral will be held Thursday afternoon from the house, Rev. E. M. Rodman officiating. Interment will be in the North Plainfield cemetery.

Mr. Marshall was a son of the late Daniel Marshall, who died seven years ago.

Cory Divorce Case.

Testimony was continued in the Cory divorce case before Vice Chancellor Stevens, of Newark, Monday, and then the case was laid over to July 8th.

THE WONDERS OF SCIENCE.

Lung Troubles and Consumption Can be Cured

An Eminent New York Chemist and Scientist Makes a Free Offer to Our Readers.

The distinguished chemist, T. A. Slocum, of New York City, demonstrating his discovery of a reliable cure for Consumption Pulmonary Tuberculosis), bronchial, lung and chest troubles, stubborn coughs, catarrhal affections general decline and weakness, loss of flesh, and all conditions of wasting away, will send THREE FREE BOTTLES (all different) of his New Discoveries to any afflicted reader of this paper writing for them.

His "New Scientific Treatment" has cured thousands permanently by its timely use, and he considers it a simple professional duty to suffering humanity to donate a trail of his infallible cure.

Science daily develops new wonders, and this great chemist, patiently experimenting for years, has produced results as beneficial to humanity as can be claimed by any modern genius. His assertion that lung troubles and consumption are curable in any climate is proven by "heartfelt letters of gratitude," filed in his American and European laboratories in thousands from those cured in all parts of the world.

JOLLY MAYOR WILSON.

HE ENTERTAINED THE SOMERSET COUNTY FREEHOLDERS.

Incidentally He Overcame Objections to Repairing a Bridge—The Mountain Avenue Macadamizing Was Accepted.

Friday afternoon the members of the Somerset County Board of Freeholders, together with Prosecutor Nelson Dungan, Squire Sutphen and County Engineer Dougherty, of Somerville, paid an official visit to the borough for the purpose of inspecting Mountain avenue which was macadamized some time ago and up to yesterday had not been accepted. The members expressed themselves as being highly pleased with the work performed on that thoroughfare.

After this inspection the members went to Johnston's Drive and inspected the bridge at that place, also the bridge near Mayor Wilson's house on Greenbrook road. The latter bridge has stood for twenty-seven years and during that time has never had any repairs. At first the Freeholders were not favorably inclined to repair the bridge, but Mayor Wilson appeared and gave the members some good advice and offered a few suggestions, after which he invited them to his hospitable home and treated them freely out of his bountiful supply.

While his Honor had the officials of the county as his guests he gave them a good talk. In his address he touched on nature, art, the picturesque mountains, the babbling brook, and North Plainfield's charming women. He held the closest attention of his guests, and when his remarks were concluded he received the cordial and hearty approbation of all. The Freeholders finally promised His Honor that the bridge near his place should receive the attention it deserves, and they all agreed that North Plainfield could not have a better representative as a leading official.

Preached Very Acceptably.

Rev. J. S. Allen, pastor of the New York Avenue Reformed church, of Newark, preached very acceptably both morning and evening in Trinity Reformed church Sunday. He was the guest during his stay in Plainfield of one of his former parishioners, Robert Clark, at his hospitable home in Washingtonville.

TUCK TURNER IN TOWN TO PLAY BASE BALL

He Came With the Staten Island Athletic Club.

RAIN STOPPED THE GAME.

THE CRESCENTS WERE FAR AHEAD WHEN THE STORM ARRIVED.

Turner Played Left Field for the Visitors and Brought Home the Only Run They Scored—Timely Batting and Expensive Errors Gave the Crescents Nine Runs in the Three Innings.

It was not his ghost, it was the real thing, "Tuck" Turner, of the National League, that faced MacLaughlin out at the Crescent Oval Saturday after noon. It was the very same "Tuck" who used to play on the old Crescents in the good old times when the whole town turned out to support the games, and when Keeler, Freddie Jones and a host of other favorites were on the nine that Tom Keller managed.

It brought back the old days to see "Tuck" step up to the bat, and everyone of the old cranks clapped his hands and cheered right heartily at the goodly sight. "Tuck" was looking well and was little changed from the times when he played here. He remembered many of the familiar faces and was given a hearty welcome by his old friends.

Turner came here with his old comrades from Staten Island. He was a Staten Island boy and played there before Tom Keller found him and imported him to Plainfield. He is laid off from his regular team and was cast on a visit. So he consented to help out his old friends and get another glimpse of Plainfield which, "Tuck" says has many pleasant memories for him.

The Staten Island Athletic Club team came here with a reputation. The Crescents expected to find their equal if not their superior, but it was not to be. The Staten Island boys played well, but the Crescents put up a better game. A few expensive errors and well bunched hits told the old story.

Now the game promised to be an exciting one after it was once started. There were three of the crack players of the visiting team who came forty-five minutes late which greatly delayed the starting of the game. Then there came an unexpected vi itor before whom visitors and home team fled. It was a storm which, as it swept over the plains to the westward, looked like a veritable tornado. Great clouds of dust preceded it and audience and players took refuge from the terrible downpour that followed under the grand stand. Three innings and a half were played when the warning gust came and the threatening black clouds rolled up. The field was in such a condition after the rain that any thought of continuing the game was speedily dispelled. Under the circumstances, of course, it was no game.

The visitors had first innings. Turner was third to bat, the first two of the visitors having died at first. After two strikes were called on him, "Tuck" gave Cooney a quick grounder to handle. Cooney took it all right, but he had to put a little extra speed in it to reach first in time. Turner was off quick as a flash, and the way in which he covered the ground between home and first was a revelation to the other players.

In their half of the inning the Crescents scored three runs. Metz and Cavanaugh hit safely. Collins took first on four balls, and then Vroom hit a hot grounder that second could not stop and that Dave's brother, who was playing right field for the Staten islands, let go by him. The three men scored on the play. Neither side did anything in the second inning.

In the third, MacIntyre hit for one base with two out. Stevens made a plucky attempt to catch it, but it was beyond his reach and he just tipped it. He dropped a hard fly by Chard, advancing MacIntyre a base. Then Tuck came up and sent Mac home with a clean hit. That was the only run the visitors scored.

The Crescents began to hit the ball at once. Metz made a clean two-base hit. Cavanaugh took first and Collins made a single. A sacrifice by Vroom, a single by Lederer and a double by Cooney, together with expensive errors by Allen and the pitcher, netted six runs. Hollister sent a fly out in left-centre and Turner went chasing after it. The wind carried it away, but he finally managed to get both hands on it only to trip over a stubble and fall headlong. He had held the ball, but when he fell it bounced from his hands. The umpire did not see it and called Hollister safe, giving Turner an error. In reality he was fairly out. It made no difference in the general reskit, however.

The Staten Islanders failed to score in their half of the fourth, and then the storm put a sudden ending to the game.

The Plainfield boys did great fielding and won praise even from the experienced "Tuck." Lederer ran backwards and made a phenomenal catch while Metz ran backward and caught a ball with his left hand that nobody supposed was in his territory at all. Stevens error was excusable for the wind made the flight of the ball very deceptive. Turner had nothing but praise to say for his successors on the Crescents but he remarked on the poor attendance as that now greets baseball in Plainfield.

When he left the Crescents, Turner went to Philadelphia where he rose to be one of the leading batters in the League. Then he was sold to St. Louis and now that club has sold him to Kansas City. "Tuck" and Kansas City do not agree, which accounts for his present trip east

TREASURER OF HOSPITAL BOARD.

H. P. Reynolds Chosen to Succeed E. H. Ladd, Jr.

Friday evening the regular meeting of the board of governors of Muhlenberg Hospital was held at the Public Library. H. P. Reynolds was elected treasurer of the Board in place of E. H. Ladd, Jr., who stated at the last meeting that he would resign. Mr. Ladd, therefore, declined a re-election at the meeting last evening. He has served well and faithfully as treasurer and the board regrets his withdrawal very much. However, the office will be in good hands, and Mr. Reynolds will make a thorough and efficient officer. No other business of any importance was considered at the meeting and an early adjournment followed.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease, and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials Address,

ESCAPED THE FREIGHT; BLUE LINER KILLED

A Central Track Hand Met Swift and Painless Death.

HIS BODY BADLY MANGLED.

DID NOT SEE THE EXPRESS OR HEAR WORDS OF WARNING.

Ellis Sullivan, an Italian, Struck by the Fast Express Saturday Afternoon and Instantly Killed—County Physician Granted a Burial Permit—Dead Man's Family are Now Living in Italy.

Death, swift and painless, overtook Ellis Sullivan, an Italian laborer in the employ of the Central Railway Company, Saturday afternoon about 2:30 o'clock. He was struck by a fast Blue Line train, near the Berckman street bridge, and instantly killed.

Sullivan, who belonged to James Higgins' track gang, was busy with several others making slight repairs to the track near the freight house. A fast freight was passing and Sullivan, who had finished the job, started to walk down the track towards Nethe wood.

The other men saw No. 512, a flyer bound east, which passes the North avenue station at 2:20 o'clock, coming, and shouted to Sullivan to get out of the way, but the noise made by the freight drowned their voices, and also the noise of the coming train.

Sullivan was struck by the pilot, thrown over against the freight and knocked back again. The engineer of the express put on brakes and stopped his engine as quickly as possible, and backed up to the scene of the accident. Sullivan was dead, and his body was horribly mangled. The remains were picked up and taken inside the freight house. County Physician F. W. Westcott was summoned and after viewing the remains gave a permit for burial and the body was turned over to Morgue Keeper Casey. Sullivan will be buried today in St. Mary's cemetery.

Sullivan lived on Lake street in a small house, and had worked for the railroad company seven or eight years. He was always considered a good, faithful man. He leaves a wife and four children in Italy, who will be communicated with at once. The county physician took charge of all the dead man's effects, and will turn them over to his wife.

DEATH OF MRS. LONG.

An Aged and Esteemed Woman of the Borough Passes Away.

The death of Mrs. Jacob Long, aged 81 years, occuired Tuesday at 7 o'clock a. m. at her home on Craig place after an illness lasting about two weeks, from a complication of troubles. Her serious illness caused grave anxiety among her relatives, and her recovery was not wholly expected.

Mrs. Long was born at Martinsville and lived there up to about twelve years ago. During the past twelve years she has resided in the borough She was married 57 years ago to Jacob Long, and she is the first to pass away in the family consisting of herself and husband, four sons and two daughters. The husband and children all urvive her.

Of the sons, William H., lives in Somerville; J. S. B., at Martinsville; Jacob Jr., in New York State, and Dr. M. B., resides on Park avenue, this city. The daughters are Mrs. Mary Van Nest, of Martinsville, and Mrs. Steven O. Staats, of West Second street. There are twenty one grandchildren, and three great grandchildren, all living. Mrs. Long was a faithful member of the M. E. church at Mt. Horeb, and she was an earnest Christian woman, who lived steadfastly in the faith.

The notice of the funeral service will be published later, when the arrangements are completed.

FUNERAL OF DAVID M. DEMAREST.

Rev. A. V. V. Raymond Paid Great Tribute to His Character.

The funeral services of the late David M. Demarest were held from the house corner of East Seventh street and Crescent avenue, last Saturday afternoon at 2:30. There was a large attendance of friends and relatives of the deceased. The Scripture reading and opening prayer was by Rev. Cornelius Schenck, Ph. D., pastor of Trinity Reformed church, and Rev. A. V. V. Raymond, president of Union Theological Seminary, made a few remarks concerning the life of the departed. He spoke of benevolence to charitable organizations, his integrity and success in business, and his modesty and retiring manner. Mr. Raymond stated that it was not the wish of the departed that he be loudly praised for any deeds in life, that he much preferred that a few words be spoken. The doctor also spoke of Mr. Demarest being a good man and true to his word. The services throughout were very impressive.

The floral offerings were many and very beautiful. The pallbearers were all nephews from out of the city. Interment was in Hillside cemetery.

THE ENGINEER WAS ASLEEP AT HIS POST.

A Troublesome Wreck on the Central at Dunellen.

AN OVERWORKED ENGINEER

PASSED A BLOCK SIGNAL WITHOUT SEEING IT.

Engineer Newland Had Been Working for Thirty-eight Hours on a B. & O. Locomotive—His Engine Struck the Rear End of a P. & R. Train—Blocked the Tracks for Five Hours.

Asleep at his post! This was the cause of a disastrous railroad wreck of two freight trains on the Central Railroad between this city and Dunellen Sunday afternoon at 3:30 o'clock. Engineer William Newland, of engine 423, had been working steadily without any sleep for thirty-eight hours, and when his engine and train passed into a block which another train had not left, he was unconscious of what he had done. His train was preceded by a P. & R. freight train in charge of Engineer G. E. Lamb, and Fireman Thomas Brown, both of Philadelphia, which was bound for Jersey City. This train had passed into the block, but before it had cleared the block there was a break in the air brakes and this brought the train to a full and sudden stop.

Engineer Newland, of the rear train, a B and O., bound for Cranford, passed a danger signal with his eyes closed, and after he had entered the block with the largest part of his train, he was too close to the train ahead of him to prevent a collision. The big heavy camel-back crashed into the caboose of train No. 1, thoroughly demolishing it. The pilot of the engine was completely wrecked as was also the tender. The sudden crash derailed two large freight cars on the rear train, filled with baled hay, and effectually blocked three tracks until long after 8 o'clock in the evening.

Engineer Newland received a contused wound of the head and he was taken to Muhlenberg Hospital, where the wound was dressed. Later he was sent to his home on Third street, Philadelphia. His fireman, Thomas Heaton, jumped from his engine before the collision and he escaped uninjured.

Thomas Fardy, the conductor of the head train, was the only man in the caboose, and he jumped before the crash and thus saved his life. No one outside of Engineer Newland was injured.

There was some delay at first, owing to the fact that it was expected that a P. and R. wreck train would arrive to clear the tracks. It was too far away, however, and word was sent to the officers of the Central road to despatch their wrecking train to the scene of the accident. It was after 4 o'clock when the wrecking train arrived and it was after 8 o'clock in the evening when the debris was cleared away and travel was resumed.

In the meantime all trains used track No. 4 westbound at the point of the accident. Many trains were delayed, but the employes of the road performed excellent work. Superintendent G. H. Frecht was at the scene of the wreck and personally supervised the work, together with other officials.

It was only a few days ago that Engineer Newland was reinstated. He had paid a penalty of being laid off for one month for having had a similar accident on the B & O. road. Of late the work has been very heavy and as stated above he had been working thirty eight hours straight, and no doubt was feeling the strain severely. Most of the freight cars were new ones and were being run for the first time. The two derailed cars were like mountains to handle, and a large force of men were engaged in raising them and placing them out of the way.

It was some time after the wreck before Plainfielders generally heard of the accident, and then they flocked in great numbers to the place. An improvised telegraph station was located near the wreck and the operator from Dunellen was engaged in sending telegrams regarding the movement of trains.

Engineer Newland is forty-five years of age and was born in Scotland. He is married and lives with his family in the Quaker City.

FOR BETTER ROADS.

Civil Engineer Dunham Delivered an Interesting Address.

F. A. Dunham, C. E., of this city, has just returned from Springfield Mass., where he attended the first field day of the Connecticut Valley Highway Association. A number of the members and invited guests spent Wednesday at Blandford, in the Berkshire Hills, one of the most beautiful spots in all New England. The object of the association in holding meetings in the various small towns of New England is to educate the residents of such places in the fundamental principles of country road improvements, and to mould the popular opinion so that everyone will vote and work for better roads in the future. A number of the prominent citizens of Massachusetts also made a few remarks and the first field day of the association was voted a grand success.

SIXTEEN GRADUATES CONFRONT THE WORLD

Twenty - Eighth Annual High School Commencement.

AN EDITOR TALKED TO THEM.

DR. MABIE DWELT ON THE IMPORTANCE OF EDUCATION.

Music Hall Filled With a Large and Cultured Audience—Board of Education and Graduates Occupied Seats on the Stage—Presentation of Rewards by the President, Dr. Probasco.

Sixteen young men and young women bid farewell Thursday to their school life on the Plainfield High School and entered the arena of life, having successfully completed their course in that institution of learning. The twenty-eighth annual Commencement exercises were held in Music Hall and were attended by the largest crowd that has witnessed the graduation exercises for several years. The hall was filled to overflowing, fully 1,000 people being present.

After the overture by Neyer's New York orchestra, "Raymond," by Thomas, the curtain was raised. A chorus composed of fifty school children was arranged on a platform in the rear of the stage. The members of the Board of Education, Superintendent H. M. Maxson, and Principal Ira W. Travell occupied chairs on the left, while the graduating class was grouped about the centre and right.

During the musical selections many handsome bouquets and other gifts were brought in by the ushers and placed by the graduates. The ushers were Charles Titsworth, William. A. Fisher, Harry T. Cuming and Albert L. Schomp.

The graduates were as follows:

Latin Scientific Course—Edith Blanche Clark, Caroline Sampman, Marie Agnes McCarthy, Sara Franklin Richards, Lillian Bessie Hunt, Lydie Evodie Lolzeaux, Constance Patton, Elwood Linnell Davis, William A. DeLong, Jr.

English Course—Adele Hope Kirby, Clara Goodman Lobar.

Classical Course—Arthur William Lederer, Ellen Louise Osgood, Henry Arthur Pearce, Henry Wyckoff Brower, Rhey Thompson Snodgrass.

The honor pupils were:

First Honor—Carolyn Kampman, Adele Hope Kirby, Ellen Louise Osgood, Henry Arthur Pearce, Rhey Franklin Snodgrass.

Second Honor—Constance Patton, Elwood Linnell Davis, Rhey Thompson Snodgrass.

After the curtain rose, there were two selections by the school chorus, led by Charles L. Lewis, Miss Mabel Maxson accompanist. They were "How the Army is Over," and "The Son of God Goes Forth to War." The invocation was pronounced by Rev. J. W. Richardson. Then came another selection by the orchestra, "Come Early Morning."

The salutatory and recitation "The Influence of Home Life," was delivered by Miss Ellen Louise Osgood. The full text of it will be found on page 7. The "Babble" waltzes were played by the orchestra.

Hamilton W. Mabie, L. L. D., one of the editors of the Outlook, was the speaker of the evening. His address was, in substance, as follows:—

"Education is not a luxury, it is ceasing to be a privilege, it is coming to be the necessity of the modern man. The day has come when a man must be able to say, "This thing I can do." Command of some kind of knowledge is an absolute necessity for commercial or social success. If you value your safety, go out into the world with some kind of education. This is the age of the trained man and the trained woman. Germans were the masters of the whole field of knowledge, and they were the first makers of great dictionaries and text-books.

"Education is a question of dollars and cents, as well as a question of culture. The country which gives its citizens the best training, is the country which will take precedence in commerce, as well as art and literature. Education is the one process that fits a man to be himself; to do his work in the world. Our heroes on land and sea today are succeeding not because they are braver than the Spaniards, but because of their superior training. Those who emerged from the Civil War in the front rank were every one graduates of West Point. Give yourself every ounce of education you can obtain, young men and women; for education has ceased to be a luxury, it has ceased to be a privilege, it has become a vital and supreme necessity."

The school chorus sang three short songs, "Where Are You Going To?" "The Happy Miller," and the "Owl and the Pussy Cat." After the orchestra had given a medley of airs from "The Highwayman," the presentation of the rewards was made by Leander N. Lovell. They were:

English Composition—The George H. Babcock prize, given by Mrs. Geo. H. Babcock. First prize, Lowell's Works, 12 vols., Ruth P. Maxson. Second prize, Hudson's Shakespeare, 12 vols., Cora Libbey. Honorable mention, Iola Moore and Pauline Denton.

Mathematics—The Dr. C. H. Stillman prize, given by Mrs. C. H. Stillman. First prize, $15 in gold, Ellen Louise Osgood. Second prize, $10 in gold, Carolyn Campman. Honorable mention, Elwood Linnell Davis.

Languages—Given by E. B. Ackerman Greek, Bryant's Iliad and Odyssey, 4 vols., Ellen Louise Osgood. Latin, Longfellow's Works, 12 vols., Helen Louise Hall. Honorable mention, Fannie May Fish.

Spelling—Given by Leander N. Lovell. Prize, Bryant's Library of Poetry and Song. Lily Merrill and Harry Goeller having both obtained 100 per cent in the examination, a prize is given to each. Honorable mention, Majorie L. Burke, Clarence B. LaRue, Evelyn G. Lock, Bertha Mitchell and Edna Moore.

Penmanship—Given by Charles F. Abbott. Greatest Improvement, Scott's "Bird Studies," VanWyck Brooks. Honorable mention, Martin Bowman, Grover Cleveland Marsh. Best writing, 2 vols. of English Poets, Ethel Esther Crane. Honorable mention, Mamie Connelly and Jessie F. Maclay.

United States History—Given by Olin L. Jenkins, M. D. Prize, Green's History of the English People, 4 vols., Lily Merrill. Honorable mention, Clarence B. LaRue and Harold Nomer.

Following another selection by the orchestra came the oration, "What is Worth While," and the valedictory by Henry Arthur Pearce. It will be found on page seven. More music, and then the members of "Immortal '98 received their diplomas, one by one, from the hands of Dr. J. B. Probasco, president of the Board of Education.

Rudyard Kipling's great "Recessional" was sung by the chorus and the exercises closed with the "Stars and Stripes March" by the orchestra while the audience filed out or gathered on the stage to congratulate the graduates and prize winners.

WIND PLAYED HAVOC.

Uprooted Trees and Unroofed Buildings at Randolphville.

The storm of Saturday afternoon was very severe in Randolphville, below New Market, the wind tearing with the destructive force of a tornado through a narrow strip of country. In this limited space outbuildings were unroofed, enormous trees were uprooted and other large trees were twisted and broken off near the ground. Some of the trunks presented a strangely splintered appearance, as fine as strips for basket-making. One farmer, hastening to house his hay, had the whole load lifted from the wagon by the force of the wind and scattered in every direction.

During the high wind the large flag of Mayor Fiek's blew away, tackle and all.

Many of the trees of an apple orchard on Letson's farm, at Stelton, were broken down by the wind, and a large white oak tree near the pond, an old landmark, was also broken off near the ground.

A limb from a large tree near former Councilman Spangenberg's residence at Netherwood blew off, and Mr. Spangenberg and some other residents tried to pull the limb to the ground, for fear it would fall and hurt some one. When they did succeed in getting it loose, it fell directly on the electric light wires, and had to be removed by the Electric Light Company's men.

The ruins of Battle Row suffered in the wind. The chimney and a few lose pieces of timber were blown away.

In this city the rainfall was severe, flooding streets and hollows for the time being. Many trees suffered from the blast, while the young crops were bent over and beaten down.

The tree on West Seventh street, near Spooner avenue, was split by the wind and one half blown across the roadway.

A large tree on the turnpike between Bound Brook and Dunellen was uprooted and fell, partially blocking the path.

SHOCKED BY A LIVE WIRE.

A Colored Man Sent Rolling in the Gutter.

Solomon Lewis, colored, picked up a live electric light wire on the corner of West Eighth and Division streets Saturday afternoon after the shower and received a shock.

The wire was lying directly across the street, where it was liable to trip up a horse. Lewis undertook to break it and lay the two pieces to one side. After giving a few twists, the wire snapped, but at the same moment gave Lewis a shock which sent him rolling in the gutter, which was well filled with water. He is none the worse for his experience, except a sore hand.

A Malicious Act.

Clarence Brokaw, of West Front street, left his wheel standing in front of a Front street store Friday morning. When he returned he found that some miscreant had filled his rear tire with pin holes, the tires therefore being ruined.

—The next excursion to the seashore will be that of the Trinity Reformed church and Sunday-school. The date is July 14th.

AN ACTIVE LIFE ENDED.

DAVID M. DEMAREST, NEW YORK BUSINESS MAN, DIED JUNE 22D.

Though Eighty-Five Years of Age He Was Looking After His Extensive Business Until a Few Days Previous.

The grim reaper has removed from Plainfield another one of her prominent and well known men in the person of David M. Demarest, aged eighty five years, who for twenty two years has resided on Crescent avenue at the corner of East Seventh street. He was actively engaged in business up to a month ago, when he was obliged to relinquish the duties he had performed for years. A few days ago Mr. Demarest caught a cold which developed into pneumonia and this caused his death which occurred June 23d.

Mr. Demarest was born at Pompton, N. J. He moved to New York where he resided at Fiftieth street and Fifth avenue. He was president of the Irving Saving Bank, and a director of the Hoboken Savings Bank. He established himself in business at 103 Barclay street, New York, where he manufactured twine and netting for fifty five years. He was associated in business with Mr. Joralemon under the firm name of Demarest & Joralemon.

While he was well known in Plainfield and elsewhe no one knew the extent of his benevolence. He gave freely to charitable institutions out of his large means, but it was given in such a way that no one knew the donor.

As a business man in New York his rating was high and the integrity of the house was thoroughly established. At one time in his business career he had the exclusive control of the Mexican hammock output.

A widow survives him, and also a sister, Mr. Henry Joralemon, of Orange. He leaves a son, Henry Demarest, of Park avenue, a brother, P. M. Demarest, of Craig place, and a daughter in law, Mrs Abbott, with whom he lived.

MARRIED AT ST. MARY'S.

Nuptials of George F. Greder and Mary E. Sheehan Celebrated.

On June 22d. at 5 o'clock at St. Mary's church the marriage of Miss Mary E. Sheehan, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Dennis Sheehan, of 838 Richmond street, to Geo. F. Greder, of the borough, was celebrated., Rev. Father Westman, curate of the church, officiated. The bride was attended by her sister, Miss Katy Sheehan, as bridemaid, while the bride's cousin, Thomas O'Keefe, was best man.

The bride was gowned in white silk, trimmed with pearl, and carried a prayer book. Her sister wore white nun's veiling, trimmed with silk and carried pink roses.

A reception followed the marriage at the home of the bride's parents, which was attended by about fifty people. Gifts were many and handsome. Mr. and Mrs. Greder are now residing at 184 Duer street, which house was completely furnished prior to the marriage. The groom is an employe of Mr. Zeller, of Somerset street.

Some of the friends of the bride and groom very kindly arranged the decorations at their new home, and people passing the house this morning were much amused to see evidences of several pleasantries perpetrated. Bells, cans, ribbons, etc., were combined to make the effect artistic.

Funeral of Mrs. Pearson.

The funeral services of the late Mrs. William Pearson were held Thursday from the First M. E. church at 2:30. The officiating clergyman was Rev. Dr. W. C. Snodgrass, pastor of the church. There was a large attendance of relatives and friends at the service. The remarks of Dr. Snodgrass were comforting to the bereaved ones and were full of sympathy. The floral display was very beautiful and consisted of set-pieces and bunches of roses. Interment was in Hillside cemetery. The pallbearers were H. E. Hoyle, William Krausee, George Feller, H. Koller George Schuck and Fred Bechtel.

Lost a Top of a Finger.

Frank Soar, of East Front street, a pressman by trade and an employe of the Climax Bottle Stopper Works, had the tip of a finger cut off Thursday afternoon while working at the above place. The finger was caught in a piece of machinery, severing the tip from the main part of the finger. Soar went to the hospital and had the injured member dressed and was able to return to work this morning.

Red Men Elect.

The semi-annual election of Miantonomoh Tribe, No. 118, I. O. R. M., was held Friday night. Justice William Newcorn and J. T. Green were nominated for the office of sachem, and Green was elected. George House man was chosen for senior sagamore and Frank Soden for junior sagamore.

The War Revenue

The City National Bank has sent out a circular to all its customers citing the provisions of the War Revenue Law as they effect checks, drafts and notes.

SCHOOL DAYS OVER FOR BOROUGH PUPILS.

Annual Commencement Exercises in Y. M. C. A. Hall.

A CULTURED AUDIENCE.

GOOD ADVICE GIVEN TO GRADUATES BY PROF. GREEN.

Announcement of Rewards Made by President McCutchen, of the Board of Education—Salutatory and Valedictory Were Smart Compositions—List of Prize Winners—Clever Musicians.

The Y. M. C. A. Hall presented an attractive sight Thursday when thirteen young women and one young man were graduated from the North Plainfield Public High School. The hall was filled with parents and friends of the graduates and there was an abundance of enthusiasm manifested throughout the evening. The decocations in the hall were exceedingly pretty.

Seated on the platform were the graduates, Superintendent Wightman, Miss Susie Glass, principal, President S.St.John McCutchen, of the Borough Board of Education, and Dr. J. M. Green, principal of the Trenton State Normal School.

In connection with the programme there were a number of musical features which were an enjoyable part. There was a piano solo by Miss Caroline Perry, of Elizabeth, and contralto solos by Miss Emma Williams, of Brooklyn, and Mrs. F. M. Ward, of Elizabeth. Howard Case accompanied Miss Williams, while Miss Perry accompanied Mrs. Ward. Each of these numbers were well received and accorded hearty applause

Special mention should be made of the singing of Miss Williams, of Brooklyn. She is a niece of W. F Williams, of the borough, and it was her first appearance in this city. She has a rich voice and her singing seemed to please everyone.

In opening the exercises the invocation was given by Rev G. W. Gardner, pastor of Grace M. E. church, and following a solo by Miss Williams, the salutatory was given by Miss Florence S. Smalley. She spoke on four different points, confidence, courage, perseverance and patience, as essential to ultimate success. She told of the value of education and how much it is worth in life. At the close the address was loudly applauded.

The address of the evening was given by Dr. J. M. Green, principal of the Trenton Normal School. He spoke on education as a fundamental principle and told his audience that if anyone had ideals on the subject he would like to shatter them. In his opinion there are two prevailing definitions of education in this country. First, knowledge, which will help a person to make their way in the world. He urged the necessity of manual training, the study of commercial law, and geography. In the second place, he said that development of mental power is the second definition. He dwelt on the importance of accuracy in thought, and urged upon all to give their children the education that will be of the most value in life. The mind should be thoroughly and intellectually trained.

Dr. Green said that knowledge is not confined to any one department in school, and he thought the country was making a mistake in too much limiting. The speaker stated that he thought the expense of the country caused by ignorance is far in excess of what education costs Many people know much, but still they are worth very little.

Following the address of Dr. Green and a vocal solo by Mrs. Ward, came the valedictory by Miss Bertha M. Stevens. It was an interesting address, in which she heartily thanked the Board of Education and teachers, as well as Superintendent Wightman, for the excellent opportunities offered the graduates to obtain an education. She referred impressively to the time spent in class room and of the many pleasant incidents in school life. The farewell to the graduates and teachers was also impressive. To the juniors she bequeathed the honors for 1899, and trusted that they would make the best of their time during the remainder of their school life in the borough school.

This was followed by the presentation of prizes and diplomas by President McCutchen, in the absence of James 'L. Hayes, president of the State Board of Education, who was expected to perform that honor. He was detained by illness. As had already been stated Miss Clara VanFleet was awarded the first prize in mathematics which was $15 in gold offered by Councilman John Valiant. Miss Elizabeth E. Hoagland received second prize, offered by Mr. Valiant, consisting of $10 in gold. Honorable mention was made of Miss Florence S. Smalley, Miss Laura M. Coddington and Miss Elsie Brokaw. In the contest in English composition, Miss VanFleet won first prize, $10 in gold, offered by Henry McGee, of the Board of Education, and honorable mention was made of Miss Bertha Stevens, Miss Elizabeth Hoagland and Miss Florence Smalley.

In presenting these prizes Mr. McCutchen made a few congratulatory remarks. He complimented the graduates on their achievements and wished them success and happiness in the future. Mr. McCutchen then presented the graduates with their diplomas, at which time each one received beautiful bouquets of flowers and baskets of fruit.

The concluding numbers on the programme consisted of two vocal selections by the High School pupils, and a vocal solo by Charles L. Lewis, teacher of music in the borough school. Following this a reception was held in the hall when the graduates received the congratulations of their friends present.

Following is the list of the graduates: The Misses Elsie Brokaw, Alice T. Barker, Laura M. Coddington, Ella Coddington, L. May Conroy, Rachel G. Emmons, Elizabeth E. Hoagland, Susie Milne, Minnie B. Marsh, Bertha M. Stevens, Florence S. Smalley, Alice Thompson, Clara T. VanFleet, and Frederick Williams. Miss Thompson was unavoidably detained and could not be present to graduate.

A BIG BUSINESS DEAL.

NEW STOCKHOLDERS IN POND MACHINE TOOL COMPANY.

No Change Will be Made in Operation of the Shops, but it is Planned to Run With Less Hard Competition.

A recent issue of the American Machinist says:

"The interest of the late Eugene Maxwell and that of his brother (who is president of the Central R. R. of N. J.) in the Pond Machine Tool Works, of Plainfield, N. J., together with some other stock, perhaps, have been purchased by men interested in the Niles Tool Works Company, of Hamilton, Ohio.

"It is not the intention to consolidate the two companies—in fact, it is the intention to preserve the entity of both of them, but sufficient of the stock of both companies is now held by the same men to enable some of the more objectionable features of the heavy machine tool business which have prevailed in the past to be eliminated. Mr. T. T. Gaff, who is a relative of the Mr. Gaff who was at one time associated with Alex. Gordon, at Hamilton, is now president of the Pond Company, and C. A. Moore and Henry M. Manning, Jr., Max well & Moore, are vice-president and treasurer respectively.

"Although at this writing much remains unsettled, it is expected that both works will run along about as they have been doing, but that there will be some co-operation and some arrangement by which shipping and other expenses will be reduced. Mr. Stebbins is expected to continue as superintendent of the Pond shops.

"Heavy tool builders have had a hard struggle for the past few years, some of them having paid no dividends for several years past, and in fact actually falling behind somewhat. This change will of course by no means monopolize heavy tool building, because if for no other reason there are still large interests outside of the newly-affiliated companies. It is expected, however, that this move will lead to some much needed improvement in the tone of the market."

JUNIORS' CLOSING EXERCISES

Interesting Programme Rendered by the Epworth League.

The Junior Epworth League of Grace M. E church held its closing exercises for the season in the church Friday afternoon, at which time the following programme was presented: Piano solo, Eva Doeringer; flower voices, by Bessie Pope, Carrie VanArsdale, Leah Wightman, Viola Higgins, Ida Belle Conover; recitation, "The Village Express," Ira Pangborn; song, "Happy Little Sunbeams," twelve little girls; recitation, "What Would You Do?" Lavinia Hand, Grace Woolston, Viola Higgins, Willie Morton, Norman Ammerman; recitation, "Better Than Nothing," Mabel Farley; piano solo, May Fairchild; reading, "Earth's House cleaning," Carrie Pangborn; recitation, "How Do They Grow," Bessie Farley and Marion Major. The exercises closed with singing by the members of the League and an address by the pastor, Rev. G. W. Gardner.

The entertainment was arranged by Mrs. A. A. Taft, assisted by Miss Mary Steiner. The Juniors will reopen in September with a basket picnic to some point of interest nearby. The past year has been very encouraging in this department of Grace church work, and the attendance has kept up well throughout. A number of the Juniors have united with the church and give promise of becoming efficient helpers.

AN EXCITING RUNAWAY.

ONE FRIGHTENED STEED STIRRED UP TWO OTHERS.

Robert Pierce in the Midst of the Fractious Horses—His Clothes Torn But No Serious Injuries Received.

An exciting runaway that promised no little danger to the horsemen, wheelmen and pedestrians on North avenue, occurred about 8:30 o'clock Saturday. Robt. Pierce, of New Market, who is employed in A. D. Thompson's New York office, was sitting in front of Mr. Thompson's office on North avenue in a phaeton, to which was hitched a spirited horse.

In throwing his head around the horse caught one of the martingale rings on the end of the right shaft and began to turn around. Mr. Pierce, who was in imminent danger of being upset, jumped out of the phaeton and seizing the horse by the head unfastened the martingale ring, and was about to take his seat again in the phaeton when the animal gave a sudden plunge and started off down North avenue. Fortunately Mr. Pierce had a good grip on the horse's head and hung on gallantly.

In front of A. E. Hoagland's express office, two of Hoagland's wagons stood. The runaway horse darted in between these two wagons, ran until he couldn't get any further, then stopped. By this time people were running towards the man and horse from all directions. Some had presence of mind to seize Hoagland's horses, but then they too began to plunge, and it locked for a moment as if three rigs would be run away with One of the truck horses rose in the air and threw himself, but in a minute or two the animals were quieted.

Pierce, who had hung bravely to Mr. Thompson's horse's head all the time, extricated himself, and found no bones broken, but a big bruise on his leg and a badly torn pair of trousers. Mr. Thompson's horse was cut a little on the shoulder and the blood flowed freely. The phaeton was not damaged.

THE BOROUGH TEACHERS.

Several of the Present Instructors Will Not Return Next Year.

Eight of the present Borough Public School teachers will not return next year to teach. Of that number, Miss Eby will return to her home in Pennsylvania; Miss McCain will teach at Belleville; Miss Frazer will return to her home in Canada to be married, and Miss Himes will again take up her residence in Boston. The other teachers who leave are Miss Emery, Miss Nevius, Mrs. Neal and Miss Needham. They will give up teaching. Those who will return next year are Superintendent Wightman; Miss Susie Glass, principal of the High School; Miss Grace H. Petrie, Miss Crowther, Miss Horn, Miss Mooney, Miss Fantum, Miss Acock, Miss Kiernan, Miss Claypool, Miss Horton, Miss Mackey, Miss Hetfield, Miss Grace Bonney.

BENEATH THE DAISIES THEY PLIGHTED TROTH

Pretty Home Wedding Celebrated June 22d.

MISS WHITON THE BRIDE.

DRANK THE HEALTH OF THE BRIDE IN RARE OLD WINE

The Wine Made From Grape: Picked by Bride's Parents Before They Were Married—Leighton Calkins, the Groom, a Popular New York Lawyer—The Largest House Wedding This Season.

Under a pretty marriage bell of white field daisies in the bow window of the large east room of John M. Whiton's house on Central avenue, his eldest daughter, Miss Nella Bond Whiton, was married to Leighton Calkins, a popular lawyer, of New York, June 22d, at 4:30'o clock, d.m. The wedding was one of the largest home weddings of the season, and was attended by many guests from out of town as well as friends of both parties in this city.

The east room, where the ceremony was performed, had been transformed into a green bower. The bow-window was a mass of greens, while dasies, sweet peas and roses were used in the decoration.

The wedding party formed up stairs, and to the sweet strains of the orchestra playing the Mendelssohn march took their places before Rev. Wolcott Calkins, of Newton, Mass., the groom's father, who performed the ceremony. The party was headed by the two ushers, Dr. Frank C. Babbitt, of Cambridge, Mass., and Harry I. Cummings, of Boston.

The bridemaids were Miss Florence C. Jenner, of New York, and Miss Agnes Opdyke, of this city. Miss Mary K. Whiton, the bride's younger sister, was the maid of honor. The bride came leaning on the arm of her father, who gave her away. The party met the groom and his best man, a brother, Rev. Raymond Calkins, of Pittsfield, Mass. When the brief ceremony was over, the couple held a reception and received the congratulations of the guests.

As soon as the bridal party and a few friends could slip away, they went to another room where the bride's health was drunk from a bottle of rare old wine. This bottle of wine had an unique history, dating back twenty-five years, and carrying the mind to an old farm house in the fertile Genesee Valley in New York State, where one day Mr. Whiton and his affianced bride, who was afterwards Mrs. Whiton, gathered a quantity of grapes on the hillside, which were made up into this wine. A bottle was opened and drunk at the wedding of the couple soon afterwards, and a bottle was sent several years later to Mr. Whiton, who resolved not to open it until the marriage of his daughter.

The costumes of the ladies were remarkably pretty. The bride wore a white satin gown trimmed with lace and a side pearl-colored collar. She carried white bridal roses. The maid-of honor wore a white organdie trimmed with lace over white silk, and carried white sweet pea blossoms. The bridemaids' gowns were of white organdie and lace over pink silk, and they carried sweet peas of a color corresponding with the silk.

The wedding supper was served by Mazetti, of New York, and the music, which was all orchesral, by Richard Arnold, of the New York Philharmonic Society. The couple left on an extended wedding trip, and on their return will probably spend the summer at the bride's home and move to New York in the winter.

The whole upper part of the house was fragrant with flowers, roses, and sweet peas, which are becoming so popular, and were displayed on all sides. The presents with which the young couple were remembered were valuable and many of them of exquisite design and texture. The members of the wedding party were presented with articles of value by the bride and groom.

Charming Inland Water Trip.

The most charming inland water trip in America is that afforded by the magnificient boats of the Hudson River Day Line, plying between New York and Albany. The line is equipped with the iron steamers "New York" and "Albany," which are crafts upon which fortunes have been spent to make them magnificient in appointment and furnishings. The passengers are accorded splendid treatment by the courteous staff of officers on each boat, and every means taken to make the trip either up or down America's noble stream one long to be remembered. A dinner is served on board, the menu being made up of the finest delicacies that the market affords. The boats stop at West Point, Newburg and Poughkeepsie. Concerts are given both morning and afternoon on the boats. F. B. Hibbard is the General Passenger Agent, and his office is on the pier foot of Desbrosses street, New York

LITTLE FOLKS WERE THE ENTERTAINERS.

Closing Exercises in St. Mary's School Friday Night.

CUTE SKETCH WAS GIVEN.

THE YOUNG ACTORS PORTRAYED THEIR PARTS CLEVERLY.

Eleven Tots Told What They Aspire to be When They are Grown Up—St. Mary's Cadets Rendered a Pretty Little Operetta in Good Style—National Color Dance Was of Pretty Effect.

The closing exercises of St. Mary's School were concluded Friday night with a programme entirely different, with a few exceptions, from the one produced Thursday night. The attendance was fully as large and the entertainment was enjoyed by all who were there.

The little folks seemed to be in prominence last night, as they took the principal parts in the entertainment. After an overture, "National Airs," by Miss A. Quinn and Miss M. Smith, on the piano, and a chorus by the school children, who appeared on the stage all dressed in white, a cute little sketch was produced entitled "The Troubles of the Little Folks." Eleven children appeared on the stage, and told what they intended to do when they grew up. Margaret Lutz who was "Hilda, the Mischievous Girl," made fun for all. The little ones who took part were Marguirite Lutz Anna Casey, Mary Fitzgerald, Loretto Fairfax, Mary Buckley, Ellen Cotter, Elizabeth Beabout, Catherine Kelley, Beatrice Young, Elizabeth Young and Helen Lynch

This was followed by a chorus, "The Merry Milkmaids," by the Grammar girls. The Senior girls gave in song, Longfellow's "The Wreck of the Hesperus." The St. Mary's Cadets, an organization of which the parents and friends of the school are proud, had a share in the next number on the programme, an operetta, called "The Merry Company." Those whose whose took part in this were Miss S. Barrell, Miss E. Hanrahn, Miss M. Bray, Master J. Kyle, J. Traynor, M. Kiely, J. Conway and J. Kelly, besides the company of cadets and a number the girls. The party represented a number of young children out for a frolic, and was replete with songs by the different ones named.

J. Traynor was captain of the company, and made an admirable one. Master J. Kyle appeared dressed up as a peddler, with Miss S. Barrell, who was an old woman with a basket on her arm.

M. Kiely, J. Conway and J. Kelly were policemen, and looked as though they could guard the whole city with no trouble at all. Thomas Mack sang a solo.

One of the prettiest things seen was the National Color Dance. This was given by a company of young girls dressed in white, who twirled long streamers of red, white and blue bunting around a pole, after first going through a merry dance. The figures were very pretty, and called forth the applause of the audience. At the close of the dance the dancers moved in an intricate manner around, and the result was a pole twined with the National colors in regular order. Just before the curtain fell the National hymn was sung.

The pantomime, "Jesus, Savior of My Soul," which was so thoroughly enjoyed Thursday night, was repeated A Triumphale March" ended the programme.

Liver Trouble

When the yellow flag of quarantine is hoisted over a dwelling it means disease and danger. So when the yellow flag is in the face—when the cheek is sallow and the clear white of the eye is dyed saffron—there is danger. It is liver trouble. The liver is one of the most important organs of the body. On the proper discharge of its functions depend human health and happiness. When the liver fails of its duty, poisons at once begin to generate, and other organs of the body become involved. Never neglect the liver if you value health. If you are suffering from liver trouble, begin at once the use of AYER'S PILLS and you will find prompt relief and permanent cure.

"I was so weakened by liver trouble that I could scarcely lift my head. While in this condition I began the use of Ayer's Pills, and finding almost immediate benefit, continued their use until I was cured of my complaint."

SALUTATORY.

Delivered at Plainfield High School Commencement.

The text of Miss Ellen L. Osgood's essay "The Influence of Home Life," and the salutatory, delivered at the Commencement exercises of the Plainfield High School Thursday, was as follows:

Gentlemen of the Board of Education:

In the name of the Class of 1898, I give you greeting. To your efforts we owe, in great part, the advantages we have enjoyed; and in welcoming you here tonight, we would thank you most heartily for your constant labor for the good of the Plainfield Public Schools.

It is with great pleasure that, on behalf of my classmates, I extend to you, citizens of Plainfield, a cordial welcome to this 28th Commencement of the High School. As we stand here tonight about to end our connection as students, and to enter into the looser relation of Alumni of the School, as we look back over the four years we have spent together, we clearly see how wise has been the management of those years for us, and we take this opportunity of expressing to you our appreciation of the educational advantages which you have offered us, and of thanking you most sincerely for your interest in the schools which has made their excellence possible. Again in the name of the Class of '98, I bid you welcome.

In all civilized countries, the home is the centre and heart of the people's life. In the home are their great interests; as a rule, a larger share of their time is spent here than anywhere else; and here their first duty lies. Their relation to the outside world is far looser, and the demands upon them less imperative; for in the world one person counts for very little, but in the household one is an important factor, and has great influence in determining the happiness or misery of all.

Every business or pleasure of life is the outgrowth of some want or desire inspired by the home. From this source springs patriotism; men fight for their country because, in preserving their native land, they preserve also their own hearths. When the Romans left their town for their homes the patriotic fervor which made Rome the mistress of the world, died, and the empire sank in ruin. How often the thought of home has impelled soldiers to noble deeds, we can never know, but how great is its power, all national war songs testify. Once the soldier, tenting on the old camp ground, sings

"Give us a song to cheer our weary hearts,
A song of home and friends we love so dear."

or again,

"Strike for home, for life, for glory, Freedom, God and Right."

When a spirit of justice, love, and virtue holds sway in a household, its influence for good on the world of the present and of the future is incalculable. All of the present generation who come within the magic circle of its radiance are strengthened and fortified in their better purposes, and take something of it into their whole lives.

On the future generation, its effect is infinitively greater; for to a child his home is the whole universe, and its walls enclose all the forces which form and mould his character. At a time when he is in a plastic condition, and every impression leaves a mark which he must carry forever, the spirit of the household is the only influence acting upon him. What it makes of him, he will make of his future life. If he becomes honorable, kind and just, his life will be a course of rectitude; but if he develops mean, selfish traits, he will make his life self-centered and narrow.

Few forces, in this world, affect our moral natures to any extent. Education may expand and train the mind, social intercourse and travel may polish the manners, and veneer over many defects of temper and understanding, but a lack of moral qualities, nothing can remedy. This moral nature, so far removed from the world to make or mar, is formed beyond any radical change when a child is completely enveloped in the thought and principles of his home. Continually we are forced to notice how difficult it is to break up habits of speech and manner formed in childhood, no matter how constant the struggle against them.

A child who hears bad grammer at home, may strive to speak correctly, and may learn to write exquisite English, but yet never entirely overcome the habit formed in youth. If this is true in a case where change seems comparatively easy, how much more fixed and lasting are the habits of moral action and thought whose springs have become shut off from any outside force.

By this provision of nature, to the home is entrusted, almost entirely, the moulding of the character and moral perceptions of the children reared there. What that home is, leaves its impress upon them for all their lives. Not they alone, but every one who comes in contact with them, must feel the effect of the home life in the midst of which they were brought up. If it endows them with firm moral convictions, and a clear perception of right and wrong, temptation can seldom lead them far from the right path, and they are sure to help some others struggling along with less light. On the other hand, if their moral vision is clouded, and good and evil appear much alike, they become the prey of every temptation, and they must in failing, drag down with them to misery, if not to wrong, all who are nearest and dearest.

Each home must be the means of giving its children whatever morals they are to have, and it can in no way throw its responsibility upon church or state or society. The sage of long ago spoke with wisdom for all ages when he said "Home makes the man"

"Each man's chimney is his Golden milestone;
Is the central point from which he measures every distance
Through the gateways of the world around him."

VALEDICTORY.

Delivered at the Plainfield High School Commencement.

The oration "What is Worth While', and the valedictory, delivered by Henry A. Pearce at the Commencement exercises of the Plainfield High School Thursday, was as follows:

In these times of hustle and constant activity in every department of human interest, we are forced to neglect something. He is the happy man who has carefully considered and found what shall be undertaken, what shall be left unattempted; what shall be done, what shall be left undone; in short, what is worth while. Let us see what things we can leave behind with benefit to ourselves, let us see what things to grasp with all our energies.

Pretense, hiding the real facts, is not worth while. Truth, knowing things as they are, carries along with itself a sense of sincerity and of reality, a contempt for shame and trickery, of the greatest worth in the formation of character. A defaulter is not happy. He may go to the other side of the world and settle down there as the most respectable of men. But his cares prey upon his mind and drive him to confession, or he overdoes his part and is detected. It does not pay to sacrifice things of real worth for show. If we haven't money to pay a coachman, walking is good. Better walk than cheat the grocer or the butcher. In brief, pretence brings worry and crowds out happiness. And happiness is worth too much to be sacrificed.

Simplicity in thought and action is worth striving for. Simplicity implies a clear idea of truth. The person who has the clearest ideas of the elements of a problem will solve it in the quickest, simplest way. Simplicity means true economy, not niggardliness. Economy does without luxuries to gain something better. Niggardliness does without necessaries for the sake of hoarding the money. "The life is more than meat, and the body than raiment." Mr Gladstone's life was a model of simple living. Yet the verdict of the whole world is that his life was worth while.

Wealth as a sole aim in life does not pay. It narrows the sympathies; its end is selfishness. Barney Barnato, the "Diamond King," could count all his friends on his fingers, because he valued every one only in dollars and cents. His many callers came only on business. He had no real friends. On the other hand, Gladstone, disdaining empty wealth, could number among his friends the people of the whole civilized world. Whether uniting Italy, freeing Bulgaria, or making his last eloquent appeal for the sufferers in Armenia, he was always doing something for others. Therefore wealth as an only object in life is not worth while.

We believe in the gospel of work. Work is worth while. Without it we cannot be happy. "By the sweat of thy brow shalt thou eat thy bread." Retiring from business or from any form of customary activity to idleness means getting ready to die. Statistics prove this. Work is one of God's most blessed gifts to man. Work prepares for other duties. Our school training is but a preparation for the real work of life. It does not tend to special individual ends. It is broader. But general preparation tells. We are thrilled as we read of the recent victory of our ships at Manila, but we forget that that battle was really won thirty or forty years ago when the boys who are now Admiral Dewey's gunners were getting their ideas of arithmetic and geometry. The work then may have been dull enough, but we are catching a glimpse of the possibilities that have flowed from those faithful lessons.

What we need are broad ideas of right ambitions. Men who have made their mark in the world have been guided by high ideals. Bismarck's ideal was German Unity. Gladstone urged Home Rule for Ireland. Lincoln determined to free the slaves. Jesus Christ came to save the world. The ends that we attain may not be so great as these, but the higher we aim, the greater things we shall accomplish. It is certain we shall never reach the summit if we always linger in the valley. Being alert will assist materially toward reaching the top. Every day expressions illustrate this. "The early bird catches the worm" "Time and tide wait for no man." If we then seize our opportunities, we shall not complain of the hardness of fate.

Honesty pays in dollars and cents. For this, if for no other reason, it is worth while. Contentment pays in health. Doctors say a contented mind is half the battle with sickness. Contentment is active. Contentment is gained by relieving suffering. Indifference refuses to know that there is such a thing as want. Contentment rejoices in duties well done. Laziness has not the backbone to tackle them. Certainly contentment is worth striving after; it is worth while.

We need to be independent. "Be sure you are right and then go ahead," is a good motto for action. Mr Gladstone often stood almost alone. But he was sure he was right, and having faith in that right, he pursued it to its logical outcome. Aggressive independence is the thing that counts. At the same time aggressive dependence must be cultivated, for all cannot be leaders. A man on a desert island is independent. How can he help being so? He does not stand for anything. A man who can stick to the right, even when surrounded by evil associations, is worth something. He displays his individuality. It is a good thing to have ideas, a better thing to stick to them. If they are wrong, there are plenty of people to tell us. The man back of the idea is the moving force. In every field more is being made of the individual, the man himself. At school we are allowed to choose our course. Because my best is making a certain line of study is no longer sufficient reason for overwhelming me with every study in that department. Good mechanics are not so often spoiled to make poor ministers. A man's individuality, however, ought not to be like the thorns on a blackberry bush, always annoying his neighbor.

Conservatism is another good thing, so long as it does not interfere with true progress. A man who has settled prejudices against making money rapidly is not likely to be taken in by every quack med. We can't afford to be like a weather-vane. But on the contray, the farmer who sticks to a flail in preference to a modern threshing machine is sure to be behind in these days.

"A shining back and an empty stomach," or living beyond one's income is, then, not worth while. Simplicity is the essence of true happiness and economy. Money for money's sake is narrowing, confining. Broad sympathies make many true friends. Work is a blessing. A lofty ambition inspires and urges on. Only those things which are lasting are worth while. Independence, stick-to-it-iveness, alertness—these are some of the things that are worth while.

We, the Class of '98, cannot but be grateful to you, citizens of Plainfield, for the opportunities and means put at our disposal for learning what is worth while, and for the development of ourselves, our individualities. And to you, gentlemen of the Board of Education, we extend our thanks for your care in guarding our interests, and in keeping before us high ideals of manhood and womanhood, and for the advantages for work and preparation, which we believe will tell in the duties and responsibilites upon which we are about to enter. Classmates: Let us not look regretfully upon the pleasant scenes that are behind us. "Look aloft" is the cry that saves the sailor from falling. Our only regret should be for neglected opportunities. Everything is before us to inspire us to higher and nobler endeavor. Our country is now entering upon the most glorious epoch of her history. We may have a share in her glory; we may help her make her history, if we but will. Let us, then, following the example of William Ewart Gladstone, forsake petty worries and all that retards, fix our eyes on a high and noble purpose and pursue it with all the energy, consistency and individuality that we can command. And even if we do not succeed to the full, our efforts will not have been in vain. Let us take for our inspiration the words of Longfellow:

"In the world's broad field of battle,
In the bivouac of life,
Be not like the dumb, driven cattle,
Be a hero in the strife."

MANY FAST HORSES IN EXCITING FINISHES

Opening Day of Race Meet of Plainfied Driving Club.

A LARGE ATTENDANCE.

JUDGE CODDINGTON CARRIED OFF THE HONORS IN THE SPECIAL EVENT.

Three Events Were Held During the Afternoon—"Hattie Walters" Won the 2:23 Class, Trotting—"Prince S" Was Victorious One Among the 2:35 Pacers—Showers Were Frequent.

Thunder storms and fast horses raced at the Gentlemen's Driving Park on Park avenue June 22d, at the first day of the race meet of the Plainfield Driving Club. The storms were of brief duration and were so arranged that the races were run off in the intervals between them without discomfort to the contestants or spectators. There must have been at least 1,000 people present and most of them were wildly enthusiastic when the horses neared the wire on the last turn.

The first event was the 2:25 class, trotting, for which there were five entries, three being from Plainfield. There was lots of trouble in getting a successful start in the first heat when they did, Appleby piloted "Hattie Walters" to the front and there she stayed, although Brantingham made a desperate effort to head her. "Myrtle Twig" swung in on the stretch and came up neck and neck with the stranger. It was an exciting finish and the crowd jumped to their feet Brantingham's mare was only a neck behind at the wire. "Majella" came in four lengths behind after a tussle with Johnny Osborn, who was driving "Woven Wind." Vail's roan mare was out of her class.

In the second heat, Brantingham took the lead after the half was finished but the bay mare skipped on the far stretch and the mare from Spotswood took the lead and won out in a driving finish.

The last heat was somewhat similar to the others. "Hattie Walters" made the half in 1:14. "Myrtle Twig" pressed her close but broke again on the far turn and lacked half a length to overcome the lead as they passed the judges. The other horses kept the same positions as in the first heat.

The 2:35 class, pacing, furnished much sport and some good racing. They got off badly in the first heat. Brower, with Smalley's "Bolette," the only local horse in the bunch, was pocketed and compelled to pull up The horse skipped and he ell so far behind that he was distanced in the first heat. "Prince S" and "Mary A" fought it out the last half mile and the mare came out second best by two lengths.

In the second heat, "Prince S." laid well back until the last and then came up with a rush. "Mary A." lost her stride and brought up the rear while a big bay, "John L," took second. "Prince S." and "Mary A." had another encounter in the last heat. The gelding came by on the back stretch, then the grey mare broke and "Prince S." scored her third heat by four lengths.

Now the other races were all right but the special for road wagons, owners to drive, as the programme stated, was the event of the day. The contestants are all well known in fame in local driving circles and each and every one knew he had the race. It was afterwards proven that Former Judge W. A. Coddington knew best Besides the Judge, there was Isaac F. Randolph with his bay mare, "Belle Hayes," Johnny Osborn with "Roxie French," and N. B. Smalley with his black trotter, "Ned Norton." They were all driven to light road wagons, with high steel tired wheels.

They had a little trouble getting off at first and Randolph kept shouting at Starter Allen to let them go at. the start. Randolph as usually left in the rear at the start. When they did go, it was a poor start. All the horses broke except the Judge's, and she shot out and took the pole. "Ned Norton" galloped almost all the way to the quarter pole. The half was made in 1:21 1-2, when Randolph began to pull up. He gained slowly on the Judge and almost had him on the far turn when "Belle Hayes" broke. That gave the Judge a little respite, but the brown mare was on his trail and came down the stretch like a whirlwind. It was nip and tuck, but Randolph was moving the faster and his mare's nose glided by and was a good half length in advance as they passed under the wire. Smalley was third.

If possible, the second heat was more exciting. The Judge cut out the pace from the first. On the back stretch "Belle" made her first and only break but she settled down to work immediately. Randolph pushed the Judge closely at the half and followed his wheel around the track. As before, Randolph tried to rush by but the Judge's mare made strong response and got there, although only by the smallest margin. Some of the spectators thought it was a dead heat but the Judge won fairly enough although Randolph's mare was at the throat check of the Judge's pacer.

Randolph became pocketed in the third heat and had to drop behind but he came up at the half all right and went chasing after the Judge who still retained the lead. Down on the neck stretch, Randolph had almost caught his rival when "Belle Hayes" skipped and the Judge secured a big lead. Randolph's mare caught one of her hind feet in a boot on a fore foot and the boot came up striking Randolph in the eye. Half blinded, he kept on and finished four lengths behind the Judge "Belle Hayes" was slightly out on the quarters.

The Judge and Randolph started out together in the fourth heat of the special. They traveled around together, "Belle Hayes" breaking on the near turn, but making it up again on the back stretch. Two other skips put her behind. She came up magnificently on the stretch, but the Judge piled his whip and he won out by a neck.

E. B. Allen, of Flemington, acted in the capacity of starter, and he made a very satisfactory one. There were no protests over his acts and everybody was pleased. He will officiate at all the meets in the circuit. Mr. Allan, Joseph W. Ballentine, of Somerville; Robert A. Fairbairn, of Westfield, and J. M. Parsons, of New Brunswick, acted as judges and timers. C. V. D. Corle made an efficient marshal. Bradley Smalley was thoroughly up in his duties as clerk. W. F. Williams, secretary, and N. B. Smalley, treasurer, were on hand keeping an eye on the successful carrying out of their plans. Judge Coddington, the president, was also in evidence.

Guttman's Band was present and rendered selections in the intermissions between the events.

Dame Nature proved an active ally of the Plainfield Driving Club. The race meet of the club, the first in the circuit of the Central New Jersey Driving Association, was concluded Friday afternoon. The weather was simply ideal and the track in perfect condition. As a result, the track records were set and many of the horses lowered their marks several seconds. The attendance was equal to that of the first day, while the carriages were unusually numerous. The crowd was enthusiastic and patiently waited until after the sun had set to see the last of the races.

The summaries were as follows:

The 2:17 class, trotting, open to 2:30 class pacing, was the first event and furnished much excitement. J. W. Arkell's "Highland Boy and Mr. Wright's "Arpansa" were the local favorites. The first heat was anybody's race until the back stretch on the last half. Then "Arpansa" who had been up with the leaders, started off on her own accord and left the field behind in the finish. Her time was 2:18½, beating the track record by R. A. Fairbairn's "Muta Wilkes." In the second and third heats, "Arpansa" took the lead and retained it, winning easily. "Thersea B" and "Highland Boy" made a lively scramble for second honors

In the 2:30 class, trotting and pacing, there were three local starters, "Lincln," Osborn up, won the first heat. "Albert L" ran away with his owner, M. H. Brandon, overing the mile on a dead gallup. Emery afterwards drove her, making a particularly good showing in the third heat where he finished second. Smalley's "Bolette" would not go in the second heat and was distanced. The winner was "Charles S," and erstwhile hack horse that showed remarkable speed and won the last three heats.

There was no end of excitement in the 2:40 class, trotting. Sweet's "Doctor Palmer" won with lots of lively competition on the part of D. L. Darby's "Sunday" and "Jamie" from a Perth Amboy stable. In the third heat "Doctor Palmer" and 'Jamie" trotted a dead heat. 'Jamie" just came up at the last and ranged even with the leader at the wire. "Ajax" and "Sunday" were not a length behind. "Doctor Palmer," took the last heat easily. The races were concluded at 7:30 o'clock.

GASHED BY HAY FORKS.

GEORGE FIERING HAD A NARROW ESCAPE FROM DEATH.

Sood Under a Pair of Hay Forks That Were Descending Rapidly—Used His Arm to Prevent being Struck on Head

Driver George Feiring, of the fire department, who is now having his ten days' vacation, had a narrow escape Friday afternoon from being instantly killed.

Early in the afternoon he accompanied a friend to Bernard Myers' Riverside Stock Farm at Finderne, and while there became interested in a patent hay-raiser which was being used to unload hay from a wagon and place it in the barn. The lifting was standing on the wagon, when he heard a loud noise above his head. He quickly looked up just in time to see the large forks descending. He instantly put his left arm up to ward off the blow of the forks, and the sharp points penetrated his clothing and cut so deep into the arm as to sever the muscles.

The suffering was intense and the loss of blood great. Workmen about the place soon learned what had happened and hastened to assist Feiring. Temporary treatment was secured, and when he reached Plainfield Feiring called on his physician and had the wound properly attended to.

A young lad employed by Mr. Myers was responsible for the accident. Without thinking he pulled the rope that lowered the forks and did not realize what he had done until after the accident occurred. It will be some time before Feiring will be able to use his arm again. If he had failed to put up his arm he would probably have been killed, for the forks would have struck him in the head.

A QUIET WEDDING.

Miss Emma Vail Case Married to George H. L. Morton.

The marriage of Miss Emma Vail Case, daughter of the late Col. Rufus K. Case, to George H. L. Morton, of Dobbs Ferry, N. Y., was celebrated June 22d, at the home of the bride, East Ninth street, at 5 o'clock. Rev. Dr. D. J. Yerkes, pastor of the First Baptist church, officiated. There were present the families of the contracting parties. The bride wore a gown of pure white, and she was unattended, as was also the groom. For the present Mr. and Mrs. Morton will reside at the home of the bride's mother.

Closing Exercises of the Juniors.

The closing exercises of the Junior Christian Endeavor Society of the Trinity Reformed church were held Friday afternoon. A pleasant time was enjoyed, and the little ones had refreshments before they went away. Miss Elsie Tier, on behalf of the society, presented Mrs. Cornelius Schenck, the president of the society with a handsome jardinier containing a maiden hair fern. The presentation was very much appreciated by the recipient. Rev. Cornelius Schenck, Ph. D. was present, and gave the little ones a talk. The society will resume its meetings after September 1st.

Bicycle and Horse Mixedup.

A little excitement was occasioned on Front avenue, near Second street, Saturday by a wheelman and a horse. The horse was attached to a carriage and a woman was driving. They were going one direction and W. H. Carter, a young colored man in the employ of Dr. Ard, was going the other. The horse jumped one side and then the other. At last he jumped directly at Carter, who rolled off his wheel while the horse fell over it. The wheel was slightly damaged but the horse escaped any injury. Carter sprained his arm in the fall.

Early Closing of All Stores.

The early closing of stores, which has been advocated by the Board of Trade, is now an assured thing. Commencing Tuesday, July 5th, all stores, with the exception of confectionery and drug stores, will close at 7 o'clock; Saturdays excepted, until September 1st.

Graduates Pictures Taken.

The graduates of the North Plainfield school had their photographs taken Friday afternoon by G. W. Montfort, the photographer The graduates were taken singly and in a group. Principal Whiteman was with them.

WORD FROM SANTIAGO.

A PLAINFIELDER, NOW WITH SAMPSON'S FLEET, WRITES HOME.

Interesting Letter From Wm. H. Lawrence to His Uncle, F. E. Kinsman, of Sherman Avenue—Exciting Experiences Related.

Among the many brave men who are now with Rear Admiral Sampson off the harbor of Santiago de Cuba, preparing to destroy the Spanish fleet that now lies hidden in the harbor, is William H. Lawrence, a Plainfield boy. Lawrence's uncle, F. E. Kinsman, of Sherman avenue, has just received a letter from Lawrence, written on board the U. S. S. "Gloucester," last week. Lawrence writes as to lows:

U. S. S. Gloucester, June 21st, 1898.

I wrote you last from Key West. Since then we sailed to the southern coast of Cuba. We are now part of Sampson's blockading fleet, off the port of Santiago, and right under Morro Castle, which, by the way, I hear the New York papers affirm has been destroyed, but we who are right here do not think so. There was a small bombardment on the castle, but little harm was done. It is our ship's duty and position to lay every night under the heavy guns and watch the narrow entrance of the harbor for boats trying to come out. The other night we thought a torpedo boat had us sure, but it was one of our own. In the fleet here now are the New York, Brooklyn, Massachusetts, Iowa, Oregon, New Orleans, etc. The large ships generally lay about three miles from Morro Castle, which is right at the entrance, while we with one or two others lay about a mile off during the day, but at night are sometimes within a quarter of a mile of the fort or castle. It is very dangerous, as our warships have their powerful searchlights thrown on the entrance all night, which keeps us in plain view from the fort all the time. Nearly every night we all have to stand by our loaded guns for hours at a time. I do not think any fighting will be done until the troops arrive, and then we can expect some hot work for us all.

The Spanish fleet is still in the harbor, as our fleet are kept constantly informed by the Cubans, who say that the blower of the Spanish army and navy are inside. Our ship has sent three landing parties ashore, landing three Cuban captains and one general, whom we brought from Key West. On our way from there we went about seven miles up a narrow river on the north side of Cuba and came very near being wrecked. We lost one anchor and ran our bow-sprit among the trees on the river side, but the water being very deep we managed to back out safely. The captain of this ship, the Gloucester, was Lieutenant Commander Hawkins, of the battleship Maine. Wm. H. Lawrence.

Had to Walk Home.

Ralph Harkins and Walter Dreier, both of West Front street, rode to New Brunswick on their wheels, then they traveled by trolley to Metuchen and walked the remainder of the distance. The cause of it all was Harkins' rear tire. The valve would not hold air, neither would it consent to stay fixed. The repair shops were all closed over in Brunswick so they started to walk home. A trolley car came at an opportune moment and carried them to Metuchen. They walked the rest of the distance, arriving home at 2 o'clock in the morning.

$30.05 FOR THREE DINNERS.

James Pedeflou Wins His Case Against Joseph W. Chapot.

Thirty dollars and five cents is not a very large sum to pay for three quiet little supper parties for one's self and a few friends, especially when one has champagne and cigars, but Joseph W. Chapot, of Evona, objects to paying the small bill, so Henry Pedeflou, who keeps the famous tavern in the mountains, which is often frequented by Plainfielders, and where Chapot got the suppers, brought suit in Justice Mosher's court to recover the amount. The case was tried Monday and judgment rendered for the plaintiff, who was represented by Counselor Wm. K. McClure, and execution was issued at once.

Pedeflou claims that Chapot came to his hotel on December 1, 1895, with two friends, and had supper, including drinks and cigars, the bill amounting to $5.30. In September, 1896, Chapot again went to the hotel, this time with three friends, ordered supper, wine and cigars, the bill amounting to $11.35. Next time, in November, of the same year, Chapot and five friends had supper at Pedeflou's, this time with champagne and cigars, the bill amounting to $9.70, total, $26 25 with interest, $3 80 Pedeflou claimed these bills were never paid.

Chapot didn't deny that he had ordered and eaten these suppers, but claimed to have paid for them at the time. Pedeflou had plenty of proof that Chapot didn't pay for them so the Justice had no hesitancy in awarding a verdict in favor of the plaintiff.

A TROUBLESOME TENANT.

John Dorgan Promised the Judge He Would Move Out.

John Dorgan, who lives in one of Samuel Dreier's houses on West Second street, has been annoying the neighbors in the vicinity of Plainfield avenue for a week.

Monday night Mrs. Dreier came to Chief Grant and asked him to go with her and look Dorgan up, as he was shouting and cursing around there and making such a noise that the neighbors could not sleep.

When the Chief had picked up Officer Flanagan and reached Dorgan's house, he found that Officer Lunger had arrested Dorgan and that he was safe in the lockup.

Tuesday p. m. Dorgan was a thoroughly scared man. City Judge DeMeza threatened to give him five months in the county jail, and the prisoner was very much afraid that the Judge was in earnest. He was allowed to go upon his promise to get out of the house.

A HANDSOME BRIDE MISS HARTE MADE.

The Well-known Author's Daughter Wedded Yesterday.

NEW YORK MAN THE GROOM.

ATTEMPT TO ESCAPE USUAL WEDDING PRANKS FAILED.

The Event Solemnized With a Pretty Service at the Home of the Bride's Mother on Putnam Avenue—Decoy Carriage Was Used to Carry Away the Couple Ahead of Bedecked One.

Miss Jessamy Harte, of Putnam avenue, the eldest daughter of Bret Harte, the well-known novelist and fiction writer, was married Monday afternoon at 4 o'clock to Henry Milford Steele, a New York publisher. The wedding was a quiet one. It took place at the home of the bride's mother.

The bride, tall and graceful, looked handsome in a white organdie gown elaborately trimmed with white satin ribbons. She wore a white tulle veil, and carried a bunch of white lilies of the valley. The maid-of-honor was Miss Ethel Harte, the bride's sister, who wore violet flounced organdie, a white hat, and carried white sweet peas. There were also three little ribbon girls, all dressed in white, who were Miss Helen Harte, the bride's neice, Miss Marian Marsh and Miss Susan Wharton, all of this city.

The bride and her party entered the parlor from the dining room where they met the groom and his best man, Herbert Denman, of New York, who came in from the hall

Rev. Dr J. C Bliss, of New York, a former pastor of the Crescent Avenue church, performed the ceremony. Immediately afterwards a reception was held, after which the couple left on their honeymoon.

The parlor was decorated with ivy vines, palms, daisies and roses. The bride and groom stood directly in front of a mass of green foliage, which almost obscured the two large front windows, while the ceremony was being performed. The other parts of the house were similarly trimmed.

Mrs. Edward Stout, of New York, who presided at the piano, played the Lohengrin wedding march as the party came into the parlor and Mendelssohn's as they went out. Preceding the ceremony the sweet strains of Vansen's wedding music filled the house.

The couple attempted to play a trick upon the guests to avoid being the victims of the countless pranks and jokes that are played upon newly-married couples nowadays. The coach stood at the door ready to convey them to the depot, but the groom had provided another carriage, an ordinary hack, which was quietly standing in front of a neighbor's house on Franklin place, just around the corner from the bride's home.

It was the intention of the couple to slip out of the back door, go over the fence, and while the guests were wondering where they were to drive away. But something was suspected and the couple were closely watched so that they could not execute their well-laid plans.

Finally they were compelled to leave by the front door amid a shower of rice and old shoes. Their coach was waiting for them, but here the couple out-maneuvered the guests, for instead of entering the gaily decorated coach which they were to ride in, the groom beckoned to another driver near, and hurrying his bride inside, were driven off by the astonished coachman, who wasn't in the joke

Tonight Mr. and Mrs. Steele go to Groten, Conn., on the shores of Long Island sound, where they will spend the summer. They will live in New York.

Mr. and Mrs. Steele were remembered with valuable wedding presents, and both the bride and groom remembered the bridal party in a nice way.

Among the guests present were Benjamin Kimball, of Boston; Joseph Taft and Ernest Seaton Thompson, of New York; Mrs. Alfred Griswold and Mrs. Frederick Rosenberg, of Jersey City; Daniel Jackson, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Webb Parsons, and Mrs. Edward Stout, of New York; Miss Clara Graves, of Staten Island; S. F. Steele and Miss Kate Steele, of Oswego; Mr. and Mrs. Pond, of Newark; Mr. and Mrs. and Miss Conkin, Miss Minnie and Miss Kate Wood, Mr. and Mrs. Evarts Tracy, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Streull, Mrs. Clifton Wharton, Miss Edith Gilbert, Harry Opdyke and Miss Ethel Bowers, of this city.

Oil Stove Exploded.

Moses Terrill, of Liberty street, was quite seriously burned while trying to throw an oil stove that had exploded out of the window Saturday afternoon. He had just lit the stove and left the room for a few moments when the stove exploded and threatened to destroy the house. The damage was about $20.

Henry Schaffer has accepted a position in Scott's Press Works.

AN EXCITING CHASE FOR A SNEAK THIEF.

The Culprit Went Through Back Yards and Over Fences.

OPERATED VERY BOLDLY.

TRIED TO LOOT THE HOUSE OF W. C. SMITH, JR.

Identified as the Man Who Successfully Robbed the House of Andrew Vandebeek on Duer Street a Week Ago—Justice Crosley Held Him to Await the Action of the Grand Jury

"Stop thief! Stop thief!" were the words that greeted the ears of Chief Marshal Wilson Monday afternoon while he stood near Grocer Arnold's store on Somerset street. At the same time he saw a man running towards him on the opposite side of the street, and not far behind was Arthur Smith, son of W. C. Smith, of Grandview avenue. It was young Smith that was calling, and the man in the lead was Edward Doaney, of New York.

It was between 3 and 3:30 o'clock Monday afternoon that Mrs. W. C Smith, Jr., of Watchung avenue, was calling on her mother-in-law across the street. She sat where she could keep an eye on her home. She happened to look up and noticed a man walk up on the porch. He knocked on the door. No one answered and he pulled the doorbell. After looking in the window he walked back to the door and, taking a key from his pocket, opened the door. He then went in, leaving the door ajar.

Mrs. Smith, Jr., at once told her mother-in-law what she had seen, and after arousing Arthur Smith, who was asleep, the three hurried to the house. They entered and found the strange man standing in the dining room by the buffet. He very quickly darted for the back door. This was locked, but the key was there and it was but the work of a second to open the door. Out of the door he fairly flew and over the fence he went like a shot.

Close behind him was Arthur Smith. He was determined that the sneak thief should not get away if he could help it.

The thief crossed the fields to Fairview avenue, through the yards of Messrs. Hand and Slater to Jackson avenue. From there he went through Conover's yard into Mr. Daily's yard and on to Manning avenue. From the latter avenue he ran into Somerset street and it was then that Chief Wilson saw him. Closely following was young Smith. He was nearly out of breath but succeeded in attracting the attention of Chief Wilson.

The thief ran through Somerset street to Lincoln place. It was there that Chief Wilson gave chase. The man ran between Sharkey's blacksmith shop and Boyce's Hotel and continued a regular hurdle race over fences and through the various yards adjoining. By this time a host of people were on the trial and the chances for the thief to escape were growing slim.

He ran through Mr. Krausse's yard and nearly knocked Mrs. Krausse down. At 25 Vine street he tried to get into the house, but found the doors locked. From there he ran through the same yard to the rear and hid between two fences in some tall grass. Mr. Daily, of Manning avenue, spied the thief and caught him before he could go any further. By this time Chief Wilson and Marshal Campbell appeared, and Mr. Daily turned the man over to them. Those who were there say that the thief was completely exhausted and that his tongue was protruding from his mouth. He was locked up and later in the afternoon he was taken before Justice Crosley who held him for the Grand Jury without bail.

When the man was asked his name he gave that of Edward Doaney and his residence New York It is not generally believed that he gave his right name. He told the officials that he had been employed by some of the largest dry goods firms in New York, and he frequently alluded to his wife and children. It was learned that he called at the home of Mr. Wightman, on Fairview avenue, and represented himself as an agent for the Domestic sewing machine, while at the homes of Mr. Neeley and Mr. Berkhand, in the same neighborhood, he said that he was selling the Howe machine.

Tuesday morning Chief Wilson had Photographer Moffett, of Somerset street, take Doaney's picture, and in a few days he will go to New York with the picture and see if there is a similar one in the rogues gallery.

Former Chief Marshal William Pangborn called at the lockup Tuesday morning and at once identified the man as the same one whom he saw a week ago going into Andrew Vandebeek's house on Duer street. The day following Mr. Pangborn stated that he saw a man enter the yard, but thought nothing strange of it. He is positive that the man is the same one he saw a week ago. When questioned, Doaney refuses to say anything about himself. He will be taken this afternoon to Somerville to await the action of the Grand Jury. He did not have time to secure anything at the home of Mr. Smith, on Watchung avenue, but a charge of breaking and entering was preferred against him.

BAD ENDING TO FUN.

TWO COLORED MEN HELD FOR MIDDLESEX GRAND JRRY.

Richard O'Connor, of Bound Brook, Alleged That he Was Badly Assaulted at the Driving Park Grounds.

A little fun began at the race meet at the Driving Park last week ended rather seriously for Henry Bundy and Charles E. Scudder, colored, this morning. Richard O'Connor, of Bound Brook, began fooling with Bundy, who wore a wide-brimmed hat in true cow boy style.

O'Connor claimed to want the hat, and snatching it off of Bundy's head ran away with it. Bundy and Scudder followed him, and O'Connor claims that the two colored men caught him in an out-house and struck him.

O'Connor came to this city Saturday, and had a talk with Captain Grant, then went to New Market and swore out a complaint against the two colored men before Justice Storms, for, although both men live in this city, the alleged offense occurred in Middlesex county.

Bundy and Scudder were arrested and arraigned before Justice Nash this morning, and were held in the sum $100 bonds to appear before the Middlesex county Grand Jury at the next term of court. Buudy went his own and Scudder's bail.

Bundy is a hard working colored man and Scudder is employed by Captain William Hand.

KING'S DAUGHTERS ELECT.

Annual Meeting of Whatsoever Circle Held Last Night

The annual meeting of the "Whatsoever Circle" of the King's Daughters, of the Park Avenue Baptist church, was held last night at the home of the president, Mrs. A. D. Phillips, of Central avenue.

Officers were elected as follows: President, Mrs. A. D. Phillips; vice president, Miss Myra Runyon; secretary, Miss Margaret Rand; treasurer, Miss Adelia Runyon.

Reports of committees were read, and the president was appointed a committee of one to see what the circle can do for the Girls' Club. Refreshments were served before the members of the circle went away.

DEATH OF MRS. MORGAN.

An Estimable Woman, Well-Known In Local Circles, Passes Away.

Mrs. Clarina Bartow Morgan passed away early this morning at her home, 128 East Ninth street, after a long period of illness. The end was very quiet. Mrs. Morgan was the widow of the late Rev. James Hervey Morgan and daughter of the late Robert and Maria Lorillard, of Boston. She leaves two sons and three daughters, three of whom have been residing with her.

Mrs. Morgan has lived in Plainfield for many years and was a faithful attendant at Grace P. E. church until ill health prevented her attendance at the services. She had many friends in this city who will be shocked to learn of her death.

The fuueral will be held from her late home Friday morning at 11:30 o'clock.

CARRIAGE MAKER SUES.

Elijah Stevens, of Somerville Wants Pay for a Rubber-Tire Rig.

Pope & Runyon, attorneys, have begun suit in Justice Moffett's court for Elijah Stevens, of Somerville, against Augustus Baldwin, of this city, for $107, which amount he claims is still due him on a rubber tire road wagon, set of harness and lap robe, which Baldwin purchased from him in August, 1897.

Stevens is a carriage manufactuer at Somerville, and took a chattel mortgage note on the rig, which he claims Baldwin has not yet settled.

Lookout for Being a Delinquent.

It is this time of year that the person who owes taxes wants to hustle a little and make it a point to see the tax collector. In a few days Collector Bird, or his successor, will publish the names of all delinquent taxpayers, and there are lots of people who would rather pay than to have their names go in print.

Two Ounces of Blood Daily

Are added to your veins by taking one of Dr. Campbell's Red Blood Forming Capsuloids with each meal three times daily. This is the only natural iron medicine known. It is the natural iron extracted from fresh bullocks' blood.

We do no miracles; all we do is to cure people and give them two ounces of new blood daily when they take Dr. Campbell's Red Blood Forming Capsuloids. By enriching the blood they restore its natural iron or Hæmoglobin to it; it cures all the chronic blood diseases, among which may be mentioned anæmia, or paleness; chlorosis, or green sickness; palpitation, rickets, scrofula, consumption or tuberculosis, indigestion, amennorhœa, pains in the head or back, and all monthly irregularities. Physicians will tell you that this is the only medicine in the world that can do this, and if they are up-to-date they prescribe them in all such cases.

DR. CAMPBELL'S
RED BLOOD FORMING CAPSULOIDS

are sold at 50 cents a box, 6 boxes for $2.50 by L. W. RANDOLPH, Prescription Druggist, 112 West Front St. or sent by mail on receipt of price by THE CAPSULOID COMPANY, 146 Fifth Ave., New York.
This is not a patent or secret medicine. It is prescribed largely by doctors.

A Prominent Physician.

A prominent New York physician in discussing the merits of Ripans Tabules with a brother M. D. said: "Several years ago I asserted that if one wished to become a proprietorial and do a bon-dieut deed—one that would help the whole human race—nothing could be better than to procure the Roosevelt Hospital prescription, which is the basis of the Ripans Tabules, and cause it to be put up in the form of a ketchup and distributed among the poor."

Sales Increasing.

The largest retail drug store in America is that of Hegeman & Co. on Broadway in New York City. A reporter who went there to learn how Ripans Tabules were selling bought a five-cent carton and asked:

"Do you have much call for these?"

He was referred to a gentleman who proved to be the head of the department. He said:

"The sale of Ripans Tabules is constant and is increasing, due especially to the influential character of the testimonials in the daily press and growing out of the same, through the recommendation of friend to friend. Satisfaction with them is very general. When once they are used, I notice that a permanent customer for them is made. This, I believe, is through their intrinsic merit, which is the basis for the high character of the advertising. I think them specially useful in the general run of stomach troubles."

An Elderly Lady.

An elderly lady living at Fordham Heights, a part of New York City, and who was known to be a warm advocate of Ripans Tabules for any case of liver trouble or indigestion, said to a reporter who visited her for the purpose of learning the particulars of her case: "I had always employed a physician and did so on the last occasion I had for one, but at that time obtained no beneficial results. I had never had any faith in patent medicines, but having seen Ripans Tabules recommended very highly in the New York Herald concluded to give them a trial, and found they were just what my case demanded I have never employed a physician since, and that means a saving of $2 a call. A dollar's worth of Ripans Tabules lasts me a month, and I would not be without them now if it were my last dollar."

OPEN FOR FIVE CENTS RIPANS
ONE GIVES RELIEF

The time of this interview there were present two daughters who specially objected to their mother giving a testimonial which should parade her name in the newspapers, but to do this the elder lady argued: "There may be other cases just like mine, and I am sure I take great pleasure in recommending the Tabules to any one afflicted as I am. If the telling about my case in the papers enables some other person similarly affected to be as greatly benefited as I have been, I see no objection." The daughters, knowing how earnestly she felt about the benefit she had received, decided she was quite right.

A new style package containing TEN RIPANS TABULES packed in a paper carton, without glass, is now for sale at most drug stores—NOT FIVE CENTS. WAR NEWS!

HOBSON WILL BE FREED

Gen. Toral Agrees at Last to An Exchange.

SEVERE STORM DELAYS ATTACK ON SANTIAGO.

War Department Hears From Shafter—Pelayo Disabled in Suez Canal—Will Stop to Make Repairs—Alphonzo Reported Captured By Blockaders—Citizens Wish to Leave Santiago.

WILL EXCHANGE HOBSON.

Gen. Toral Informs Gen. Shafter That the Exchange Will be Made.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

Washington, July 6, 12:47 p. m.—The War Department received a cable message from Gen Shafter this morning telling of the latest situation about Santiago.

Shafter says that he is just in receipt of a message from Gen. Toral, the acting commander of the Spanish troops in Santiago, agreeing to exchange Naval Constructor Hobson and his men.

The exchange will be made in the morning. Gen. Toral refused to make the exchange yesterday. Gen. Shafter says that Hobson and his men will be brought to this country.

STORM AT SANTIAGO.

It Will Delay the Joint Attack of Army and Navy On Beleaguered City.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

Washington, July 6, 12:58 p. m.—Gen. Greely says that he has received advices from the chief signal officer in Cuba that a great storm is raging off Santiago which will prevent the army and fleet from making a joint attack today.

The fleet was compelled to steam to sea to avoid disaster on the rocks. The smaller ships took refuge in the shallow harbors.

PELAYO DISABLED.

Accident to Machinery of Spanish Battleship Delays Her in Canal.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

Ismailia, Egypt, July 6, 11 a. m.—The machinery of the Spanish battleship Pelayo was disabled as that vessel passed this point en route through the Suez canal. The accident to the machinery was of such a nature as to compel the steamer to stop here for repairs.

The other vessels of Admiral Camara's fleet continued on their way through the canal and will probably await the Pelayo in the Red Sea.

SPANISH SHIP CAPTURED.

A Report at Key West That the Alphonzo XIII Has Been Taken.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

Key West, July 6, 12 m.—A report has reached here to the effect that the Spanish warship Alphonzo XIII has been captured while trying to run by the blockading fleet into Havana.

WILL AID SPAIN.

At Request of Pope, Austrian Emperor is Willing to Assist in Peace Overture.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

Vienna, Austria, July 6, 1:10 p. m.—The Pope has made an appeal to the Emperor of Austria as a Catholic sovereign, to assist Spain in obtaining an honorable peace. The Emperor has replied that he is willing to act with two other powers and use their influence to bring about an honorable and lasting peace.

PANIC-STRICKEN SANTIAGO.

All are Anxious to Leave the Doomed City Before the Bombardment.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

Kingston, Jamaica, July 6, 1:27 p. m—Great confusion is reported among the refugees at Santiago. The British and Austrian consulates are besieged by hundreds imploring a chance to leave the country.

The foreigners were not the only ones who applied to the consuls for transportation from Saatiago on the warships. A number of frightened Spaniard made large offers of money for permission to leave.

A panic prevails among those who cannot go. The British consul is kept busy night and day and considers it his duty to remain. He has declined to avail himself of the British warships in the harbor and his family are determined to stay with him.

The archbishop of Santiago advised the military authorities to surrender the city without waiting for the bombardment. After receiving an unfavorable answer he cabled Madrid, but has received no reply as yet.

WOUNDED ARRIVED.

Red Cross Steamer Brings 320 Wounded From Santiago—Taken to Hospitals.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

Key West, July 6, 11:57 a. m.—The Red Cross steamer Iroquois has arrived at this port, bringing 320 wounded from the front. They were the victims of the first day's fighting around Santiago.

They were transferred to the hospitals here instead of being transported to the North. The Iroquois will be equipped at once for another trip to Cuba.

Will Demand Peace.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

London, July 6, 11:35 a. m—Advices received from Madrid say that peace will be demanded today by the populace.

READING FOR BLOCKADERS.

Brave Boys on the Battleships Want Newspapers to Read

It is not a particularly exciting occupation to be a sailor or a marine on board one of the ships of the blockading squadron. Once in a while there comes in sight a ship, a chase follows, and then the monotony continues for days perhaps. Our warships are well equipped for battle, but they furnish little amusement for the brave boys who man them.

A request now comes to the people of Plainfield to aid a little in furnishing pleasure for those who are fighting for their county. It is that old papers, periodicals and stories be sent down to the boys. If a large number of persons will do this, a liberal amount of reading matter will be accumulated and the hearts of the blue-jackets, and marines will be gladdened accordingly.

Tenders are going daily to the blockading fleet from Key West and every paper sent is sure to get into the hands of some intelligent lad who is anxious to know how the world outside is getting on. All reading matter should be sent to R. E. Steele, Naval Base, Key West, Fla., where it is sure to be looked after and distributed among those for whom it is intended.

600 LOST OUT AT SEA.

French Liner La Bourgogne in Collision With the Ship Cromartyshire.

MRS. LACASSE WAS SAVED.

The Ship Cromartyshire Collided With the French Steamer in a Dense Fog —Cromartyshire Saved 200 From the La Bourgogne—Mr. and Mrs. La Casse in the Water Eight Hours.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

Halifax, Nova Scotia, July 6, 10:5 a. m—The Allan Line steamer Grecian has just entered the harbor with the ship Cromartyshire in tow. The latter reports that at 5 o'clock on the morning of the Fourth she collided with the French Line steamer LaBourgogne, bound from New York to Havre, carrying 800 passengers.

The accident occurred in the dense fog, sixty miles south of Sable Island. The steamship sank almost immediately after the collision.

Of the 800 souls aboard, including passengers and crew, only 200 were saved. One hundred and seventy passengers, including only one woman, were saved. Thirty of the crew, including the purser and three engineers, were saved. The other officers were all drowned.

Mrs. A. D. LaCasse, of Plainfield, N. J., was the only woman saved. Mr LaCasse was also saved. Lacasse and his wife were in the water eight hours, clinging to a raft before they were picked up by a boat from the Cromartyshire.

They lost everything but what they wore at the time. Money and valuables are all gone. Mrs. LaCasse says that the officers stayed at their posts, going down with the ship.

The passengers, with the exception of Prof. LaCasse, were below decks when the collision occurred. LaCasse rushed to his stateroom, got his wife out of the berth and partially dressed.

They hastened to the deck to be precipitated into the water on reaching it. They were not long in the water, however, when they found a partially submerged raft on to which LaCasse lifted his unconscious wife and then climbed himself.

It is believed by those who have interviewed the survivors that no effort was made to save the women. Some of the foreigners fought for places in the boats.

La Casse says several boats capsized and all on board were drowned. It was fifteen minutes after the accident before the steamer went down and there was time to save women and children.

Most of those saved were steerage passengers and sailors. The crew of the Cromartyshire express the belief that there must have been foul play considering that only one woman was saved out of 200.

Mr. and Mrs. Adrain C. La Casse have resided in Plainfield for a little over a year. They came here two years to continue the work of educational instructors in which they have been engaged for several years.

Mr. LaCasse, last fall, accepted the position of instructor in physics and French in the New Jersey Military Academy under Prof. A. D. Warde, having already formed a co-partnership with Miss Clara Hollwig, in the School of Languages, at the corner of Watchung avenue and East Fifth street.

Mrs. LaCasse gave lessons in French to the children of several wealthy citizens, but beyond attending to instruction she never associated with any of the families of her pupils and they knew nothing more than that she was an accomplished and thorough-going instructor.

She and her husband lived modestly at 115 Church street when they first moved to town, but subsequently removed to 105 Duer street, where they now reside. Of intimate acquaintances they had very few—in fact, only two in this city.

Miss Hellwig called on them once in a while and they on her. With Rev. and Mrs. George Hauser, of the German Reformed church, they were

COUNCIL STOPS THE TROLLEY GOING EAST.

Denied the Application for East Second Street Franchise.

PROPERTY OWNERS OBJECT

HEARING ON RICHMOND STREET FRANCHISE POSTPONED A MONTH.

Argument of L. W. Serrell, Jr., Proved Unavailing on the Council—Resignation of Collector Bird Was Not Accepted Because Accounts Had Not Been Audited—Ordinances Passed.

There was a large crowd of interested spectators present at the July meeting of the Common Council last Tuesday all desirous of learning what disposition would be made of the petition for a trolley through East Second street. After much discussion on the subject the petition was denied and hearing for other extensions deferred until the August meeting. Collector Bird is still retained as collector awaiting the action of the Council regarding his accounts.

The regular order of business was suspended to give a hearing on the question of extending the trolley through East Second street. As against the trolley is lengthy communication was received from A. E. Bushnell, who begged the Council not to grant a franchise to the trolley company through East Second street, and presented objections offered a week ago.

Lawyer W. A. Coddington, for the objectionists, presented another remonstrance, and made a few remarks, in which he asked the Council to give his clients an extension of time, so a suitable reply can be presented in argument against the papers and maps filed by the trolley company.

This request was favored by L. W. Serrell, Jr., for the company, and was, in fact, asked for by Mr. Serrell.

Mr. Barrows stated that if the people do not want the trolley the Council should not grant a franchise to the company. He offered a motion that the application for East Second street be denied, and that the one for Richmond street be laid over till the August meeting.

Mr. Buckle made a few remarks in favor of the trolley and said that a number of those now posing as objectionists are the very ones who want trade to come to Plainfield.

Mr. Newman did not favor the trolley and thought that some other streets should be used. He did not, however, want to appear as opposing public improvements.

Mr. Barrows' motion was not adopted at this time, but later in the evening it was.

Mr. Serrell made a plea for consideration on the part of the Council, and expressed an opinion that the Council does not appreciate the efforts being put forth by the company to secure the right of way. He urged that the Council grant a stay for one week for another hearing.

A petition was received from the residents of East Second street asking the Council to repair the street between Richmond and Berckman street.

Another petition was received from residents of East Sixth street and Richmond street, asking for crosswalks.

Building Inspector Doane reported that seven permits were granted during the month. Street Commissioner Gavett reported the granting of twenty-three sewer permits.

The report of City Judge DeMeza showed that during the past month there were before him 108 prisoners, of which number forty were fined; seventeen committed, nine discharged, thirty-seven sentence suspended, two are under bonds and there are three untried cases. The sum of $360 75 was received, and after deducting expenses the sum of $226.17 was turned over to the city treasurer.

Mr. Runyon offered a resolution to the effect that all bids received for the erection of a new hosehouse in the West End be rejected and that all bidders receive their deposited checks. Another resolution was offered by Mr. Runyon providing for a change in the new hosehouse, to lessen the cost. Also that bids be advertised for building to the new plans.

Mr. Runyon stated, in explanation, that it has recently been learned that the work can be done much cheaper than the lowest bid received.

Mr. Barrows offered a resolution that the trolley company's petition be taken up, and that the application for East Second street be denied and that further hearing in the matter be deferred until the August meeting. The

A DISASTROUS RUNAWAY.

COLLIDED WITH TWO RIGS AND ALSO KNOCKED OVER A LAMP POST.

The Frantic Horse Belonged to A. E. Hoagland and Broke His Halter Without Any Apparent Cause Whatever.

If there is anything in being superstitious, A. E. Hoagland, the North avenue expressman, has reason to feel that "hard luck" is following him. Last Sunday a cat appeared near his residence acting strangely and Hoagland killed the feline. Tuesday afternoon about 5 o'clock one of his spirited horses ran away and considerable damage resulted.

The horse was tied in front of Hoagland's place on North avenue, when without any apparent cause the animal broke the halter and ran down toward Park avenue at full speed. The heavy wagon struck E. H. Van-Buren's light two seat wagon and wrecked one of the rear wheels. The coachman sat in the wagon and barely escaped serious injury.

After striking the wagon the truck swung around and struck the large lamp post in front of McVey's restaurant, taking it out by the roots and completely demolishing the engraved glass in the top.

The runaway animal in trying to turn from North avenue into Park avenue slipped and fell on the cross-walk. At the same time the horse and wagon collided with a team of horses attached to a hay wagon which was standing in front of Miss Lincoln's floral conservatory. The team was taken off its feet and for a few minutes there was a general mixup. Mr. Hoagland's horse and wagon were quickly taken care of by its owner. It was found that no damage had resulted to it.

The team of horses thrown down belonged to Mr. Nason, of Mt. Bethel, and was in charge of a farm hand. So far as could be learned they were not injured. One of the team attempted to run away, but was caught just in time by Dennis Kane, who happened to be near.

Mr. Hoagland at once consulted Lawyer W. S. Angleman and later referred the owners of the two rigs to his lawyer. Mr. McVey was also referred to Lawyer Angleman. It is not known exactly what the damages will amount to.

WILL FORD WRITES HOME.

He is With Fifth Artillery—Expects to be in Cuba Soon.

Mr. and Mrs. William J. Ford, of East Fourth street, have received a letter from their son, William Fred Ford, who is now quartered at Tampa with Battery F, of the Fifth United States Artillery. He reports that the men are all in good health and are given good rations despite the stories to the contrary. They are very cheerful at the prospects of going to the front as they expect to leave for Cuba very soon. The guns, horses and ammunition have already been loaded on the transports. They are probably now on their way as this is published.

He tells that they have just received a thousand little bags containing needles, pins, cotton and other handy article from the W. C. T. U. in Florida, which they greatly appreciate.

They were to sail for Santiago Saturday and expected to reach there in five days.

Dog Attacked the Cyclist.

F. O. Herring, of Park avenue, had an unpleasant encounter with a fiery little canine near Metuchen Saturday afternoon. He was riding peacefully along on his wheel when there was a rush, a series of barks and the naughty little dog set his teeth in the calf of the leg of Mr. Herring. Then Mr. Herring dismounted and hurled rocks after the dog, which was in the meantime half a mile away.

Trinity's Excursion.

If you want to have a good time for one day and enjoy it with good people who will make everything pleasant for you, don't fail to join the members of Trinity Reformed church and Sunday-school on their annual excursion to Asbury Park on July 14. This will be the first church excursion to the shore this season.

Trolley Carried 1,000,000 Passengers.

The trolley is a pretty good thing in Plainfield according to the statement made last evening by L. W. Serrell, Jr., at the City Council meeting. One million passengers were carried in this city last year and this year bids fair to exceed that number.

The Ending of a Fight.

The quarrel and fight which Thomas Waring and John Mullen engaged in Tuesday morning in front of the City Hotel cost Waring a $5 fine and Mullen 60 days in the county jail, when arraigned in court next morning.

MAKING HEALTH OF SCHOLARS BETTER.

Report of Medical Examiners to Board of Education.

THEIR RECOMMENDATIONS

BETTER DRINKING WATER AND LESS DIRECT LIGHT ON EYES.

The Board Decide to Adopt the Suggestions Made by the Medical Examiners, Whose Work Has Been So Satisfactory That They Have Been Engaged for Another Year at $300 Each.

The time of the members of the Board of Education at the meeting Tuesday night was chiefly taken up discussing plans for the better health of the pupils, in accordance with certain recommendations made by the two physicians on the examining board, Doctors T. H. Tomlinson and William H. Murray. The resignation of Miss Mary Grace Caldwell, teacher of the third class, High School, was also accepted, at her request. Miss Caldwell has been offered a position as teacher at Dana Hall preparatory school, Wellesley College, where she will receive an increase of salary.

Secretary Lounsbury stated that Collector Elias Bird had turned over to the board $919 62, which represented taxes collected by him, with interest, extending over a period of several years.

A petition was read which was signed by J. T. Vail and eleven property holders and residents of East Sixth street, between Richmond street and Franklin place, asking that the fence in front of the Bryant building be removed.

President Probasco was in favor of complying, especially as several of the fences in that vicinity have been removed, and it is the intention of all of those whose names were affixed to the petition to do the same. Mr. Lounsbury opposed the plan, for fear the children of the neighborhood would use the grass plots as a play ground. Action was postponed until the next meeting.

The report of the medical examiners showed that during the month of June 130 pupils had been examined. One hundred and two had not been vaccinated and five showed defects in their vision. Since their appointment the examiners have examined 1,947 pupils. Out of these 100 showed defective eye sight and fifteen defective hearing. Many showed throat troubles. The physicians reported that many of the pupils had improved greatly in health since some defects had been remedied.

They made three recommendations. First, that better ventilation be provided for the Washington and Bryant buildings; second, that the seats of the pupils be so arranged that they will not need to face the light continually; third, that drinking fountains be placed in all the schools.

Mr. Lounsbury thought that the Stillman, Franklin and Bryant buildings could be fitted up with fountains at a cost of $200 or $250 each. After a discussion Mr. Lovell moved that the Board advertise for bids for putting fountains in the Stillman, Franklin and Bryant buildings. This was carried. The services of the two physicians were retained for another year, at the same salary, $300 a year.

It was voted to give the finance committee power to borrow $500 to pay bills now due. The Board then adjourned to meet July 19th.

OIL STOVE CAUSES TROUBLE.

Wm. Banks Sues Augustus Hoagland for the Return of an Old Stove.

There promises to be a lively time in Justice Mosher's court next Tuesday over an oil stove when the case in tort of Wm. Banks against Augustus Hoagland will be tried.

Hoagland claims Banks gave him the stove, but Banks claims the other is retaining possession of it unlawfully.

Hoagland says Banks offered him the old stove one day not long ago, so he took it away, fixed it up, and began to use it. A week ago while Mrs. Hoagland was busy over the stove, he says one of Banks' men came and demanded the stove. Mrs. Hoagland told him to take it, but it being hot he decided not to. Then came an order from Banks to return the stove in 24 hours or expect to be sued. Hoagland failed to obey, thus the suit. The damages are placed at $25.

Miss Wier Married.

Miss Nina May Wier, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harlow Skeel, of Frankfort, was married Saturday to David Lewis, of Ilion, N. Y., at the home of the bride. She formerly resided on Rockview avenue, this city, and has a number of acquaintances here. Mr. and Mrs. Lewis will reside at Ilion.

MANY GATHERED TO SEE FIREWORKS.

Postponed Pyrotechnic Display of Park Club Tuesday Night.

A CREDITABLE EXHIBITION

A LARGE AUDIENCE WITNESSED THE DISPLAY FROM CLUB GROUNDS.

There Were Many Others Who Gathered in the Neighborhood to Witness the Display—Rockets and Bombs—Some Crossed the Brook and Invaded the Club Grounds.

Out on the well-kept lawns of the Park Club there was a great gathering Tuesday night to see the postponed exhibition of fireworks that the celebration committee of the club had planned for the night before.

But the crowd was not confined only to the club grounds. From far and near there was a steady procession which had the Park Club for its Mecca. They gathered in the streets, in the by-ways and in the fields. The more venturesome leaped from stone to stone across the brook and invaded the very club grounds from the rear. The Washington avenue bridge early became a seething mass of humanity, the sight-seers in which good humoredly jostled each other in their efforts to catch a glimpse of the display. The neighboring lawns were invaded by both sexes in holiday attair. Washington avenue itself was lined with spectators who chatted and laughed during the intervals and joined in the characteristic "ah-h-h," that greeted the prettiest sights.

The Park Club display was the only large one in the city, which accounted for the great crowd that assembled. The club had issued a number of invitations for the display and had provided a large number of camp chairs, all of which were occupied.

The members, their families and a goodly number of invited friends occupied the lawn at the time set forth for the display, 8:15 o'clock. While everybody was busily chatting there was a sudden scurrying among the men down on the tennis courts, where the fireworks were shown. A rush, a cloud of sparks and a gigantic rocket shot heavenward, to burst with a heavy detonation. A signal, it seemed, to all Plainfield that the display was about to begin.

Other saluting rockets followed and then the colored lights illuminated the scene, while mines and batteries of Roman candles fired away from the background. Rocket after rocket rushed forth, some almost directly upward and others gyrating in strange wavering orbits, to send their showers of golden rain, release their parachute or group of colored stars far above the spectators.

There were several set pieces, including a bicyclist who pedalled backward as rapidly as possible, a variegated donkey who bucked after the most approved fashion while explosions took place on all parts of his anatomy. Then there were other set pieces that were very pretty but had no particular characteristic.

The display of rockets was continuous. Bombs were thrown high in the air and various other attractions known to the pyrotechnic trade were shown. The display closed with a shield of fire in the National colors which was greeted with loud applause. Then came several saluting rockets and all was over.

Then, while the spectators outside wandered homeward, the Park Clubites gathered in the little ballroom of the club and enjoyed an informal dance.

BOY HURT; FATHER MAD.

Druggist Hall Arrested on the Complaint of Joseph Miller.

Joseph G. Miller, of Watchung avenue, caused the arrest of Charles H. Hall, the Watchung avenue druggist, Tuesday afternoon on a charge of assault and battery on Joseph Miller, the former's seven-year old son. Mr. Hall was arraigned before Justice Noah and gave bonds to await the action of the Grand Jury.

Mr. Miller claims that June 28th his son went into the drug store and began to play with the cat, and that Mr. Hall rushed at him, seized him by the hair and lifted him off the floor, then pulled his ears. The defendant, Mr. Hall, waived an examination, and had nothing to say except that the boy has been annoying him a variety of ways for some time.

Mr. Miller formerly kept a drug store on East Front street.

Miss Alice Day, of East Front street, is visiting her aunt at Newburgh.

The Misses Hagan, of Prospect avenue, are registered at the Minot House, Asbury Park.

FOURTH ON TOPHET.

W. H. W. CAMPBELL.

It was the day before the "Glorious Fourth." At Royston the boys reckoned a third of the year, at least, from the national anniversary. "It was about a month before the Fourth" or "three weeks after the Fourth," they would say, in their schoolboy stories relating to this period of the year.

For a number of days now Royston had betrayed symptoms of the approaching festivities. The windows of the village store were unutterably gorgeous with flags, fire crackers, rockets, pin wheels and other paraphernalia of patriotism.

Peaceful twilights had been disturbed by the pop of the prehature torpedo and the toot of the furtive horn. A few impetuous youngsters had gone so far as to anticipate the jubilee by sounding this last implement of torture beneath sundry windows after the witching hour of bed time.

Aunt Patience Halliday was interrupted in her slumbers by young Ed Griggs on one of these rehearsals. She happened to have a temper which sometimes went off as unexpectedly as a mouse trap, and upon this occasion she discharged a pitcher of water upon the musical rascal's head.

He then, in a spirit of revengeful dopravity, flung a lighted pack of crackers into her window, and Aunt Patience choked and sneezed and made several remarks which much resembled "Lad-a-massy!" with more vigor than elegance.

Young Ed howled with delight in spite of his dripping mane, till the whistle of Uncle Uriah's switch about his legs changed his tune to a dismal shriek.

All the other boys, as well as Ed, were in a state of intense nervous excitement—and the girls, too, for that matter. For was not there to be a procession and a picnic, and the reading of the Declaration of Independence by Professor Stubbs of the Academy and an oration, and music by the brass band?

Oh, yes, anybody could fully comprehend the magnificence of this last item who went near enough to Farmer Hill's barn to discover the history of all those mysterious thumps and whacks and squeals which echoed nightly from its interior.

But the crowning glory of the approaching festival—at least in the minds of Fred Jones and Ed Griggs, who had devised it—was the camping out on the summit of Mount Tophet. This scheme had been kept a profound secret from the other boys, except Geo. Burrall and Elmer Clapp, who had been invited to take a hand in it.

At its first proposal Dominie Jones, as he was called—the pastor of the church, and Fred's father—was not in a favorable mood.

At length, however, sundry recollections of his own boyhood, combined with a paternal sympathy in Fred's disappointment, induced him to relent. But he consented to the camping out on this condition: That Fred's big brother Joe should go along and keep the smaller fry out of danger. So it was settled, and the necessary preparations were made with all due mystery.

With their combined savings the boys had hired Blacksmith Pelton's exploder, to heighten the triumphs of the occasion.

This was an ancient anvil, which had been bored out and converted into a very creditable cannon—that is, for the purposes of domestic celebration.

Its reputation for making windows rattle and terrifying old ladies was immense, and the boys had no doubt but its vociferous cracking from the top of Mount Tophet would enable the coming Fourth to usher itself in with uncommon glory.

The day before the Fourth had now arrived, as has been mentioned, and, after much nervous and perspiring preparation, toward the close of the afternoon the boys set forth upon their grand expedition.

They avoided public notice by escaping through a cart path which led from Dominie Jones's barn and joined the highway below the village.

The brisk exploder was slung upon a pair of wagon wheels, on which was also lashed a bulgy basket of provisions and the camp equipage.

The four youngsters were in the highest spirits, while Joe Jones took the lead with the dignity becoming his nineteen years.

The climb to the top of Mount Tophet was a favorite one with the academy boys. Many a thrilling tale of their hair-breadth escapes in scaling its precipitous crags found its way, in letters, to the bosoms of their families.

In point of fact, however, a very respectable path led to the summit, and so it chanced that, while sympathetic mothers were thrilling with anxiety over the perils of their boys at that very moment the young Munchausens were seated snugly by the roadside, regaling their appetites on cookies and ginger pop.

Our little procession, therefore, had no difficulty in hauling its battery to the top of the peak, which was reached just in time for a lovely sunset view of Royston and all the country round.

Joe had brought along a worn and faded American flag, with a coil of rope attached.

This he proposed to fasten to the tallest sapling visible from the village.

"Don't you remember, boys," said he, "how a party of Americans climbed to the very top of Mount Blanc, in Switzerland, and how it was telegraphed all over Europe that the Yankee flag was floating from the snowy summit of the mountain on Fourth of July morning? What is the Fourth, anyway, to a Yank without his flag?"

The party cheered this patriotic sentiment heartily, and proceeded forthwith to storm the provision basket, as if it were the enemy's works.

The assault was successful, the booty was duly divided, and in large part consumed, and then they began their preparations for the eventful night.

First they loaded the brisk exploder up to the muzzle. Then leaves and branches were heaped together for the bonfire—which was lighted at dusk and duly impressed such villagers as observed it by a dim and fitful twinkling in the distance.

Next, heaps of fragrant evergreen boughs were spread beneath the trees for purposes of repose.

But Fred and Ed Griggs had their own private plans for sleeping. They had each brought a pair of blankets and some bits of rope, and proceeded with these to extemporize a couple of aerial hammocks.

Bending down two slender trees, they lashed an end of the blankets to each. Then, as the saplings sprung back, the blankets were hauled well up into the air, and had the double advantage of a cradle and a swing.

Ed and Fred climbed into their hammocks with no little difficulty and pulled their spare blankets over them, while the other boys disposed themselves upon their heaps of branches, protected from the night air by overcoats and other coverings.

There had been some anxiety among the party on the question of waking up at the proper time, and they came very near a quarrel on the subject of detailing sentries. However, as nobody was willing to mount guard, there was nothing to do but to take the chances, trusting to the internal stirrings of patriotic fervor to wake them up betimes.

So Ed and Fred rocked themselves into a gent[illegible] ber in the tree tops, while [illegible] her [illegible] ment to the land of Nod amid delightful whiffs of spicy hemlock.

Dear old Joe snored like a saw mill by their side.

It could not have been very long after when Fred had a singular dream. He thought he was a pin cushion and his sisters were sticking pins into him. Consequently he woke up with great zeal for the purpose of remonstrating.

He discovered that he had sagged down into his blanket till it was as tightly drawn under him as a potato's skin on a potato. And through the blanket somebody certainly was sticking something into his legs and his neck. He squirmed uneasily in his nest, when his ear was saluted by the shrill buzz of an orchestra of patriotic mosquitoes, who were out of bed and dressed already. At the same time he heard a prodigious slap in Joe's direction.

Fred stretched out his head and called:

"Joe! Joe! Do you feel anything in particular down there?"

"Feel!" growled Joe in response. "Why, they are fighting the battle of Lexington all over my nose, and a hundred of 'em at least are reading the Declaration of Independence right in my ears."

At this the other boys, who had been concealing their agonies, burst into peals of laughter and shouts, and the whole camp was broad awake. No need of sentinels for the rest of that night.

The boys tossed and scolded and thumped themselves, and further relieved their minds by stories and jokes, till the first tints of day appeared.

Then all were speedily astir. The hammocks were unslung and packed, and then the patriot horde undertook a fresh assault upon the enemy's works and made a clean sweep of the provision basket.

By this time the rays of the coming sun began to gild the eastern horizon.

As yet all was quiet in the village, for the orb of day does not get up as early on that level as on the top of so respectable a mountain as Tophet.

Joe's flag was lazily flapping on its tree in the light morning breeze.

With great solemnity the anvil was hauled into position. A flush of expectancy followed and then Joe applied the fuse. There was a dull, heavy explosion and a loud cry from Joe:

"Look out, boys!"

But quicker than his words the brisk exploder flew in fragments through the air.

Fred was standing not far from the edge of the precipice, and a huge piece of iron, weighing forty or fifty pounds, was hurled directly toward him.

The cloud of smoke from the exploder concealed him from Joe's eyes for an instant, while the fragment of metal was heard crashing down the cliff two or three hundred feet below.

When the breeze blew the smoke away Fred had disappeared. The fatal missile had apparently hurled him over the edge of the crag.

Joe's heart gave a mighty thump and the ground seemed to reel beneath him. Then he gave vent to loud shrieks of dismay.

Joe instantly sprang to the edge of the precipice, when—could he believe his eyes?—he beheld Fred, apparently unharmed, in a sitting position, suspended in a bushy shrub, or small tree, which sprang from a crevice in the mountain side, but a few feet below the top.

In a twinkling Joe rushed to the tree from whence the flag was waving and in an incredibly short time had the bunting on the ground and the lanyards in his hand. He attached the rope to Ed Griggs's waist and lowered him down to Fred's side.

There he got good footing and, as Fred was now reviving, he fastened the lanyard about him. Fred grasped it with both hands and sturdy Joe quickly hauled him up. By the same means Ed himself was soon brought again to terra firma.

It seemed that the flying fragment of the exploder had struck Fred upon the arm, tearing his jacket sleeve and inflicting a slight flesh wound. The force of the concussion and the surprise carried him over the brink, and only the fortunate interposition of the stout bush saved him from being dashed to pieces on the rocky debris far below.

It is needless to say that the celebration came to an abrupt end. The camp equipage was hustled together and the party started down the mountain as soon as Fred had sufficiently recovered his strength.

When the road became smooth enough to permit of it, the disabled patriot was mounted, with the devastated provisions basket and other baggage, upon the wagon wheels. As they descended Fred's spirits rapidly revived, although he suffered considerable pain.

"I don't mind it," he said pluckily. "I mean to go to the picnic just the same."

As the little procession entered the village street the celebration was in full blast, with jangling bells, tooting horns, popping crackers and banging guns.

The boys entered into the spirit of it, and became as excited and happy as if nothing had occurred to mar their pleasure. Fred forgot his pain and laughed and shouted as heartily as any of them.

"What's become of your cannon?" asked Blacksmith Pelton as the party approached the parsonage.

"Here it is," responded Joe, as he ran the wagon wheels up to the door.

"Bang!" shouted Fred, leaping off and running into the house.

At family prayers that morning it was quite doubtful whether Dominie Jones was more fervent in his petitions for his native land, or in his thanksgivings for the harmless escape of his dear boy, Fred. But, at all events, there was the greatest Fourth of July celebration on record that day at the Jones parsonage.—Golden Days.

STAR-SPANGLED BANNER.

O say, can you see by the dawn's early light
What so proudly we hailed at the twilight's last gleaming?—
Whose broad stripes and bright stars, through the perilous fight
O'er the ramparts we watched, were so gallantly streaming!
And the rocket's red glare, the bombs bursting in air,
Gave proof through the night that our flag was still there;
O say, does that star-spangled banner yet wave
O'er the land of the free and the home of the brave?

On that shore dimly seen through the mists of the deep,
Where the foe's haughty host in dread silence repose,
What is that which the breeze, o'er the towering steep,
As it fitfully blows, now conceals, now discloses?
Now it catches the gleam of the morning's first beam,
In full glory reflected, now shines on the stream;
'Tis the star-spangled banner! O, long may it wave
O'er the land of the free and the home of the brave!

O, thus be it ever when freemen shall stand
Between their loved homes and the war's desolation!
Blest with victory and peace, may the heaven rescued land
Praise the power that hath made and preserved us a nation.
Then conquer we must, when our cause is just,
And this be our motto: "In God is our trust!"
And the star-spangled banner in triumph shall wave
O'er the land of the free and the home of the brave!

OLD GLORY'S BIRTHDAY.

The American flag will be 121 years old the fourteenth day of this month, and for 121 years it has been a constant and unfailing source of livelihood to thousands of men and women who work from year's beginning to year's beginning upon the making of the flag.

There are forty flag factories in the United States, scattered through the country, but for the most part located in New England, where the great manufacturing businesses lie. One of the largest is at Lowell, and there Ben Butler turned out bunting for years for the flag. Bunting such as up to that time had never been seen. There was a patriotic look about every inch of the Ben Butler bunting, and, though now you can find a great deal of the same color and weight and just as good in the days when Ben Butler started his flag factory there were very few flags that looked like flags at all, unless they came from there. At this time of the year all the flag factories are in full blast. They are never very idle, for the American public uses up 3,000,000 flags every year, enough to cover all the flag factories working all the time.

THE FIRST FLAG

The first big demand for the American flag comes on Flag day, when all the public buildings have new flags, and when the school children carry them to celebrate their new holiday and patriotic citizens hang out their new flag to celebrate the day. Next comes the Fourth of July, which is proverbially a day of the waving of flags, and by the time flag day and the Fourth are over the stores will be very few of the new flags left.

The life of an American flag is a short one. In other countries they buy a flag to last; they take care of it; take it down when it rains, do not let the sun shine upon it, and treat it as though it were a thing rich and rare. But the Americans do not treat their flags in this way; the public buildings fling them from the flag posts and leave them there; they are weatherbeaten; then they are taken down, thrown away, and a new flag put up.

The commonest flag, that which you see in public most upon the largest buildings, is the woven flag. It is made of cotton bunting, upon a loom that is built especially for flags. The colors are supplied to the loom in regular order, and the machinery takes and distributes them so that when a certain number of inches have been woven you see coming out of the loom a completed flag.

There is another kind of flag which is more expensive than this, though not so good for all purposes. This is the sewed flag. It is made out of strips of silk or bunting. Bunting flags are sewn together strip by strip, and fastened to the pole; the blue field is pleasure. Fred forgot his pain and laughed and shouted as heartily as any of them.

"What's become of your cannon?" asked Blacksmith Pelton as the party approached the parsonage.

"Here it is," responded Joe, as he ran the wagon wheels up to the door.

"Bang!" shouted Fred, leaping off and running into the house.

At family prayers that morning it was quite doubtful whether Dominie Jones was more fervent in his petitions for his native land, or in his thanksgivings for the harmless escape of his dear boy, Fred. But, at all events, there was the greatest Fourth of July celebration on record that day at the Jones parsonage.—Golden Days.

spread a flag over the top of their belongings, so that the custom-house people can see it as soon as the cover of the trunk is lifted.

When a state is admitted to the Union it means a great deal of extra for the flag factories, as the entire star design must be changed. This is done by law on the following Fourth of July. When Utah became a state there was a great deal of trouble in adding the forty-fifth star. Secretary Lamont appointed Lieutenant Rockwell of Philadelphia to place the extra star, and he made room for it in the fourth row from the top upon the right of the existing stars. At the same time the regulation size of the army flag was made smaller. It is now five and a half feet long and four feet four inches wide. The old army flags were too big; they hung spiritless around the pole instead of flying proudly to the breeze, as a small flag would. The stripes are now four inches wide and the rows of stars four and a half inches apart. The staff of the regular flag is nine feet long.

The first American flag is made laboriously by hand, by Mrs. Betty Ross, an upholsterer who lived on Arch street, near Third, Philadelphia. She had done work for Lady Washington, and when George Washington wanted a flag he took his design to her and left it. When he visited her a week later she brought out from her little cupboard a sample flag, and, holding it up before him, said: "I have executed your order, sir, does it please you?" The General made a few changes in it until it became the American flag as you now know it, with the thirteen original stars and stripes.

The American flag has never been changed, although other countries have changed freely. General Washington said: "This flag of the thirteen United States shall be thirteen stripes, alternate red and white, with the union of thirteen stars, white, in a field of blue, to represent a new constellation; and it shall endure forever, a new heaven floating between God's old earth and the bright blue sky"—a prediction that stands a chance of fulfilment.

England's Saucy Child.

During the progress of the queen's jubilee the princes, officers and premiers attracted, next to the royal lady herself, the attention of the public. Wherever they appeared they were received with cheers and special honors.

On one occasion the streets were packed with spectators watching the guests depart from some royal function at Buckingham palace. The crowd refused to move except when some of the Indian rajahs or Australian officers appeared, when a way was speedily opened for them.

A carriage presently came out of the gates in which were three or four Americans, who had been guests in the palace. Finding that the way was completely blocked, one young fellow among them shouted:

"Let us pass! We, too, are colonials!"

The crowd divided, and as the carriage entered the opening he added:

"We are the colonials who wouldn't let our mother govern us."

The crowd caught the joke and replied with laughter and applause.—Youth's Companion.

CLAY'S FEAR FOR CUBA.

Appealed for a Navy to Protect Our Commerce from England's Rapacity.

As long ago as 1812 Henry Clay, in a speech delivered in the House of Representatives, expressed a fear as to the future possession of Cuba which has never been entirely absent until now, when Cuban independence is reasonably assured. In an eloquent argument in favor of an increase of the navy, Mr. Clay said, on January 22, 1812:

"Whether the ancient dynasty of Spain is to be upheld or subverted, it is certainly uncertain if the bonds connecting the parent country with her colonies are not forever broken. What is to become of Cuba? Will it assert independence, or remain the province of some European power? In either case the whole trade of the western country, which must pass almost within gunshot of Morro Castle, is exposed to danger. I am not, however, afraid of Cuba. I wish her to be independent. But suppose England gets possession of that valuable island? With Cuba on the south and Halifax on the north, who of the most sanguine among us would not tremble for our commerce and for the integrity of the Union?

"If, along with Cuba, Great Britain should acquire East Florida, she would have the absolute command of the Gulf of Mexico. Can you gentlemen contemplate such possible, nay, probable, events, without desiring to see at least the commencement of such a naval establishment as would effectually protect our southern coast?"

Mr. Clay's fears were not without good reason, for in 1762 an English fleet under Lord Albermarle had captured Havana and invested Cuba, exchanging it the following year for Florida. In 1783 Great Britain ceded Florida back to Spain. Even while Mr. Clay was speaking a body of "patriots" were organizing to capture Florida and organize a republic. Later the United States intervened and under General Jackson wrested Florida from Spain in 1819 and made it a territory.

Clay's appeal for a new navy, however, was effective. By a vote of 52 to 50 the motion to strike out the naval appropriation was defeated and the navy was fitted out with dispatch. The naval victories won by our navy during the war with Great Britain within the next two years indicated the good judgment of the "Great Commoner," and covered the nation with glory.—New York Mail and Express.

A Stigma on George.

THE MUTILATED EAR.

It was getting toward nine o'clock when my attention was attracted to a pretty little girl who was tripping across Regent Street. Just as she reached the curb she slipped upon a patch of ice and fell heavily. It took me about half a second to reach the little woman and pick her up. She was shaken by the fall, though not injured, and I had to support her for a moment.

I had tramped up and down my beat three or four times when a bareheaded cashboy ran out of one of the big shops and yelled at me,—

"Come quick! The manager has caught a shoplifter!"

"Ah, officer," said the manager, who was a mere business machine, "I am glad you have come. One of our clerks at the lace counter discovered that a valuable piece of lace had been stolen and gave the alarm. This woman hurried away from the counter. The lace was found in an outside pocket of her cloak. This is the piece on the desk here."

There was a sudden movement on the part of the woman. She snatched her handkerchief from her face, extended her right arm and finger, which shook with rage, and, turning her blazing eyes upon the business machine, she fairly screamed,—

"'Tis false! I am no thief!"

She was the black-eyed little girl that I had picked up scarcely half an hour before.

Then she told me her little story. She was an orphan and had been brought up by an old aunt in Yorkshire. About six months before this her aunt had died, and she came on to the city and turned her hand to lace-making and had been able to support herself decently since then.

She said that she had stepped into the shop to make some small purchases and was arrested when walking away. She protested that she did not know how the lace came, to be found in her pocket.

I explained the case to the sergeant at the station and got his permission for her to sit in a chair in the office instead of occupying a cell all night.

Somehow I couldn't get the sorrowful look of those black eyes out of my mind, and I couldn't sleep, and when daylight came time hung on my hands until court time came. I walked around thinking over the case, trying to arrive at some solution favorable to the girl.

Of course when we got to court Minnie—that was her name—was convicted in one, two, three order. She was no experiment—just stood dazed like—and the judge held her for trial in the court above.

As they led the girl away she was the picture of death. I gave her a nod of encouragement, but she returned it with a look that said just as plainly as words could have said,—

"My heart is broken."

I had questioned her closely as to the appearance of the people who had stood near her at the lace counter. She could remember none save one flashily dressed woman who had attracted her attention because of a remarkable mutilation of one of her ears, as if a piece had been cut out in a triangular form.

I granted the superintendent to grant me leave of absence for a couple of days and went to work. I overhauled the pictures at the office and gazed hard and earnestly at the features of every female "crook" in the "rogues' gallery," but I could not find the one I was after.

At last I fell to reading the remarks under the picture of a bold, handsome face and was knocked all into a cocked hat by the words:

"Has a triangular piece cut out of the left ear."

I had a long talk with a detective friend of mine, and after awhile he was able to place the woman and told me where she most frequented.

All that day and nearly all the next I was on the lookout for that lady and was despairing when a big, handsome woman swept into the store all breathing against me with her sealskin cloak.

I glanced up and fairly started, for one of her ears was mutilated just as the girl and the note in the office had described.

The woman swept on, and I followed. She entered the very shop where I had arrested Minnie and went up to the very counter where the lace was stolen and began examining the stock. And then, selecting a trifle, she paid for it and turned to go.

I was in a quandary. But I was determined to make an effort and run the risk of making a serious mistake. Stepping up to her I touched her shoulder and whispered,—

"Come with me. I want you a moment," at the same time looking straight into her eyes.

Every drop of blood left the woman's face. She fairly trembled for an instant, and then she looked back defiantly and went with me.

We had moved but a step or two in the direction of the bookkkeeper's den, where the girl had been searched three days before, when something struck my feet. I stooped and picked up a bundle of lace. The woman had dropped it. I was right. I had found my thief.

Seeing that she was caught, the shop-lifter owned up that she had stolen the piece of lace. When accused of the other theft for which I wanted her, she confessed to that too.

My, but wasn't that a grateful little woman! She just ran and placed her arms around my neck and kissed me. I was kind of taken back, for, although I rather enjoy kissing, I don't like too many witnesses.

I married her two weeks afterward, and the business machine gave her a two hundred and fifty dollar outfit and was glad to get out of the awkward fix in that price.

CASS FOR PRESIDENT.

HALF CENTURY SINCE HIS NOMINATION FOR THAT OFFICE.

He Was One of Those Great Americans Whose Fate It Was to be First in the Day in the Hearts and Esteem of Their Countrymen, Yet Missed the Presidency.

The fiftieth anniversary of the nomination of Lewis Cass to the Presidency reminds us of when annexation was an issue in American politics. General Cass was one of those great Americans whose fate it was to be first in their day in the hearts and esteem of their countrymen and yet who were never destined to reach the Presidency. He was a candidate in 1844 for the Presidential nomination which fell to James K. Polk; again when the annexation of Texas was the issue and once more in 1852 while representing Michigan in the United States Senate.

The northwest is said to be the foster child of the republic, and if so, General Lewis Cass was its putative father. A great portion of his life was devoted to introducing settlers, popular government, modern habits of life and legal methods of procedure into the nve deserves an abiding place in the history of American statesmen.

Politically considered Cass like Henry Clay and James G. Blaine was from the standpoint of the statesman better qualified by experience and attainments for the executive office than any American citing this immense region in states north of the Ohio River. In man of his day. He was also the man for whom the people would doubtless have voted if the choice had been theirs, but he was apparently too timid, too fine-grained and too scholarly a man to find favor with the caucus and the ring. He was a jurist and pleader of national reputation, a soldier who had seen service in the war with England under General Hull, an administrator of affairs first as Governor of Michigan and later as Secretary of War and finally as Minister to France. As a statesman whom Lord Brougham thought it necessary to cross swords with Cass in his day and arbitration an extended career proved to be a prudent cautious legislator who could have brought ripe experience and rare attainments to the Presidency, had he been elected in 1848.

The defeat of Cass and the election of Taylor are principally interesting as leading to the annexation of the territory and the desire of the people for expansion and for a foreign policy different to that of the whimpering whigs, was the chief cause which told in the National Democratic Convention. It was a man of argument and of peace. Taylor was rather a man of action than of argument who favored the Texas war and who despised these nebulous nicelies and ethical principles which are usually the stock in trade of the peace at any price party. Cass had negotiated no fewer than twenty-two treaties through which were secured the cession to the United States by the various Indian tribes what is now the great northwest. Taylor had led the Texas campaign and had brought into the Union but in the opposite direction, viz., the Southwest, a country as large as France. Southern interests were then predominant and though Cass was the plumed knight par excellence from the circumstance that he had made effective reply to Lord Brougham in the Senate, and had resisted the English right to search American vessels, nevertheless General Taylor's policy won the day and he was elected. The first attempt of Cass to reach the Presidency he was not an active candidate. His name had been put forward by his friends, and everywhere throughout the Union there was a general acquiescence as to his fitness. Polk had spoken for the convention. Cass then took the stump vigorously for him throughout the canvass. In the following January Cass was elected to the Senate. But previous to the second attempt Mr. Cass made no secret of his Presidential intentions in order to fit himself for the campaign he resigned as Senator for Michigan to thus meet his fate a second time. He was then 66 years of age and had accumulated a large private fortune. Cass was then probably the richest man in the Union and was for an American attracted unusual attention in Paris by the sumptuous nature of his living, and by his social entertainments. Seeing the failure of his earlier attempt, and how by following the weak Democratic foreign policy of the Whigs he had been superceded by a dark horse like Polk on the previous occasion, Cass now made himself the special champion of the famous "Fifty-four, forty or fight!" demand which Democratic thus a mere politician he tickled the hearts and aroused the highest patriotism of the people throughout the homes of the northwest. He had early seen the importance of Americans possessing Canada, and in December, 1845, Senator Cass had introduced a resolution similar to that of Senator Chandler's in October, 1898, holding up the spectre of war, and insisting that nothing but concessions or sensible precautions could prevent armed collision with Great Britain. From henceforth he was the leader of the "fifty-four fifties" or the lingoes as they would now be called. Accordingly in the campaign of 1848 Cass became the hot favorite of the Democratic party. But being more of was defeated, the question of "Squatter Sovereignty," and incidentally the hostility of British interests having contributed to the confusion or disruption of the Cass contingent. These were "Barnburners" and "Free Soilers" and "Cotton Whigs" and "Conscience Whigs" and "Henekers" and regular "Democrats" and "Roundheads," while the great central facts stood out against Cass that he had wabbled with Webster on the doctrine of annexation in 1844 and that he had flirted with the question of State's rights, but above all was Van Buren's opposition.

It was the often-expressed opinion of William H. Seward that Van Buren never committed but one fatal error in politics, and that was when, nursing resentment at his failure to secure the nomination in 1844, he permitted a wing of his party to nominate him as a Napoleon candidate in 1848, thereby retailing just what he had intended to be entailed, the defeat of the Democratic candidate.

General Cass was never greater than in the hour of his defeat by General Taylor in 1848. He looked upon himself merely as the representative of his party, and took his defeat with perfect composure and without resentment. It was the party which was defeated, and not Cass, the man, in his opinion, and the simple dignity with which, after having served for a time in the Cabinet of Buchanan, he retired from public life to his home in Michigan, was a beautiful indication of the man's real greatness.

In the Senate, however, he wielded a powerful influence, and with Henry Clay opposed the claims of the southern states to such an extent that Cass will always be considered one of those great Americans who built up this nation and who furthered policies calculated to strengthen it in the North and to free it from the cause of slavery in the South.

Webster, Clay and Cass are a trio of American statesmen who graced the Senate at the time of the Secretary of State and who even if none of them ever attained to the Presidency, worthily maintained the traditions of this country a generation ago. He was not a Washington in National significance, nor a Lincoln in Administration, nor a Grant in arms, but he was a true American who stood up against Lord Brougham and Clarendon for the rights of his country. He was a man of sound judgment. Physically he had a large figure, with massive head, firm mouth, and features that bespoke earnestness, animation, Americanism and personal and political integrity.

The career of Cass is the more appropriate study just now because some of the difficulties he confronted and some of the policies he advocated may become of live interest as a result of the present war.

Some Notes of Interest.

It is a curious fact that the honeybee was never known in the United States till imported from England.

Prof. Reginald A. Fessenden of the Western University of Pennsylvania has just completed a portable X-ray apparatus for use by the surgeons in the field during the war. The apparatus is as large as an unabridged dictionary and will weigh about twenty-five pounds. It is to be operated by a gas-motor of like weight, and the generator will be one of the smallest ever employed in practical work. The apparatus will supply X-rays of sufficient quantity and intensity to enable the surgeons to see through the body, and should prove a valuable adjunct to the equipment of the field hospitals.

A few facts regarding the Whitehead torpedo may be of interest at the present time. This instrument carries 220 pounds of wet gun-cotton and is always ready for service 1,160 pounds. Its maximum length is 16 feet 5 inches, and its greatest diameter is 17.7 inches. At a speed of 28 knots per hour it has a range of about 850 yards. The torpedo is driven by a motor of such great pressure of 1,350 pounds per square inch, which operates a three-stage engine.

As a result of experiments by chemists and engineers of the British Admiralty, it has been decided to supply all ships equipped with water-tube boilers with delicate hydrometers and nitrate of silver solution for the detection of the presence of salt in the feed-circuits. The presence of salt in the water-tube boilers has long been a cause of much annoyance to naval engineers, and it is hoped that by frequently testing the density and presence of salt in the water, produced by evaporation, or found in the main condenser, it will be possible to keep boilers and fittings in proper condition.

No Simply Divorce.

There is a man-cook in London who is said to make an income of over $10,000 a year. He is not attached to any one hotel or household, but goes from house to house during the London season. Early in the evening he sets out in his own home in his brougham and drives to the house of some rich person who is giving a dinner-party. Arrived there he goes at once to the kitchen and tastes every one of the dishes that are to appear on the table, proceeds with the utmost care to be put into this entree, a pinch of herbs here, a dash of salt there, and when everything suits his palate, he pockets his fee of five guineas and drives away to the house of another dinner-party giver, where he goes through the same process with the dishes there. He visits many houses each night, and in some instances has carefully arranged the dinner beforehand, merely looking in at the last moment to see that his instructions have been properly carried out.

He Didn't Get Wet.

A Scotchman was once advised to take shower baths. A friend explained to him how to fit up one by the use of a cistern and colander, and Sandy accordingly set to work and had the thing done at once. Subsequently he was met by the friend who had given him the advice, and he asked how he enjoyed the bath. "Man," said he, "it was fine! I liked it rale weel, and kept mysel' quite dry, too." Being asked how he managed to take the shower and yet remain quite dry, he replied: "Deed, ye ninna, surely, think I was sae daft as stand below the water without an umbrella!"

Napoleon and the Plough.

A certain incident connected with the great Napoleon while he was in exile at Elba is commemorated in the island, to this hour, by an inscription affixed to the wall of a peasant's house.

A man named Giaconi was ploughing when the famous exile came along one day, and expressed an interest in his work. Napoleon even took the ploughshare out of the man's hand, and attempted to guide it himself. But the hands of a peasant, and himself tried to plough, but the oxen, rebellious to those hands which yet had guided Europe, headlong fled from the furrow."

The inscription runs thus:—

"Napoleon the Great, passing by this place in MDCCCXIV, took in the neighboring field a ploughshare from the hands of a peasant, and himself tried to plough, but the oxen, rebellious to those hands which yet had guided Europe, headlong fled from the furrow."

Self Made Men of Other Days.

The self-made man is by no means solely the product of modern times. Columbus was a weaver, Franklin was a journeyman printer, Pope Sixtus V. was employed in his young days in keeping swine, Robert Burns was a ploughman, Arkwright was a slave, Homer was a beggar, Daniel Defoe was apprenticed to a hosier, Demosthenes was the son of a cutler, while Virgil was a baker's son. Ben Jonson was a bricklayer, Cervantes was a common soldier, Canova's father was a stonecutter, Captain Cook commenced life as a cabin boy, Haydn, the musician, was the son of a poor wheelwright, Pizarro, instead of going to school, was sent to keep hogs. Kirke White's father was a butcher, and Keat's father kept a livery stable.

She Won.

"Mary," said Mr. Thomas when a silence fraught with unpleasant meaning had settled his first altercation with his young wife.

"Yes?" said Mary, interrogatively.

"When a man and his wife have had a—a difference," said Mr. Thomas, with a judicial air, "and each considers the other at fault, which of the two do you think should make the first advance toward reconciliation?"

"The wiser of the two," said Mrs. Thomas, promptly, "and so, my dear, I'll say at once that I am very sorry."

It occurred to Mr. Thomas that it might have been as well for him to make the first advance, after all, but he thoughtfully refrained from saying so.

For Cool Summer Days.

A handy little garment for cool summer days or evenings is made of cadet blue covert cloth lined with plaid silk. The pointed yoke is of embroidered cloth and is made with a rolling collar.

Dainty wraps of every variety are shown for the summer. Some of them are little more than two or three shaped ruffles, trimmed with bouillonnes and dainty ruchings, while others are in the form of a cape pattern, long in back and short in front and these form handsome garments.

War Tax on Club Women.

The question of imposing a war tax on the club-women of the country is one that has been discussed with great interest in club circles. Undoubtedly the result of such a tax would be a very important sum, as the number of club-women in the United States is close to it not over half a million. While waiting to be taxed, however, the club-women of the country both in and out of patriotic societies are showing great zeal in their services in behalf of the country's defenders.
